PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 91ST CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, April 13, 1970

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Eugene V. Stime, president, Lutheran Biblical Institute, Seattle, Wash., offered the following prayer:

Lord of Hosts and Creator of the world, we cannot understand how You can bother with puny man. And yet You have put him in charge of everything You have made.

Facing this delegated responsibility, we pray that Your eternal purposes may be known to those who face major decisions; that Your gracious will may be understood by those who set guidelines for human conduct; that Your loving spirit may be revealed to those who mold public opinion; and that Your highest ideals may be digested by those who write what other people read.

O God, may their thinking be keen, their speech frank and their actions decisive. In the name of the Christ who taught us to pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, April 9, 1970, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Leonard, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Arrington, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 8654. An act to provide that, for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, individuals who were illegally detained during 1968 by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea shall be treated as serving in a combat zone; and

H.R. 15349. An act to amend the Railway Labor Act in order to change the number of carrier representatives and labor organization representatives on the National Railroad Adjustment Board, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 12605. An act to amend section 613 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

CXVI—710—Part 9

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate (S. 3690) entitled "An act to increase the pay of Federal employees," with amendments in which concurrence of the House is requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3430. An act to amend the Peace Corps Act to authorize additional appropriations and for other purposes.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES SALARY INCREASES

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 3690) to increase the pay of Federal employees, with Senate amendments to the House amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments to the House amendment, as follows:

Page 3, line 10, of the House engrossed amendment, strike out "this section" and insert "section 2 of this Act".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman from Arizona would enlighten the House as to whether the press reports about this error are correct. Does this error deal with the 6-percent pay raise for congressional legislative employees?

Mr. UDALL. Well, there is considerable confusion, if the gentleman will yield, in the press about the technical amendments.

As I understand the amendments, this is not the case.

At first, it appeared that the House employees would be shut out of the increases because of a technical amendment. However, on further reflection and examination, this would not be the case.

Mr. JACOBS. Will the Members of the House have an opportunity to peruse this language in writing themselves before being asked to vote on these amendments? I notice they are not printed, and they are not at the tables.

Mr. UDALL. I have copies available for the gentleman. I was going to make a rather complete explanation of the amendments. But the matter pending before the House is my request for unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendments, and then it would clear it for the White House.

Mr. JACOBS. If it is a unanimous-consent request to agree to the Senate amendments, I would be constrained to object without further information as to precisely what these amendments are, or an opportunity to peruse them myself and determine whether, in fact, they do affect the congressional staff employees.

I do not believe Capitol Hill congressional staff people should catch a pay raise on the misery of the postmen in this country with this bill. Would the gentleman interpret this amendment as helping these staff people toward a pay raise?

Mr. UDALL. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will make a very brief interpretation.

Mr. JACOBS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UDALL. I have a copy of the bill, and if the gentleman will follow me, on the bill, H.R. 16844, which was the basis of the original House action, the first amendment is in line 21 on page 2, which simply changes the preposition "in", it says "(1) in" and the correct language should have been "in (1)".

That is a purely technical and purely an improper placement of the preposition and does not change the language or the intent any way.

The second one is on page 3, line 10, and there the words in question are "this section". The proper reference should have been "section 2". This section was section 3 and the proper reference should have been "section 2".

Mr. JACOBS. What would happen to the bill as a consequence of this misreference? What is the effect of this misreference, if I may ask the gentleman?

Mr. UDALL. The operative language of the actual increase is to provide as to section 2 rather than to section 3. So this is simply an improper reference and goes to all of the pay increases.

Mr. JACOBS. Is the gentleman prepared to say that this particular error does not result in deleting the pay raise for congressional staff employees?

Mr. UDALL. There is a question of interpretation which the staff and some of the lawyers have struggled over the weekend and you can argue, I am told, as to an interpretation which would exclude the employees of the legislative branch from any pay raise.

On the other hand, some of the best advice I have had is that it would not be so interpreted.

Mr. JACOBS. With all due respect to my colleague, the gentleman from Arizona, for whom I have the profoundest regard, I object because of the possibility that this amendment would in effect give an unwarranted pay raise for congressional employees when the need is borne by the postmen.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES SALARY INCREASES

EXPLANATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS TO HOUSE AMENDMENTS TO S. 3690

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, the first Senate amendment corrects the placement of the preposition "in" as it appeared in S. 3690 as first passed by the Senate, which was not corrected in the House amendment.

The second Senate amendment corrects a section reference in the House amendment. The amendment incorrectly refers to adjustments under "this section"—section 3—whereas it should refer to "section 2."

The third Senate amendment represents a decision by that body that the pay raises for Senate employees be made by the President pro tempore of the Senate, instead of by the Comptroller of the Senate as provided in the House amendment.

The comparative House procedure is outlined on page 3 of the bill, and provides that the House officer who will adjust pay of legislative employees, is the "Finance Clerk of the House of Representatives."

Actually, the word "Finance" is not needed and should eventually be eliminated from the basic law. It was the committee's intent to refer to the principal fiscal officer of the House, who is really the Clerk of the House.

Thus, it will be the Clerk who adjusts and pays the House employees.

The fourth Senate amendment also corrects an inadvertent omission in the bill as first passed by the Senate which was not corrected by the House amendment. Both the House and Senate versions provide, in effect, that no employee have his salary increased under this bill to an amount in excess of the salary rate for executive level V—$36,000. In another section of the bill, however, the Senate version increased the salaries of a number of District of Columbia judges to amounts in excess of $36,000. The House amendment eliminated all except one of such higher salaries—the salary of the chief judge of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, which is fixed at $36,500. The fourth Senate amendment provides an exception from the $36,000 limitation for the chief judge.

(Mr. UDALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON NATIONAL PARKS AND RECREATION TO SIT DURING GENERAL DEBATE TODAY

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on National Parks and Recreation be allowed to sit during general debate this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ATTORNEY GENERAL WRONGFULLY BLAMED FOR DEFEAT OF SUPREME COURT NOMINATIONS

(Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, wire service reports this morning indicated that Life magazine has called for the resignation of Attorney General John N. Mitchell who, they said, was responsible for the two defeats of the President's Supreme Court nominations.

Not only is the assertion false, since the blame for the defeats of Judges Clement Haynsworth and Harrold Carswell lie squarely on the shoulders of the Senate, but Mr. Mitchell has led the much-needed vanguard in the fight against crime and criminal disorder in our society that was allowed to run rampant during the last decade.

The Attorney General has initiated a massive assault on organized crime which has reached unprecedented proportions. He has led the fight for stricter laws that will end the permissiveness that has seen complete disregard for law and authority in this country. Moreover, he has personally shown a strong attitude toward criminals that has set an example to others in the law-enforcement field.

Rather than removed from office, Mr. Mitchell should be congratulated and urged to continue his fine work. Hopefully this body will provide him with some help in the fight on crime. Both this body and the other body have been greatly lax in facing their obligations in this area. Maybe Life magazine is pointing its editorial finger in the wrong direction.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT RATE RISES ONCE AGAIN

(Mr. BARRETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, once again the Nation's unemployment rate has risen. The March unemployment figures show that 4.4 percent of the total labor force was out of work. After a little more than a year of this Republican administration, approximately 1 million more workers are out of work as of March 1970 than were out of work in March 1969. This once again proves that the laborer is nothing but a pawn in the hands of the administration's economic policymakers. The so-called silent majority must bear the burden of unemployment in order to successfully wage the administration's fight against inflation.

Earlier this year the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Dr. Arthur Burns, and the Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Dr. Paul McCracken, told the Committee on Banking and Currency that they estimated the unemployment rate for the coming year would not exceed 4.3 percent. Already the unemployment rate has exceeded their expectations. The most pessimistic aspect of the newly released unemployment figures was that the unemployment has been heavily concentrated among adult men and women. When full-time employed workers are being laid off in great numbers, the time has come to recognize that the rise in the unemployment rate is a very serious situation. Also, the figures tell us that both white collar workers as well as blue collar workers have been hit very hard by unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, again we see the Republican administration employing the same tired old tactics to deal with a troubled economy allowing big business to benefit by higher and higher prices charged to the consumer, but doing nothing to help the unemployed worker.

REPORT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL ON MARINE RESOURCES AND ENGINEERING DEVELOPMENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 91-304)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

The fact that the United States is first in space is well known; it is less well known that we are also first in oceanic science and technology. And while most of our citizens recognize the opportunities which lie before us in space, fewer understand the enormous benefits which can flow from our national marine activities.

During 1969, the National Council on Marine Resources and Engineering Development, chaired by the Vice President, identified a number of policies and programs concerning the sea which, in their judgment, deserve Federal support. I am today transmitting to the Congress the Council's annual report, "Marine Science Affairs—Selecting Priority Programs." The marine science programs which I have approved for Fiscal Year 1971 are based in part on the Council's recommendations.

My budget request for Fiscal Year 1971 provides $533.1 million for marine science and technology activities. These funds would help us to improve the management of our coastal zone, expand Arctic research, develop a program for restoring damaged lakes, expand the collection of data concerning ocean and weather conditions, reduce merchant ship operating costs, and undertake other important projects. The funds would also support U.S. participation in the International Decade of Ocean Exploration, a program which can contribute much to the quality of the marine environment and to the pursuit of world peace.

In November of 1969, this Administration sent to the Congress a comprehensive proposal for protecting and developing the land and water resources of the nation's estuarine and coastal zone. I hope that the Congress will give this program early and careful attention.

The Federal government will continue to provide leadership in the nation's marine science program. But it is also important that private industry, State and local governments, academic, scientific and other institutions increase their own involvement in this important field. The public and private sectors of our society must work closely together if we are to meet the great challenges which are presented to us by the oceans of our planet.

RICHARD NIXON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1970.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE MRS. MARJORIE COWDEN TEAGUE

(Mr. SMITH of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, a further sadness has struck the California delegation in that this morning Mrs. Marjorie Cowden Teague, the wife of Congressman CHARLES M. TEAGUE of the 13th District of California, passed away in Ventura, Calif.

There will be no services other than memorial services for the Members and their families in Ojai, Calif.

Congressman TEAGUE has asked that in lieu of flowers any donations be sent to the Visiting Nurse Association of Ventura County, 4900 Telegraph Road, Ventura, Calif. 93003.

Mr. Speaker, Marjorie leaves CHARLES and leaves her mother, two sisters, two daughters, and a son and some grandchildren. She was a wonderful lady. We in the California delegation all loved her.

On your behalf, Mr. Speaker, and on behalf of all the Members, I wish to extend our deep sympathy and condolence to Mr. TEAGUE and to all the members of his family.

THE FEDERAL INSURANCE GUARANTY BILL

(Mr. WIDNALL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WIDNALL. Mr. Speaker, on April

9, 1970, I introduced H.R. 16912 the administration's bill that establishes a Federal insurance guaranty program under the Federal Insurance Administrator within the Department of Housing and Urban Development. It would protect the American public against losses resulting from the insolvency of insurance companies by speedily paying unpaid consumers' claims. Although insurance insolvency affects only a relatively small number of American policyholders and claimants, its impact on these consumers is substantial and requires corrective action.

This bill protects the American public against insurance insolvencies for which they are not compensated under State law, at the same time that it recognizes the continued efforts by State authorities both to improve their regulation to prevent insolvencies and to establish on the State level procedures for compensating the victims of any insolvencies which do occur.

The low number of insolvencies is attributable to the effectiveness of State insurance departments and the long established system of State regulation of insurance. Any Federal Government solution to the residual insolvency problem should not supplant this system of State regulation where it is effective, but should be operative only in those States which do not adequately protect their consumers against the results of insolvencies.

This bill makes funds available if, and only if, a State fails to provide for the reasonable compensation of its policyholders and claimants after the insolvency of any property or casualty insurer licensed in that State. If a fund or other mechanism for compensating the consumer for losses resulting from insolvency is in existence in a State, the protection provided by this bill will be unnecessary and will not apply in that State.

Recognizing that the ultimate responsibility for preventing the insolvency of an insurance company must rest with the State supervisory authority and the insurance system in each company's State of domicile, this bill operates entirely within the framework of the existing system of State regulation of insurance. It does not attempt to duplicate the existing functions of State regulation of insurance as other approaches would do. Nor does it establish a new and expensive agency or corporation under unrealistic guidelines as to size and expense. Both bureaucracy and costs are kept to a minimum, because it will be administered by the Federal Insurance Administration already established and operating within the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The ultimate cost to the Federal Government resulting from the insolvency of an insurer will be borne not by the Federal Government itself nor by the general taxpayer throughout the United States, but by the insurance companies in the State where responsibility for the insolvency rests.

This bill is an appropriate response to the problem of insurer insolvency. It does not overreact or disrupt the existing system of State regulation of insurance, but it does promptly and fully protect the consumer at a minimum of cost.

TREASURY, POST OFFICE, AND EXECUTIVE OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS, 1971

Mr. STEED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 16900) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue not to exceed 2 hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York (Mr. ROBINSON) and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DEVINE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

TREASURY, POST OFFICE, AND EXECUTIVE OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS, 1971

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 16900, with Mr. MONAGAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. STEED) will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. ROBISON) will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, it is a real pleasure to be able to come here again with the first appropriation bill of the session, as we are doing today. This has been made possible because the members of the subcommittee and the staff have given us their best and fullest cooperation, and we have been able to expedite this important piece of work.

The bill we bring in today provides funding for the Treasury Department, the Post Office Department, the Executive Office of the President and some independent agencies, and calls for a total new obligational authority of $9,492,702,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. STEED. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MAHON. I should like to point out that very frequently in the past—almost without exception, or perhaps without exception—the gentleman from Oklahoma has brought in the first regular appropriation bill of the session. He and the members of his subcommittee, Mr. PASSMAN, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. COHELAN, Mr. ROBISON, the new ranking minority member, Mr. CONTE, and Mr. EDWARDS, and the members of the staff are entitled to a vote of thanks for bringing this bill before the House today.

Last year the revised budget was not submitted by the President until April 15. This is April 13 and we expect to pass the gentleman's bill today.

In checking the statistics, I find that the House passed the Post Office and Treasury bill on May 27 of last year. It was signed into law by the President on September 29. So it is very encouraging to note the progress which has been made in this direction. I know we all hope this will be a good omen with respect to processing the other 12 regular annual appropriation bills which will be before the Congress at this session.

I might also say that the legislative appropriation bill, which is due for consideration this afternoon, passed the House last September 19. This year we expect to pass it today, which shows again that progress is being made in the appropriations process this year.

The Labor-HEW bill, including the education portion, did not pass the House until July 31 of last year, whereas the educational portion is scheduled to be considered by the House tomorrow.

So I think that the gentleman from Oklahoma and his subcommittee are entitled to congratulations and commendations upon the occasion of the presentation of this bill to the House today. The gentleman from Oklahoma is doing a good job.

Mr. STEED. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, the bill today providing the funding of these agencies for fiscal year 1971 calls for a total of $9,492,702,000, which represents a gross increase of $331,899,000 over the total proposed authority for fiscal year 1970 after allowing for a pending supplemental request in House Document 91-272 of $363,023,000. With additional pay bills in the mill these figures will change before the final record is written, but as of now we are talking about a gross increase of nearly $332 million over the previous year. Most of this increase can be accounted for in fairly uncontrollable types of items that these agencies covered in this bill are faced with. This bill deals with agencies that have high work forces, so over 80 percent of this money is used for paying salaries or wages and related costs. Therefore, as the workload of these agencies increases it is inevitable that the total amount of money they must have must also increase. There is an estimated increase of something over 2 billion pieces of mail. The Customs Service has been faced in the last few years and in this coming year with very heavy increases. The Internal Revenue Service has had heavy increases. And all along the line we find the agencies which carry out the missions for the Government over which they have no control need more manpower and more funds to carry out their work missions.

We have made a cut of $73,053,000 in the budget request before us. If approved, this cut will result in about the elimination of some $65 million from the expenditure budget, which is not a very large cut considering the size of the bill but was all that we thought we could wisely make in dealing with the peculiar types of agencies covered in this bill.

The budget requested some 21,800 additional employees. We have allowed them under this bill 19,500. Of course, we may have gone too far in making some of these cuts because of the workloads that the Internal Revenue Service as well as some other agencies are faced with. However, we are hoping that the agencies will be able to continue the same work level with the number of added employees for which we are making provision in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, in terms of the employment of people provided for in this bill

I think it might be of interest to the House to know the numbers involved. The approval of this bill will provide the Post Office Department with a total work force of 765,000; the Treasury Department with 89,500; and the Executive Office of the President and the independent agencies about 1,600, making the total employment of persons provided for in this bill 856,000 for fiscal year 1971.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to touch briefly upon the situation as we find it in some of the Treasury agencies. We are allowing additional funds for the Secret Service because Congress has imposed some new and very heavy duties upon that Service. They not only have to provide for the protection of additional people, including candidates during presidential elections, but they now have the new Executive Protective Service which will provide protection for the foreign embassies located here in Washington and elsewhere, if the occasion arises.

In addition, I think it is fair to point out that we are faced with new improved techniques in the graphic arts industry which has increased the amount of counterfeit money that is in circulation in the country which threatens the security of our currency.

Mr. Chairman, I have been real pleased with the effective manner in which the Secret Service has been able to stay on top of this problem. I believe this year already they have confiscated something like $14 million in bogus money and destroyed it before it ever got into circulation.

The Government is circulating about $485 million Federal checks, most of them being delivered through the mail. This has resulted in a continuing increase in thefts and forgeries of Government checks. Of course, this has placed another heavy workload upon the Secret Service because they have to be in position to get into these cases very quickly because of the criminal activities involved.

I think the fact that they have a conviction record of somewhere between 96 and 98 percent of the cases they handle shows they have been doing a very effective job in convincing the criminal element that the stealing and forging of Government checks is not a very profitable business.

A lot of people tend to forget about these duties and the very vital problems which they have to handle to protect the interests of the American people.

Of course, the Internal Revenue Service has a continuing problem because they are going to have to process about 110 million tax returns this year, of which about 74 million are returns of individuals. Of course, these require a lot of attention and handling. I think that in view of the many demands which are made upon them and in view of the manpower which they have in their auditing section, this represents a compliment to them in the fact that they have been able to keep the income tax record good but not as fine as we would like to have it.

We hope that this coming year with some new equipment, new computers and new techniques that they will be able to make an improvement in that area and keep us in good shape.

Mr. Chairman, I want to especially direct my remarks to what I think is a most important and critical situation that we now have in the Post Office Department. This is, of course, the largest amount of money contained in the bill and it currently represents one of the most severe problems in the country.

After working in this field for many years, I have become convinced that the growing problems of the Post Office Department are such that there will never be any suitable way to deal with them under the existing system. It is because of that that I am one of the strong advocates of these proposals now before the Congress which would change the operational structure of the Post Office Department sufficiently to give it some of the advantages of the corporate identity.

Because of the kinds of problems they have, it seems to me that the Post Office Department is crying out for this sort of treatment.

As it exists now, with the 86 billion pieces of mail a year that they have to collect, sort and deliver, to maintain the delivery to more than 56 million addresses in this country, and the need to maintain something like 31,000 post offices throughout the country, the present organization does not lend itself to a suitable result.

We find that about 70 percent of our mail problem in terms of pieces of mail, people and costs, are concentrated in the 300 largest cities of this Nation. The other 30 percent is scattered out in the 31,000 other post offices, and this presents a peculiar management problem so that I believe we are going to have to give the postal people better tools of management and control if we are ever going to get on top of the situation.

The Postmaster General has no power or control over the amount of mail he will be asked to deliver. He has no control over what he can pay the people he has to employ to process and deliver the mail. He has no control over what he can charge for the postal services. He has no control as to where the customers he is going to service locate themselves. He has virtually no control over the kind of workshop that he will do the work in, or what kind of equipment he will have to work with. He has very little control over the rates he has to pay the carriers to transport this mail throughout the thousands of miles of routes in this country.

So, with the big job he has to do, and with no more control over how to do it, I am beginning to feel that it is more remarkable that we have any mail service at all than that we have as some people say, poor mail service.

We have to face up to the fact that our present rate structure is just not adequate—I do not care what you use for a cost accounting system—you are finally going to come to the conclusion that there is no way on earth for this agency to even approach the break-even point with the volume of mail and the wages and all the other things that we are faced with today at the rates that we can charge.

Today, for a 6-cent stamp, you have the choice of 56 million addresses to which you can send a letter. This may not sound important to you, but to maintain this kind of a system is an expensive job, and yet if we do not have this kind of service our mail service would not be a mail service.

We have to face up to the fact that with the funds provided in this bill plus the pending pay raises that I am sure everybody assumes will be finalized, that before the 1971 fiscal year ends unless the rates are changed we are going to be faced with a nice, fat $2.5 billion postal deficit.

When you take into account that $803 million of this postal deficit is imposed upon the Department by act of Congress, and if you take out about $500 million in this bill that goes for public buildings and for plant and equipment which would be classified by private corporations as capital investment, and make allowance for depreciation, you still, if the pay raises now in the bill become law, are going to find about a $1.4 billion deficit staring the Post Office Department in the face at the end of the next fiscal year.

Now if this happens, and I see no way you can keep it from happening, one of two ways will be used to pay this deficit: it either will be met by the Congress in enacting new postal rates or it will be met by the taxes of the American people.

Since 70 percent of our mail is business mail and 65 percent of our taxes are paid by individuals, this means if we do not raise rates so that the users of the mail will be paying their share of this deficit, the individual taxpayer of the country will be making a very sizable contribution to subsidize the business institutions of this country.

So, whether you like it or not, you are either going to put the burden on those who use the mail, or it will remain on those who pay the taxes, the individual taxpayers of the country. There is no escaping one or the other.

I wish we could make a better report than to tell you that even with the billion dollar-plus cost of the mail services, which are not chargeable to the mail users, you are still going to have a hard cold deficit of $1,400 million that should be charged to mail users and if that charge is not passed on, then the average taxpayer of the country is going to have to pick it up.

Mr. Chairman, I want to stress this because there has been a lot of misunderstanding about who pays what. I will say that if you take the institutional costs of the postal system, which accounts for about half of this cost—in other words, this is what you would have to have, to have any system whatever—and then to add to that the additional cost that the volume itself requires, you cannot escape having a deficit of this nature.

The vastness of the country, the huge amount of mail that we have to process and the growing number of addresses that we have to deliver mail to, something more than a million new addresses a year—these are costs that cannot be avoided. You can mechanize a lot of the mail—and we are making some vast gains in our mechanization field and they are making some good efficiency records in that area—but when it comes to delivering the mail, you do it on Shank's pony—and when you have to deliver the mail for over a million new homes each year, it is just going to require more mail costs to get the mail to them and there is not anything we can do about it.

This situation follows as a direct result of the growth of the Nation and of the economy. So I think the only realistic thing we can do is to put postal management under a modern new system where they can cope with these problems in a proper way and expect the users who benefit from this mail system to pay a fair cost or share of it.

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEED. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Missouri.

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. STEED) as usual has done an excellent job in bringing out the major facts in connection with this appropriation bill, both in his remarks here on the floor of the House and in the hearings that he conducted in his subcommittee.

I would like to ask the gentleman whether in his opinion any worthwhile purpose is served by having the mint turn out hundreds of millions of coins which never circulate. We have issued more than 1¼ billion Kennedy half-dollar coins, and now we are being urged to produce 150 million commemorative Eisenhower silver dollar coins.

I can understand the merits of turning out a limited number of proof sets for coin collectors, as long as legitimate collectors can obtain one or two sets each. But should the mint be put back into the sorry business once again of being a producer of commemorative coins?

Mr. STEED. I might recall to the gentlewoman that when the Kennedy half dollar came out, it was expected that it would circulate. But no one could anticipate the tremendous collector's appeal it would have. It is true that no matter how many we make, they do not seem to circulate. It is true also that the silver dollar has not circulated for a long time. So we have met this need of our daily business by increasing our production of the other coins.

In recent years we have been hard pressed to make enough coins to meet the needs of the Nation. With the opening of the new mint in Philadelphia, we are now back on top of the day-to-day requirement for coins. If the appropriate legislative committee, in its wisdom, authorizes the minting of these coins, we cannot turn them down because now we have enough capacity to produce them. But if we are not using our surplus capacity for this purpose, after getting over the coin shortage emergency, we have now started making some coins for foreign governments. We can do more in this field. It not only helps us meet our own mint overhead expenses, but it also makes a fine contribution to international good relations.

If I were on the Legislative Committee, I would be concerned as to what impact the tying up of our productive capacity for making commemorative coins would have on our ability to mint for our foreign friends. I think that is a very important function. Some countries have a critical need for coins, and they do not have the necessary facilities to mint them. We ought to give these countries this sort of help whenever and wherever we can.

They furnish the metal that we make the coins with. They pay our costs. So there is no financial burden on us in the minting. It is actually a financial advantage plus the good will that goes with it. It does not impair our metal resources whatsoever in the minting of foreign coinage.

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I realize the gentleman's subcommittee has not attempted to deal with the legislative issues on coinage, which come before the Banking and Currency Committee. As chairman of the subcommittee which has jurisdiction in the Banking and Currency Committee over coinage matters, I want to say that we have not given any consideration in the past 7 years—since our subcommittee was formed—to any of the bills which have come to us which would authorize the minting of commemorative coins. This type of coinage had turned into a real racket. The other body, by subsequent amendments last month to Senate Joint Resolution 158, which had passed the House on October 15, 1969, is now calling for resumption of the issuance of commemorative coins, and this is something that I think we should look at long, hard, and critically. I am sure the gentleman from Oklahoma agrees.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, before I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, let me say that I consider the gentleman to be without peer in this Congress and in the Government. His knowledge of precious metals is very great. He has done an enormous amount of work to make sure that our subcommittee had all the facts we needed on this subject. I am very happy to yield to him because I learned long ago that if I need to know anything about a precious metal, I cannot go to a better authority than my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I certainly want to thank the gentleman from Oklahoma. I have had a wonderful working relationship for 12 years now on that committee, and even prior to when the gentleman became the chairman, with the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, Vaughan Gary, when he chaired this committee. We worked not only on this problem but on many others.

I would like to direct my remarks to the gentlewoman from Missouri with regard to her question. What she said about the Kennedy half dollar is absolutely true. We minted over 1.2 billion of those coins, and they have gone down the drain. We cannot find them. I fought in the Joint Coinage Commission month after month and year after year to try to get that Commission to come up with a bill to recommend that silver be taken out of the Kennedy half dollar. As the gentlewoman knows, we finally got a bill through the House which would take the 40 percent silver content out of the Kennedy half dollar. We have wasted all that silver. It is gone. It is in collectors' hands.

In regard to the commemorative coin, your committee and the House did pass a bill which provided for an Eisenhower dollar without silver. Then we got into a deadlock with the Senate and we had much discussion with the people over there. It seemed like the bill would never get off dead center.

The amended Senate bill, Senate Joint Resolution 158, is important in two respects. First, it takes silver out of the half dollar so we can mass produce the half dollar once again and get it into circulation. Secondly, it does something about the nonsilver dollar. The only way they would buy that in the Senate—and I imagine one of these days we will go to conference with them—is to mint 150 million Eisenhower dollars with silver and then 200 million nonsilver Eisenhower dollars.

I do not like it. Personally I tried to take silver out of the half dollars under President Johnson, when we took silver out of the dime and the quarter, and we reduced it from 90 to 40 percent in the half dollar. Unfortunately, they will not move except by this means.

The only good thing I can see about this is that we can raise some revenue. We can get some revenue for the Treasury if they sell the Eisenhower dollars with 40 percent silver for a minimum of $5. In this way, we could raise about $500 million which is desperately needed. We can tie down the money, here in Congress, to an antipollution program or some consumer program, but I think we can raise from $500 to $700 million with this coin.

Why can we do this? We cannot make enough proof sets. We make a profit on each proof set minted at San Francisco. Those proof sets are limited to four per customer in 1970. We could sell thousands more if we could mint more of the proof sets, but we cannot.

But let us not close all the doors. The Joint Commission is going to meet again on May 13 on this problem. Let us keep the doors open and if we want to go into this area, let us make sure we get some revenue and that we tie down in the Congress where that revenue is going to be spent.

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for that explanation. The rumor has gone around that the Senate amendments to the coinage bill are all set to go through and so we are getting many calls each day on my subcommittee from Members asking how their constituents can get the Eisenhower silver dollars. Of course, it has never been minted, and may never be minted, although it was said that the "leadership" of both the House and the Senate on coinage legislation had agreed to the Senate's amendments. But speaking for the chairman of our full committee, I know he had never been consulted by the Treasury on any agreement that a silver dollar be coined. Previous efforts last October to have a silver dollar failed in the House. The Committee on Banking and Currency opposed it, and so did the Treasury.

But I do know that if we open the door now to the minting of commemorative coins, we have a dozen such bills which could be acted upon in our committee, which we have pushed aside for the last 7 years, for commemorative coins. Such coins became a real racket in the past, and we have the back hearings and information to show it. Many of these commemorative coins were returned to the Treasury to be melted in order to make them scarcer and worth far more in the coin market for those who had control over a substantial supply of them.

STATUS OF $1 COIN LEGISLATION

Mr. Chairman, there is widespread interest among the Members of the House in the status of legislation which would authorize the minting of a new $1 coin—one which both the House and Senate have said should bear the likeness of the late President Eisenhower. In view of the many, many calls from Members' offices to my subcommittee, which has jurisdiction in the Banking and Currency Committee over coinage legislation, asking about the plans for minting such a coin, I think it would be appropriate for me at this time, during consideration of the appropriation bill which contains funds for the Bureau of the Mint, to explain the legislative situation on the proposed Eisenhower coin.

Both the House and Senate have passed legislation which contains authority for minting at $1 coin of cupro-nickel composition—similar to the present quarter and dime—for general circulation. Senate Joint Resolution 158 as passed by both Houses also provides authority for eliminating silver from the half dollar and minting a cupro-nickel half dollar instead of the present 40 percent silver coin. Both versions of the bill also provide authority for the sale to the public, at rare coin market values, of the nearly 3 million Carson City silver dollars still in the Treasury's vaults.

These provisions of Senate Joint Resolution 158 would all carry out recommendations made late in 1968 under the Johnson administration and in May 1969 under the Nixon administration by the Joint Commission on the Coinage, which was established by the Coinage Act of 1965 to advise Congress and the President on matters involving coinage, the use of silver in our coins, and the appropriate means for terminating Government dominance of the silver price situation.

However, the legislation is being held up at the present time—as it has been since last October—by the insistence of the other body that a certain number of the Eisenhower $1 coins be made of 40 percent silver composition. In October, the Senate insisted there be 300 million such silver coins minted. On March 19 it amended the bill to authorize 150 million such coins. The latter figure was said in the Senate to represent some sort of compromise agreement between House and Senate "leaders" on this legislation.

JOINT COMMISSION ON COINAGE TO MEET

This purported agreement—insofar as it was said to reflect a compromise of House and Senate leaders on the legislation—came as a great surprise to those of us on the Committee on Banking and Currency who have legislative responsibility on the House side for the coinage bill. We never joined in any such agreement. We were particularly surprised to hear that the Treasury Department had apparently accepted this proposal as a reasonable one, in view of the fact that the Treasury, during both the Johnson and Nixon administrations, had endorsed completely the recommendation of the Joint Commission on the Coinage to end the use of silver in our coins.

Chairman WRIGHT PATMAN, of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, wrote to Secretary of the Treasury Kennedy last month protesting the Treasury's sudden change of position on this issue of using silver in our coinage, and asking how the new position of the Treasury could be justified as one carrying out "the recommendations of the Joint Commission on the Coinage," which is what Senate Joint Resolution 158 as passed by the House on October 15 is supposed to do.

In response to Chairman PATMAN'S letter, Secretary Kennedy apologized for not having consulted the Banking Committee on its revised position, and also said he would reconvene the Joint Commission on the Coinage to review the whole matter. I am now informed that this meeting of the Joint Commission has been set for a month from today, May 15. Hence it does not appear likely that the coinage bill will come before the House for further consideration until after that date.

I mention this today because I know that many of the Members are receiving inquiries from constituents asking when they can apply—or how they should apply—to purchase the commemorative $1 silver dollars provided for in the Senate's March 19 amendments to the House-passed version of Senate Joint Resolution 158. No silver dollars will be, or can be, minted until agreement is reached on Senate Joint Resolution 158, and that, as I said, is at least a month away.

PROPOSED USE OF STOCKPILE SILVER FOR COMMEMORATIVE COINS

We on the Banking and Currency Committee are very concerned over the fact that part of the deal for minting a 40 percent silver dollar in large volume involves the use of about 25 million ounces of silver from the defense stockpile. The stockpile, by direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency and of Congress, contains 165,000,000 fine troy ounces of silver. This amount was set aside in 1967 in the legislation we passed terminating by June 24, 1968, the redemption of silver certificates for silver bullion.

Apparently, the Office of Emergency Preparedness now feels that the objective it asked us to set in 1967 is higher than necessary for defense purposes. So far as I know, the Banking Committee has received no documentation of that fact, and I think we would want to have such documentation before proceeding to rob the stockpile for the purpose of turning out 150,000,000 dollar coins which will never circulate—collector coins.

I am surprised that some people think it would be demeaning in some way to the memory of the late President Eisenhower to place his likeness on a cupro-nickel coin. We had that argument here in the House on October 15 when we acted on the coinage legislation and voted to eliminate all silver from our coinage. As was pointed out then, it is not considered demeaning to George Washington to have his likeness on a cupro-nickel coin, or to Franklin D. Roosevelt. Nor does anyone feel it is demeaning to Abraham Lincoln to appear on the lowly penny, or Jefferson on the nickel coin.

An amendment of mine on October 15 to permit the Treasury to make proof sets of materials different from those used in the regular circulating coins was eliminated in the Senate version of the bill passed on March 19. Instead, it is proposed by the Senate to make 20,000,000 proof $1 coins of 40 percent silver, but all of the other coins sold in proof form would have to be of the same material as the circulating coins.

Another House provision dropped from the Senate-passed version of the bill called for a design on the reverse side of the $1 coin symbolic of the Apollo 11 Eagle landing on the moon.

The implication in the Senate debate was that Senators preferred the symbolic eagle of peace which appeared on the silver dollars minted in the 1920's and early 1930's.

SPECULATIVE ACTIVITY IN SILVER FUTURES

In any event, Mr. Chairman, until the Joint Commission on the Coinage has reviewed the Treasury's position on the actions on this legislation taken by the Senate on March 19, no action can be expected on this side of the Capitol on the coinage bill. I would like to see the Committee on Banking and Currency hold further hearings on it, particularly on the proposal in the Senate version to reduce the silver stockpile objective by 25,000,000 ounces. This is much too important a matter to be casually disposed of as part of some deal or arrangement to satisfy the desire of some Members of both Houses to continue using silver in large amounts in our coinage.

There are many ways to honor the late President Eisenhower—including purchase of the Eisenhower Presidential medal sold by the mint for $3 each. And I certainly think a $1 coin bearing his likeness would be neither despised nor demeaning.

Unfortunately, much of the controversy over the use of silver in coinage seems to arise out of concern by speculators in the silver futures market over which way the highly volatile silver futures market will jump. That should be the least of our concerns in the Congress.

Most experts predict that once the Government stops selling silver at weekly auctions of 1,500,000 ounces per week, probably some time in October, the price will soar.

If that is indeed the probable outcome of Government withdrawal from its role as the major supplier of silver, then it seems to me we should now take all of our remaining silver in the Treasury and immediately put it in the stockpile for future defense and defense-related industrial needs. Otherwise, we may soon reach the point where the silver we have been selling for about $1.89 per ounce may have to be repurchased by the Government—directly or in the purchase of defense equipment—at a much higher price.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEED. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the gentleman from Oklahoma yielding.

Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER), has been unavoidably detained in his district today, and he is unable to be on the floor, so he asked me to call the attention of Members to the item in the Post Office appropriation representing Miami and particularly the building of a new complex west of 22d Avenue to take the place of the facilities now constituting the Biscayne annex east of 22d Avenue.

Postal employees now employed at the Biscayne annex have advised Representative PEPPER that they would prefer to continue to work in the immediate area of the Biscayne annex rather than to move to a new complex, and that they think that space will be available for additions to and the enlargement of the Biscayne annex which will provide adequate facilities for the Post Office Department without the necessity of building a completely new complex of facilities west of 22d Avenue.

Representative PEPPER wishes me to ask you whether you have had any communication from the Post Office Department about this matter and whether as the item now appears in the bill, it should be approved into law; and would it be possible if the Post Office Department thought that desirable under the item now in the bill, to add to and enlarge the present Biscayne annex facilities without the necessity of building a new complex west of 22d Avenue.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, to answer the gentleman's question, I have discussed this matter in some detail with the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER). We have discussed it with the Department. We have a letter from the Department, which I will make a part of the RECORD, in which the material brought to us by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) has been placed for consideration, and they have withheld action on this until the new review could be made. Following is the letter the committee received from the Department:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D.C. April 8, 1970.

HON. TOM STEED,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Departments of Treasury and Post Office and Executive Office Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN STEED: I would like to expand upon my testimony given before your Subcommittee concerning the needs of the Post Office Department for a new postal facility in Miami, Florida.

Our principal mail handling facility for the last 20 years has been a leased facility built in 1953 known as the Biscayne Annex which is co-located with our Vehicle Maintenance Facility.

It is well known that the southern part of Florida has had a much larger percentage growth than the majority of the country and accordingly our postal requirements have been outdated for several years. The Department, in analyzing how to solve these needs, gave consideration to the expansion of its principal facility, the Biscayne Annex; seeking comparable leased space; and the construction of a new postal Public Building. It was our conclusion based on the information available to us sometime ago that the most economical solution for the Government was to propose erecting a new Postal Public Building located in the same general area as our Biscayne Annex facility.

Since that time, however, the present owner of the Biscayne Annex has asked that we permit him time to consider whether it would be economically possible and practicable for him to expand the present building to satisfy our needs. Accordingly at his request and the request of Congressman Claude Pepper, we have granted our lessor approximately two additional weeks for him to submit his proposal. At the end of that time we could then compare the economics and determine which method is in the best interest of the Government.

All parties agree that some improvement in the mail handling for Miami, Florida, must be programmed without further delay. Hopefully, therefore, your Committee will retain in our budget the amount of money we recommended in case our decision is to proceed with construction of a Postal Public Building.

Sincerely,

HENRY LEHNE,
Assistant Postmaster General.

So apparently everybody concerned is satisfied, at this stage and time, that this is the best procedure, because not only do they need additional facilities in this very rapidly growing area but also it is very likely the gentleman from Florida has brought in some information that will furnish the solution we need and do it at a considerable saving of money.

We feel that since this is the program we must go ahead with making the funds available, because hopefully within the not too distant future a decision can be worked out for this area. If we did not have the funds in the bill at this time it would mean another year of delay before any action could be started toward getting the work done.

I must say I believe we have done everything that could be done and that the Department is cooperating very closely in this matter. I am sure a happy solution will be worked out.

I am very grateful to the gentleman from Florida for having given us the benefit of his on-the-scene information about the problem, and I am sure the Department reacts in the same way.

Mr. FUQUA. Let me personally thank the gentleman, and, on behalf of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) express his gratitude.

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEED. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ADDABBO. On behalf of our colleague (Mr. FARBSTEIN) who is presently conducting hearings in New York, I should like to ask whether there are any specifically earmarked funds in this bill for the expansion of the Morgan Station Post Office facilities, located between Ninth and 10th Avenues on the West Side between 28th and 29th Streets in Manhattan?

Mr. STEED. To answer that question, no, there are no funds for that specific purpose.

I believe it would be fair to say that a study involving the whole New York area is being made by an independent agency. When our colleague (Mr. FARBSTEIN) came to us, he presented some very valuable information. We were able to get the Department to accept that information. I have a letter which I will be happy to make a part of the record dealing with the subject.

It seems to me there is a very strong likelihood that the position the gentleman takes about this particular site not only is a wise one but also will end up saving a considerable amount of money in the construction phase of meeting the needs in New York City and also over the long-haul operation will make an even greater contribution to efficiency and reduced cost.

I believe the fact that the gentleman from New York (Mr. FARBSTEIN) brought this information to us in such a timely manner as he did is a great credit to him. We appreciate it and are grateful to him. Following is the letter the committee received from the Department:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D.C., April 8, 1970.

HON. TOM STEED,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Departments of Treasury and Post Office and Executive Office Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN STEED: I would like to expand upon my testimony given before your Subcommittee bringing you up to date in connection with our analysis on how to solve the preferential mail handling requirements for the west side of New York City.

At the present time our studies have not been completed and have not been reviewed by the Postmaster General. These studies basically consist of comparing the economics of alterations and modernization of the existing General Post Office and the Morgan Station Post Office Building in Manhattan versus constructing a new and modern preferential mail handling facility located along the Hudson River on abandoned piers. There are attractive features to either alternative and therefore more study has been required than originally contemplated at the time of my testimony in February.

One of the most pressing problems however, is the need to improve the efficiency of handling preferential mail in the Manhattan area. We are therefore making detailed analyses comparing the time and cost to alter and modernize our existing facilities versus that of repairing the piers and constructing a new facility.

In making these studies we are giving the highest consideration to the requests of Congressman Farbstein and Mayor Lindsay concerning the possibility of turning over some of the Government-owned property in this general area to New York City. We recognize the desire of New York City for additional low-cost housing and have been made aware of this pressing concern. However, it should be pointed out that if any surplus property does result from our study, the existing procedures require that the General Services Administration conduct a canvass of other Government Departments to determine whether they have a need for surplus property before other disposition is authorized.

Unfortunately, these studies have taken longer than was thought at the time of my testimony. However, it is expected that they will be completed and our decision will be forthcoming by the end of this month.

Sincerely,

HENRY LEHNE,
Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. ADDABBO. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. FARBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear in opposition to the appropriation of any funds for the expansion of the Morgan Station Post Office in New York City to include a preferential mail facility.

The Morgan Station Post Office is located in the Chelsea section in New York City in the Borough of Manhattan. It is an economically, racially and religiously integrated residential neighborhood located in my congressional district.

Chelsea is one of the oldest neighborhoods in Manhattan. It is on the west side around 23d, 24th, 25th Street, and so on along the Hudson River. Brownstone houses are found throughout the area. It's a fine neighborhood, a streamlined neighborhood. In addition, there is now an area from 23d to 28th Streets between 8th and 9th Avenues, a good complex of cooperatives that were put up by the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union. There are also several thousand families along the west side of the Hudson River between 9th and 10th Avenues from 14th Street all the way up to almost 40th Street.

There is new low-cost housing, constructed by the city all the way down to 20th Street. There are high rise developments, low- and middle-income apartments, throughout that whole area in addition to these brownstone houses on the streets along the west side; it is a good neighborhood. It is one of the finest neighborhoods in the city, really.

MORGAN STATION POST OFFICE

The residents of the neighborhood are vehemently opposed to the Morgan Station site for an expanded postal facility or for any purpose other than for low- and moderate-income housing.

The 1962 decision by the Post Office Department to expand the Morgan Station Post Office has been a major contributor to the housing shortage in the community by displacing over 300 families without making any provision for the construction of comparable housing within the Chelsea area. That same decision has also hurt the surrounding community by destroying many badly needed neighborhood facilities located on the site that has been leveled, including the area's only community recreation center.

As severe as has been the impact of the destruction of 300 housing units located on the site, it doesn't begin to compare with the impact that the construction of a preferential mail facility on the site would have on the community.

It would serve as a serious hazard to the residential character of the community by increasing industrial traffic and would threaten the safety of the children occupying housing surrounding the site, attending nearby schools, churches and settlement houses, utilizing the Chelsea Park or availing themselves of the health and hospital facilities in the community.

The Morgan site is surrounded on three sides by residential housing. The traffic hazards in the Chelsea community are immense today, even without the facility. Every year, the community suffers some tragedy as children are killed or injured in traffic.

Last year a Puerto Rican boy, Julio Biaz, was killed as he attempted to cross the street. Construction of the facility would serve to bring more trucks and traffic into the neighborhood and worsen the situation.

Postmaster Blount has informed me his Department is now considering an alternative for the preferential mail facility on the general post office site. It seems to me that it makes sense to consider the impact of the facility on the surrounding neighborhood, especially when a second site is available.

Presently, the general post office, I don't know whether you have been in that area or not, Mr. Chairman, is located on 8th Avenue between 32d and 33d Streets, and runs through to 9th Avenue. It occupies a tremendous area. Also, Penn Central runs right through, right under it.

So it would seem to me that the logical thing to do would be to build up this facility. The Post Office Department is considering either abandoning this general post office or renovating and building it up between 32d and 33d. This proposed postal facility is proposed between 9th and 10th, between 28th and 29th.

They go from 29th to 32d. Here you have the general post office only three blocks north of it. Where is the sense of that? Where is the logic in spending the tremendous sums of money which would be involved here?

The site of the general post office makes infinitely more sense as a location for the facility. The general post office complex is large already and location there would put the new facility in close proximity to the services provided by the existing complex. Then, too, the general post office is located nearby the Penn Central Railroad Station, which would permit transportation of mail to and from the railroad only a few feet away and even permit it to be conveyed by tunnel to keep down the amount of street traffic in the area.

The distance from the railroad station to the Morgan site is approximately 5 blocks, and would have to be covered by truck. More important, the area surrounding the general post office is commercial and industrial, so nobody is going to be hurt. There would be no disruption of a residential community and it would also give the nearby businesses immediate access to this facility.

Now, the Post Office Department has not as yet made up its mind, so far as I know, as to which of the two sites it will choose; but I would request the subcommittee to specifically prohibit the use of any funds being made available in the 1971 bill for the expansion of the Morgan Station Post Office.

The site would be ideal for low- and moderate-income housing because of its location near schools, parks, and health facilities and other neighborhood services. In the event that this site is not utilized by the Post Office Department for a preferential mail facility, it would be made available under the provisions of section 414 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1969 of the city of New York for low- and moderate-income housing.

This is the purpose for which I believe the site should be utilized. It is also the purpose for which the residents of the community would like to see it used.

The community has held meetings in opposition to the site, has secured over 5,000 signatures on a petition incorporating the language of House Concurrent Resolution 519 introduced by me to convey the site to the city for low- and moderate-income housing. It has set a date for mass marching and picketing against the site, and insists that it will engage in confrontation, if necessary, to prevent the building of the facility in the area. I regret I am unable to fully convey the intensity of the feeling of the community because words fail me, but I believe it is best suggested by the action of the parents of the community following the death of Julio Biaz. They took it upon themselves to construct a wall in the middle of the street to stop traffic. They were more concerned with protecting their children's lives than whether or not they went to jail. I hope you will appreciate just how strong my feelings and those of the community are on this issue.

Now, what are we going to do? We are going to drop a time bomb right in the center of the complexes of houses. This would be the most difficult thing for any community to envision. I can say this to you—the people in the neighborhood are desperate. They simply will not permit the building of any postal facility in that area because of the danger to their children.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Speaker of the House.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. McCORMACK was allowed to speak out of order.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to congratulate the Committee on Appropriations for the speedy work undertaken by the various subcommittees and the full committee in reporting out three appropriation bills, two of which will be brought up today and one tomorrow. This augurs very well for quick and early action in connection with appropriation bills during this session of the Congress.

I want to pay my respects to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. STEED) for bringing up the first appropriation bill for this session of the Congress.

The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. STEED) as we all know, is one of the outstanding Members of the Congress of the United States. There is no more dedicated Member than the gentleman from Oklahoma in the performance of his public duties, and he reflects great credit on the people of his district, the State of Oklahoma, and the people of our great country.

In congratulating the gentleman from Oklahoma, I also extend my congratulations to the other members of his subcommittee, both Democrats and Republicans.

25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEATH OF FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Mr. Chairman, yesterday was the 25th anniversary of the death of our late beloved friend and President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. It is well that we pause for a few moments today to pay tribute to this notable American and to honor this outstanding statesman. Franklin D. Roosevelt was one of the great Presidents of our entire history. In my opinion, historians of tomorrow will appraise his administrations in such a manner that he will go down in history as one of the outstanding statesmen of all time.

It was my pleasure to be very close to Franklin D. Roosevelt—a friendship and a closeness I value very much. On April 12, 1945, Franklin D. Roosevelt died. Yesterday, while the House was not in session, was the 25th anniversary of his death. Franklin D. Roosevelt gave able and courageous leadership to our country during the depths of the depression that brought back to our people in those days hope and confidence. He also gave leadership to the country during the years that Hitler came across the horizon, doing so under great difficulty and oftentimes with great misunderstanding. Franklin D. Roosevelt saw the dangers of appeasement. He saw that appeasement during the 1930's when Hitler was around was in fact the road to war. President Roosevelt did everything he could to prepare America in case of attack. He did everything he possibly could in case of necessity to have our country prepared and did so under great difficulties and with tremendous opposition.

Mr. Chairman, my purpose in taking the floor today is to make these few remarks in relation to our late beloved President and to keep alive his memory and the fact that this one man, by his leadership, his deeds, his actions, and thoughts, gave to America the outstanding leadership necessary on a domestic level during the dark days of the depression, and also gave to our country outstanding leadership in trying to prepare our country in case of any emergency that might arise during the 1930's. He gave outstanding leadership during World War II up to the time of his death.

It is proper we pause to pay tribute to the memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, I have asked the gentleman to yield to me so that I can call our colleagues' attention to the fact that our good friend from New York (Mr. ROBISON) is appearing today for the first time in his new role as the ranking minority member of our subcommittee. I am happy for his cooperation and hard work and help. I wanted to take this opportunity publicly to tell him how much I appreciate the fine work he has done for our subcommittee this year.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman's kind remarks and in just a moment I shall reciprocate.

Mr. Chairman, this is my first year of service as ranking minority member on this subcommittee, though sixth year of service on it overall.

During all this time, it has been a particular pleasure to be associated in this fashion with our subcommittee chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. STEED), and our former ranking member—who, I am pleased to note, still retains his membership on the subcommittee—the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE).

Both of these, our colleagues, know the subject matter that comes under the purview of this subcommittee like the proverbial "book." Each of them, throughout their years of service on this subcommittee, have made substantial contributions toward making the Federal departments, bureaus and agencies that come before us with their budgetary requests more efficient in their operations, more careful with the funds finally allocated to them, and more responsive to the needs of the public they are supposed to serve.

If I have—or am to have—something to also contribute to those same ends, it will be because I have had, in these two friends and associates, the best and most patient of all possible teachers, and I am exceedingly grateful to them both.

Mr. Chairman, as our subcommittee chairman has pointed out in his typically thorough fashion, that portion of the annual Federal budget that is encompassed by the needs of these two departments—the Treasury and Post Office Departments—falls within that category of budgetary requests that is thought of as "uncontrollable" or "relatively uncontrollable."

This is because, at least in very large measure, both are service agencies having, themselves, little control over the volume of their own workload which, since it constantly rises, either requires additional personnel to handle the same or the kinds of capital investment in new facilities and equipment that will enhance the productivity of their employees.

This subcommittee, in carrying out its important oversight responsibility over the operations of these two departments, has attempted to provide a proper mix of these two methods for meeting the demands of a constantly expanding workload.

It has, in past years as in this, led the way in insisting upon as broad an application of the most modern automatic data processing techniques as seemed advisable—and the results of this effort, as demonstrated by the productivity records of such as the Bureau of Accounts and the Bureau of the Public Debt, both within the Treasury Department, have amply demonstrated the wisdom of that investment.

We believe—though with some disappointment over the slowness with which this seems to become fully apparent—that the same can also be said with regard to the similar but larger capital investment made in behalf of the Internal Revenue Service, an agency whose other demands will be all too real to many of us during these next several days.

Computers and the like are marvelous—if occasionally somewhat frightening—devices. Their efficiency input into such IRS tasks as revenue accounting and processing would seem to be near boundless. And I think we can well begin to look forward now to the day when many, if not most, of the Federal income-tax payers—and surely those whose sole income is from wages or salaries, interest or dividends, and who are still willing to use the so-called standard-deduction procedure rather than itemize their deductions—can forgo the annual chore of making out an income tax return, accepting instead the results of a computerized billing system from some centralized headquarters.

Pending that millennium, however, I must confess to some personal concern over the self-evident tendency on the part of IRS to wish to constantly expand its compliance—or auditing—forces and capabilities. We are told that the rows upon rows of new IRS computers can check taxpayer arithmetic, and ascertain by comparison with informational returns whether or not an individual taxpayer has, for instance, reported all his dividends. But we are also told that the same machines cannot do much to audit a return—that, indeed, by developing leads they even add to the normal auditing burden.

Taxes being the unhappy burden that they are, I assume there will always be those who will seek, one way or another, to pay less than they should.

It is, therefore, necessarily of concern both to this subcommittee and to the Congress to be told that there has been a steady decline, in recent years, in the percent of returns examined—or audited—by IRS; from 5.8 percent in 1963, to 4.2 percent in 1967, on down to 3.18 percent in 1969 and an estimated 2.6 percent and 2.83 percent for 1970 and 1971.

To put this a different way, according to a recent news story in the Wall Street Journal, we are told:

The IRS examined one individual or fiduciary income return in 35 (last year), compared with 1 in 29 the previous year . . . (and) in corporate returns the ratio slipped from 1 in 10 to 1 in 10.5.

Despite the fact that the American taxpayer has established, over the years, a remarkable record of voluntary compliance with the full intent and brunt of our Federal tax system, this slippage in audit percentages, Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly needs to be corrected for the honest taxpayer deserves to be—and must be—protected against the depredations of his less honest, if rare, neighbor.

As Mr. STEED put it during our hearings, voluntary compliance with our tax law rests on public confidence in the impartiality of enforcement of the same, and so we have allowed a carefully considered 1,550 of the 2,894 new, average positions requested by IRS for its compliance work, it being our further thought—in view of the fact that some 41 percent of the returns audited last year resulted in no change—that a more careful selection by IRS of the returns to be audited should work to the advantage of both the Government and the taxpayer.

Before leaving this subject, however, I wish to express my own personal—and urgent—request of Commissioner Thrower, present head of IRS, that he make simplification of the Federal tax returns, and instructions, insofar as this can be done administratively, a primary goal. It is true that the Congress, in last year's Tax Reform Act, failed to provide much in the way of legislative simplification—unless one counts in the estimated 1.3 million returns that, in future tax years, will shift from an itemized to a standard-deduction approach, and the estimated 5.6 million returns in the lower-income brackets that will be eliminated altogether since such persons will be relieved of all Federal income-tax obligations. It is also unfortunately true that, for many other taxpayers, last year's Act may have brought at least temporary, additional complications in the reporting process—adding, on at least a short-term basis, to IRS own workload.

There is not much we can do about that fact, for now, but—though I personally, hold no brief against “H. & R. Block” or even “Mr. Whitehead” of that great mail-order chain that has now gotten into the tax-reporting consultant business—I do align myself wholeheartedly with Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Edwin S. Cohen, who recently said:

I worry about simplicity (in tax reporting) not for the thousands who can afford expert advice on complex matters, but for the millions who cannot and should not be required to do so.

And, Mr. Chairman, there evidently is, somewhere in the darker recesses of the IRS headquarters, one career employee whose job it seems to be to make, each year, just enough change in the reporting procedures—just enough change in the forms themselves—to throw each of us, at this time of year, into at least temporary confusion, and all for no obviously useful purpose except, maybe, that of keeping us on our toes. Some day—some day—Mr. Chairman—maybe we can find that fellow, and when we do, we ought to have his head.

In any event, the internal management problems of the Treasury agencies are as nothing when compared to those endured by the Post Office Department.

Someone like TOM STEED has wrestled with those problems for a frustratingly long time. In concert with Mr. CONTE he has nursed the Post Office Department into a gradual realization of the basic fact that it could not possibly ever hope to cope with its workload unless, and until, it began to apply modern-day managerial techniques to the handling of the same, and begin to consider a capital investment in long-needed equipment and facilities to the depth required, along with a research and development program into new methods for handling the mail, to save our so-called “postal system”—around which words I have deliberately put quotation marks—from further decay.

I was present in our subcommittee room, back in February of 1967, when the then Postmaster General, Lawrence O'Brien, came before us and told us that in his opinion the Post Office Department was “in a race with catastrophe.” That phrase of his subsequently received a good deal of publicity, as it deserved to because it was an absolutely correct assessment of what years of congressional and executive neglect of the postal system's needs had produced.

On that morning of February 27, 1967, Mr. O'Brien, Mr. CONTE, and I—and I also believe Mr. STEED—had a further colloquy regarding what might be done, to begin with, to help the postal system win that “race with catastrophe,” and the one thing we agreed upon was that it was time to get the “politics” out of the system.

Subsequently—as you all know—the Kappel Commission on Postal Reorganization was created to review the failings of the system in that and all other regards and, in my judgment, that Commission's report stands out as one of the finest pieces of work that any such study group has ever produced.

The postal service has now had its catastrophe—the recent strike standing as mute evidence of one of the Commission's findings, after taking recognition of the kind of postal-pay increases we have periodically enacted, such as the one we may take final action on today. That finding was:

The system might be defensible, at least from the point of view of labor, if it produced decent working conditions and a satisfied work force. (But) the tragedy is not only the frustration of management but the failure of the system to satisfy anyone.

Mr. Chairman, I would not presume to speak for every member of this subcommittee, but I believe I can safely say that we are virtually unanimous in our strong conviction—based on the years of experience with the Post Office Department's troubles that our senior members have had—that those troubles will only be cured, and this Nation given a postal service worthy of the name, through congressional acceptance of the kind of postal reform now embodied in H.R. 4, which bill presently awaits our consideration.

Pending that sort of basic change, this subcommittee can—like the Department itself—only struggle with the surface problems and needs of the system.

We have done our best this year, as in past years, to help the Department resolve some of those problems despite the constraints put upon it because of the fact that too many of us want to continue to “play post office”—and we have done our best to help it meet its more obvious needs.

However, under existing circumstances, the budgetary recommendations we make to you for the Post Office Department are, more or less, shots in the dark. They will help the Department get by one more year, hopefully, though obviously in view of our action with regard to postal pay today we will shortly be asking you to consider a supplemental request by the Department for at least another $187 million for what remains of this fiscal year.

Besides which, the second phase of the postal pay increase agreement—with other employee benefits—as worked out between the Postmaster General and the major employee organizations, will cost an estimated additional $1.1 billion in fiscal 1971, the fiscal year we are now considering.

Inasmuch as the net operating loss of the Department is already estimated, for fiscal 1971, as amounting to $1.4 billion—before adjustments for public-service costs, and pay or rate increases—we now are forced to contemplate watching that loss rise to the neighborhood of $2.5 billion unless this Congress takes appropriate action to adjust the postal rate structure.

It is the prospect of such a deficit—though the statutory “postal deficit” would be about $900 million less than that under present procedures—that is of such concern to the President. That prospect has to be of equal concern to you and to me, too, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the taxpayers of this Nation, for it is they who, after we have tinkered around as we will with public service costs and the like, have to cover that operating loss.

The President, quite probably, may view his responsibilities in this connection in a different light than do we. But, if we do not like—as it appears we do not—his proposal to move the regular first-class mail rate up to 10 cents, then it is our responsibility to consider, and to enact at an early date, some other combination of upward adjustments in the rate structure.

All of us know that this is an election year. None of us need to be reminded of that but, at the same time, none of us should need to be reminded of our own duty in regards to fiscal responsibility.

I happen to think that this whole matter of public-service costs is badly in need of congressional review. But, pending that, if we accept such costs as an approximate credit of $900 million against the net operating loss of $2.5 billion we may soon be contemplating, that loss would be reduced—on paper—to about $1.6 billion. Now, I am no expert in any of this, but I understand that an increase in the regular first-class rate to, say 8 cents and something like a 50-percent increase in second-class rates, plus something like a 33½-percent increase in third-class rates—though I am sure we will have arguments aplenty about all of this—would produce about $1.6 billion more in postal revenues, and I would imagine that such a package, or something like it, would be acceptable to the President.

But it is my urgent plea, Mr. Chairman, to the members of the legislative committee whose responsibility all this is, that they take early action on both this controversial question and the longer range question of postal reform, for I should think it would be obvious to all of us that this Department cannot much longer continue down the same dead-end road on which we have kept it.

There are other matters covered by this bill, or referred to in our report, to which I would like to address myself, but I have already taken too much time as it is, and will reserve the balance thereof for the use of other Members.

Mr. HECHLER of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBISON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HECHLER of West Virginia. I notice that in the hearings the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Alabama, and various others raised the question about cost ascertainment and second- and third-class postal rates. It would seem to me that whatever system of cost allocations is arrived at, the entire problem of second- and third-class mail, and particularly third-class mail, has reached such a stage in this country that it is more than a question of how much is paid to deliver this mail. It is a question of the invasion of privacy, and the sheer nuisance which everybody experiences through having his mailbox crammed with all this unwanted junk.

I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he and members of the committee had considered the angle of the utter nuisance of a large amount of the unwanted third-class mail that overburdens our postal system. You can cut off second-class mail by cutting off subscriptions, but third-class junk mail keeps coming. Is it not true that the volume of third-class mail is rising proportionately and putting a larger and heavier financial burden on the operation of the Post Office Department?

Mr. ROBISON. I think the gentleman is correct in suggesting that the volume of third-class mail does constantly rise. The question of whether or not the third-class mail rate is as far out of line as some people say it is, is a matter to be resolved by the cost ascertainment systems of the Department itself. As I am sure the gentleman knows, the Department has a new approach to cost ascertainment in this respect that we hope will be given to the attention of the Congress and the public within the next few weeks.

Mr. HECHLER of West Virginia. Just one further question. It was formerly contended that postal clerks simply sat around and did not have very much to do after handling of first-class mail, and with their spare time they then processed and delivered the third-class mail. It seems to me that with the rising volume of third-class mail, this is no longer true, and it takes additional clerks and carriers to process and deliver billions of pieces of junk mail, and thus does represent a financial burden which contributes to the postal deficit.

Mr. ROBISON. You will find arguments, as the gentleman well knows, on both sides of this issue. We on the subcommittee do not wish to invade the prerogative of the legislative committee, though I will be happy to join the gentleman in his efforts there, which I am sure he is going to make, to bring about a proper mix of postal rate increases throughout the structure so we can assure the American people and ourselves that the rates are fair to all patrons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ADDABBO).

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 16900, the Treasury, Post Office, and Executive Office appropriation bill for fiscal year 1971. I was pleased to work on this legislation as a member of the House Appropriations Subcommittee which reported this measure to the full committee and in turn to the House. I commend the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. STEED), chairman of the subcommittee and my fellow colleagues on their diligence in expediting this legislation. I also commend the dedicated work of our subcommittee counsel, Mr. Gunnels.

The total recommended appropriation for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies is $9,492,702,000, a reduction of more than $73 million below the budget estimates and an increase of more than $331 million over the proposed funding level for fiscal 1970. This appropriation increase will provide for 19,500 new positions.

Some 16,000 new positions will be funded for the Post Office Department, most of them in the area of operations or mail processing. About 3,000 new positions are also established to help meet Internal Revenue, Customs, and Secret Service workloads. The need for additional postal workers is clear. Statistics developed by the committee reveal that mail volume will increase by nearly 2 billion pieces and the number of families served will increase by 1.5 million. It is my hope that the Congress will now pass more meaningful and equitable postal pay legislation with area wage differentials, for only will proper pay give us the most capable and dedicated workers and thus good service. Management is only as good as those doing the general work.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the postal service is a service to the people and was never intended as a pay as you go system. No other Government service is. I believe the American public has been paying its way for mail service. If there is to be an increase in rates, then it should be in the so-called junk mail which has never paid for services received.

Another section of this bill which requires special attention is the appropriation of $135,500,000 for the Bureau of Customs—an increase of more than $10 million over fiscal 1970. The committee report justly singles out the success of the Bureau in its antismuggling activities for special mention and praise—especially their activities in the area of controlling the bootlegging of narcotics, marihuana and dangerous drugs into the United States. It is hoped that the additional positions funded by this bill will result in increased surveillance of smuggling of drugs and particularly of conspiracies to smuggle narcotics.

I believe all our Government employees—postal, Secret Service, Treasury and customs workers—should be commended for their dedication to service, and services rendered, usually under the most trying conditions.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this bill and to vote for passage of H.R. 16900.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE).

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman. As you know, I had a most difficult decision to make this year. I had to decide whether to remain as the ranking minority member of your distinguished subcommittee or to take up that spot on the Transportation Subcommittee.

I chose the latter, but I will long remember the 5 years I served as the ranking minority member next to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. STEED). They were good years, and as I have said many times in the past, those were great agencies. I look forward to staying on under the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking minority member (Mr. ROBISON).

The committee bill, H.R. 16900, making appropriations for the Treasury, Post Office, and related agencies has already been discussed in great detail. I would of course be pleased to comment on any part of it that my colleagues wish to analyze further. However, I would first like to focus on some areas in which I took a special interest during the hearings.

NARCOTICS JURISDICTION

The drug problem in the United States continues to grow. The statistics on drug use and drug addiction are shocking. However, one factor in the marihuana and narcotics problem stands out in my mind in regard to H.R. 16900. It is that almost all of the marihuana, all of the heroin, all of the cocaine, and all of the smoking opium used in the United States is smuggled into this country.

To the extent this smuggling can be curtailed, the use of these substances can be diminished. The Bureau of Customs can curtail this smuggling. It has curtailed this smuggling. And I intend to see that it continues to curtail this smuggling.

I am concerned, however, over actual and proposed dilutions of the Bureau of Customs jurisdiction in the narcotics field. First the Bureau of Narcotics was transferred out of the Treasury Department and into the Justice Department. I opposed this transfer before it took place, and I have opposed it ever since. I think the two should be working together in the Treasury Department.

The so-called Dodd bill, S. 3246, passed the Senate recently. I was initially troubled over the effect this legislation would have over the Bureau of Customs investigatory jurisdiction in narcotics. I am pleased to report that Eugene T. Rosides, Assistant Secretary for Enforcement and Operations, is putting the final touches on a letter to me that clears up the apprehension I originally had about this bill. I will include that letter for the RECORD when I receive it.

But that is not all that I am concerned about with regard to who has jurisdiction over narcotics. The Ash Council, which is the President's Advisory Council on Executive Organization, seems to be leaning in the direction of an even weaker jurisdiction for the Bureau of Customs. I say "seems" because I could not get a copy of its report during the hearings. In this regard, I would refer my colleagues to page 56 of the Executive Offices hearings where I said:

I certainly feel we should have that report to the President, and I am asking for it. If you don't want to give it to me, that is all right. However, I want the record to show

I am asking for it. We appropriated $8,750,000 in a supplemental budget recently for Customs, mainly for narcotics. And I am not going to blow the taxpayers' money like this without knowing where it is going. I think it is important for this committee to have this information.

It is my understanding that the Ash Council report will recommend stripping the Bureau of Customs of its overseas jurisdiction, and I for one am not going to let this happen.

Right now, the Bureau of Customs has a limited jurisdiction in the overseas narcotics—less than it used to have, and less than it should have. Specifically, the Bureau of Customs has narcotics jurisdictions only where narcotics are found as a result of its other work abroad. They have a mere 16 men to tackle this job. Meanwhile, the Bureau of Narcotics has about 33 persons abroad, and this number will jump to over 80 if their fiscal 1971 request for 50 new positions is approved.

I believe that the Bureau of Customs, which historically had worked overseas alone, must not only retain the limited jurisdiction it now has, but must also get what it always had. As I told Secretary Kennedy at page 51 of the Treasury hearings, the answer would be to give Customs sole jurisdiction overseas.

In order for my colleagues to get a better understanding of the jurisdictional problems we face now in the overseas narcotics area, I would like to include pages 580 to 583 of the Treasury hearings in the RECORD at this point. I think the discussion on these pages paints a good picture of just what is going on. The portion of the hearing follows:

JURISDICTIONAL PROBLEMS IN NARCOTICS SMUGGLING

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask a question in the line that you're asking.

We have heard a lot of rumors, at least I have heard a lot of rumors, that there are jurisdictional problems in regard to narcotics crossing our borders. If this is so, I think that this committee ought to know about it.

I think that this committee has felt for a long time—and we have taken that position—that Customs is the first line of defense for the prevention of narcotics smuggling in the United States. We got fooled once, and not through our inadvertent acts. I fought the transfer of narcotics to Justice very strongly when it was brought up in the House. We only lost by a few votes, and a little more effort would have prevented it from being done.

Mr. ROBISON. We didn't get fooled, we got outflanked.

Mr. CONTE. Yes, we got outflanked by only a few votes, unfortunately. Is there anything to these rumors? I think we ought to know.

OVERSEAS NARCOTIC OPERATIONS

Mr. AMBROSE. The situation basically is as follows—about a month or two before I was sworn in, Mr. Rossides issued instructions to the Bureau of Customs to resume operational activities overseas in the area of narcotics.

Some discussions took place and an interchange of correspondence between the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury. I think objections were raised by the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs to a multiagency approach to foreign activities, particularly with reference to direct contact with foreign police agencies.

It is, of course, our view that, if we were going to conduct any investigations overseas in the narcotics area, it would be necessary to have the ability to have direct contacts and access to foreign police agencies. Otherwise we really couldn't operate.

Mr. STEED. They would take a dim view if you did.

Mr. AMBROSE. It would be impossible. There is just no way of doing it.

A discussion arose about the drafting of new guidelines, and so forth. I can't tell you the interminable number of discussions that took place between the various echelons and the various Bureaus.

The matter was finally referred, I think in the beginning of December or late November, to the Ash Council, which is named after the chairman of the council, the exact title of which I am not sure. I think the Council on Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. CONTE. Right.

Mr. AMBROSE. We understood it was referred to the Council. The question that was referred was whether, in fact, the Bureau of Customs would reinstate its overseas operational activities in the narcotics enforcement area—whether it could communicate directly with foreign police agencies through its personnel stationed overseas and utilize all of its enforcement personnel to develop information on smuggling of narcotics and dangerous drugs.

Thereafter, the Ash Council rendered a report to the President. I'm not sure, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Conte, that I am permitted to divulge the contents of this report. I will have to check, because it is a question of policy with the Department.

Mr. CONTE. That is all right.

NEW OVERSEAS GUIDELINES

Mr. AMBROSE. But, at any rate, the decision was that we would not use our overseas personnel to contact foreign law-enforcement officials in overseas countries on narcotic matters. Appropriate guidelines were to be drafted by a given date, which has been extended, and the decision, and the resolution of any differences between the two bureaus, would be made by the Attorney General.

BNDD FOREIGN OPERATIONS

Mr. STEED. I assume that the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs has taken the position that it does have the authority to deal in foreign areas?

Mr. AMBROSE. It does, yes, sir. It has been doing it since we have been.

Mr. STEED. How many seizures did you make, based on information they developed for you?

Mr. AMBROSE. There are a limited number of such instances. The total number during the past 10 years is less than 25. Almost all of these involved marihuana smuggling on the Mexican border. Information on heroin and hard narcotics from other parts of the world is practically nonexistent. Our New York office cannot recall a single instance where information was referred from BNDD. There have been some instances where we were advised of smuggling but the Bureau of Narcotics retained jurisdiction.

JURISDICTIONAL INVESTIGATIVE AREA

Mr. STEED. How do they make a case?

Mr. AMBROSE. Mr. Chairman, I am not in the position of knowing intimately the details of their enforcement operation over the last year or so, the last couple of years.

We, of course, are familiar with what we do and we believe that the preservation of our jurisdiction is necessary.

I am also firmly of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, and I make this statement unequivocally, assuming that we operate within our legal area of jurisdiction—which I think I am responsible for under the law and which

I think the Secretary is responsible for under the law—that we would be able to operate effectively and that we would be able to establish effective interchange of information between the bureaus so that we would have a joint effort here rather than a segmented, uncohesive attempt. It is imperative in my view that these agencies both participate fully in this effort within their investigative jurisdiction. Ours is smuggling.

Mr. ROBISON. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, is this jurisdictional problem we are talking about one that relates only to operations overseas and not to operations within the country? Or does it relate to both?

Mr. AMBROSE. At the present moment, Mr. Robison—it is 5 o'clock on this date—it relates to both. Because we have not resolved what the definition of smuggling is.

Mr. ROBISON. I see.

Mr. CONTE. But you have jurisdiction, or you have always had jurisdiction, over smuggling into the United States? Customs has always had this?

Mr. AMBROSE. Mr. Conte, I have taken the position as a lawyer, and with the advice of those members of the bar who are employed by the Bureau of Customs and by the Treasury Department, at this point that we have no legal way by which we can disclaim this responsibility.

It is our responsibility and, unless there is a legislative reorganization, we still have the smuggling jurisdiction.

CUSTOMS AUTHORITY

Mr. STEED. Let me ask you this question. Since contraband is, up to a certain point, cargo, who is to say our Government has the authority to touch that cargo except Customs? Who is to call?

Mr. ROSSIDES. It is our position—the Secretary's position—very clearly that the Ash Council was asked to look solely at the overseas question of whether Customs should have direct contact with foreign law-enforcement officials in narcotics smuggling matters, just as it does in all other smuggling matters.

In our judgment, we felt that lack of direct contact was a grave defect and that it hurt our proper functioning.

CONTRABAND

Mr. STEED. Mr. Secretary, isn't it so that if you, in examining cargo, decide that a bit of cargo is contraband and you confiscate it, the mere fact you do that doesn't necessarily make it contraband? The owner has other recourses and might eventually compel you to return that to him, isn't that so?

Mr. AMBROSE. That is correct, sir.

Mr. STEED. So you just can't say at any given point that this is contraband and this is cargo and you are welcome to step in here and touch it. It would be physically impossible, wouldn't it?

Mr. AMBROSE. Yes, sir. I think the problem we have here now is really whether smuggling is restricted to just the actual passage through the Customs lines of contraband, no matter what it is, or whether those acts which take place before and after those acts and which are connected with the passage of the contraband also constitute smuggling. We think that the law is clear that it is smuggling.

Mr. ROSSIDES. Preparatory acts and subsequent acts are clearly a part of the whole smuggling picture.

JURISDICTION LIMITATIONS

Mr. CONTE. This is about the most ridiculous thing I have ever heard. I have gone down on the Mexican border, I have been out with agents making a case. A guy comes over. You have got to let him go out and make that delivery. You take the case where they took marihuana from Laredo and flew it all the way into California with a Customs agent pilot on the plane. The case wasn't made until it landed in California, when you could make the arrest of the whole group of smugglers together.

Sometimes it takes a week. Sometimes it takes a month to make a case after it crosses the border. And if we are going to get into this kind of a silly dispute over jurisdiction, the public is the only one that is going to suffer because there is going to be a lot of narcotics—marihuana, hashish, cocaine, or you name it—sold to the public before a case is made by somebody.

The committee recognizes the great work being done by the Bureau of Customs in its anti-smuggling activities. On page 7 of its report, House Report 91-994, it notes:

The Committee has been impressed by the remarkable success of the Bureau of Customs in its anti-smuggling activities, particularly those directed at the introduction of narcotics, marihuana, and dangerous drugs into the United States. With the increased enforcement personnel provided in the 1970 supplemental appropriation, as further supported by this bill, it is anticipated that the Bureau of Customs will be able to increase these activities, particularly with respect to conspiracies to smuggle. The larger role which Customs will be able to play in detecting acts preparatory to smuggling and its activities in apprehending smuggling principals as well as mere couriers will be of the greatest significance in the government's overall campaign against the corruption of this country by those who smuggle and traffic in drugs. This role must not be diminished.

I urge my colleagues to study this language and what I have just said, I urge you to support the fight against narcotics, and I urge you to support the Bureau of Customs.

EISENHOWER DOLLAR

I would like to turn now to the question of coinage, and specifically to the question of the proposed Eisenhower dollar coin. I think my colleagues know how I feel about the use of silver in any coin whatsoever. My record against it over the years is clear. My reasons for feeling this way are equally clear. Simply stated, I do not believe we should use a precious commodity like silver, which is so desperately needed by private industry, in coins which do not circulate. For a more extensive discussion of my position, I would refer my colleagues to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 115, part 22, page 30088.

This body voted "no" on the use of silver in a new "Ike" dollar on October 15, 1969. The vote was 257 to 68. On that same day, the other body voted "yes." The vote there was 40 to 21.

The deadlock that followed is still with us. However, on March 19, 1970, Senate Joint Resolution 158 passed the Senate with an amendment. The amendment provides for taking 25.5 million ounces of silver from the national stockpile; for minting 150 million premium-priced "Ike" dollars with 40-percent silver; and for minting nonsilver half-dollars and $1 coins.

The bill before us, H.R. 16900, does not contain funds to implement this amendment. A supplemental request from the Bureau of the Mint would be necessary if this amendment were accepted by the House.

However, and I want my colleagues to be clear on this, the silver "Ike" dollars would be sold at a premium. That means they will more than pay for themselves. The 20 million proof dollars can be sold for $10 each and bring in $173 million as profits to the Government. The 130 million uncirculated dollars can be sold for $5 each and bring in far more than $300 million in profits.

Moreover, the nonsilver dollars under the amendment, at an annual rate of 200 million, will yield a seigniorage figure of $190 million.

The point is that the 40-percent silver coins will be on a pay-as-you-go basis. The nonsilver coins will require a supplemental request from the Bureau of the Mint.

I might also note that the silver coins called for in the amendment will consume 47.4 million ounces of silver. More than half of this, 25.5 million ounces, will come from the national stockpile.

EXECUTIVE PROTECTIVE SERVICE

On November 24, 1969, the chairman and I joined in cosponsoring H.R. 14944, which called for the Executive Protective Service. This legislation was signed into law by President Nixon on March 19, 1970, at which time I had the pleasure of attending the White House ceremonies.

The budget for the Secret Service reflects an increase of 550 positions, primarily to implement this law and to put teeth into the Executive Protective Service. I think this is important and that my colleagues should support the increase in positions needed to carry it out. The fact is that providing adequate protection for embassies is an inescapable treaty obligation of the United States.

There are 117 diplomatic missions in Washington, D.C., and the immediately surrounding area. Before the enactment of Public Law 91-217, the protection of foreign embassies was solely a responsibility of the Metropolitan Police Department. Over the past 4 years, incidents at embassies and crime involving diplomatic personnel have shown a marked increase and the foreign diplomatic corps has constantly complained to the Department of State. The new law will go a long way toward alleviating this unfortunate situation, and that is why the committee has recommended a substantial increase in Secret Service positions.

CENTRAL FILING PROGRAM

The Internal Revenue Service is the largest item in the Treasury budget and the major collector of Government revenues. In fiscal 1971, the Service expects to collect $202.1 billion.

My pet project in the Internal Revenue Service is the central filing program under which tax returns are filed at a few regional offices rather than a multitude of district offices. The program has worked out beautifully and is now saving the taxpayers about $4 million each year.

I suggested this program to the Service several years ago, and I am very pleased to see that it is now running so smoothly. In this regard, I would like to include the discussions we had on the central filing program on page 795 of the Treasury hearings:

CENTRAL FILING OF TAX RETURNS

Mr. CONTE. At the outset I want to take this opportunity to welcome the Commissioner back again and tell him once more what a great job he is doing down there. We are really proud of you and certainly any help that we can give you in this committee, we will.

My first question every year has to do with central filing and I don't want to break the norm now.

How is it working out?

Mr. THROWER. This is the master file at Martinsburg?

Mr. CONTE. No.

Mr. THROWER. Oh, the central filing of returns?

Mr. SMITH. We think it has proved itself.

Mr. THROWER. Yes; it has proved itself. Maybe Mr. Jack would want to comment on it.

Mr. JACK. It is just as good as it was when you first suggested it.

Mr. CONTE. Thank you. I wanted to hear that.

Mr. JACK. It is working fine.

Mr. CONTE. I imagine the Middle Atlantic and Southwest regions have implemented it.

Mr. JACK. It is nationwide. We have a few scattered nonmaster files that will come in next year.

Mr. SMITH. It has produced all the efficiency we had reason to expect.

Mr. CONTE. Could you give us any ballpark figures on what it will save the taxpayers?

Mr. SMITH. We estimated $4 million annually and I am sure we made it.

The heart of our tax system is voluntary compliance. A 1-percent drop in voluntary compliance would mean a $2 billion drop in revenues collected. That is why it is so important to fund the IRS adequately. If taxpayers were to lose confidence in the system, the collection of vitally needed revenues would be drastically impaired.

NEW DENVER MINT

Before leaving the Treasury Department, I might mention the discussion I had with the Bureau of the Mint over a new mint for Denver. The mint has studied the possibility of either enlarging the existing facility or building a new one.

I argued, as I have for years with the Post Office Department, that it does not make sense to put up new facilities in the congested downtown areas of our major cities. This is just what was done in the case of the new Philadelphia Mint. I had repeatedly opposed this and called for a new mint in the Philadelphia outskirts. I think it was a big mistake to build it in the middle of town.

Well, the Bureau of the Mint is thinking of doing the same thing in Denver. I do not want to see the same mistake made again, and I made this crystal clear at pages 385-386 in the Treasury hearings.

Moreover, I believe that if there is to be a new mint in the West, serious consideration should be given to building it on the west coast. As I said at page 385 of the Treasury hearings:

Industry is doing this day in and day out. They are getting closer and closer to the consuming public. It just doesn't make any sense to me to continue making money in Denver and shipping it to San Francisco, Los Angeles, and all over the west coast. Just think of the money we could save in transportation costs alone, plus the fact that you have all of these other problems with the Denver Mint. What's more, it is crowded.

I intend to keep a close watch on this situation, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

POSTAL REFORM

Turning now to the Post Office Department, which represents the bulk of H.R. 16900, the committee has recommended $8.235 billion. This is $272.8 million over the 1970 proposed level, but $42.4 million less than the request.

In fiscal 1971, according to a chart Postmaster General Winton M. Blount provided me at page 30 of the Post Office hearings, the Department will run a deficit of $1.8 billion in terms of new obligatory authority used.

The deficit is only part of the big problem. I have long felt that the Post Office was in need of drastic and sweeping reform. I have sat on this subcommittee for 12 years, and I have studied the Department inside out from top to bottom. I am convinced that nothing less than a complete overhaul is called for, and I think recent events have borne me out on this.

The problems of the Post Office transcend politics. Since this is the case, their solution depends upon taking the Post Office out of politics. For this reason, I applauded Postmaster General Blount's recommendation to take the appointment of postmasters out of politics.

The postal strike highlighted a lot of things that are wrong with our postal system. I would not know where to begin if I were to discuss these problems from A to Z, and I do not intend to take up my colleagues' time doing so.

However, I would note what I think is a major problem in the postal pay structure. There should be some "comparability" system based upon the cost of living in a particular area of the country. I have been saying this for 12 years now, since I first came on the Treasury-Post Office Subcommittee.

I do not see why a person living in rural America should make as much as a person living in a major urban area where the cost of living is so much higher. It does not make sense, and it is inequitable. The rural postal worker turns out to be the highest paid person in town while his counterpart in the big city ends up being the lowest paid.

When we debated the Federal employees pay raise on April 9, 1970, I raised this problem with the distinguished chairman of the House Post Office Committee (Mr. DULSKI) and my distinguished colleague from Arizona (Mr. UDALL). I was encouraged when Mr. UDALL said at page 11078.

One of the things being negotiated and talked about in the major postal reform proposals is giving to the postal unions the right to negotiate an average wage, so that the union of the man in New York can negotiate a higher wage for him, as compared to that negotiated by the union for the man who works in one of my small towns in Arizona, who does not need the same amount.

I also hope the proposed corporation will do something about this gross inequity in the postal pay structure.

Last year I introduced H.R. 11781, the administration's sweeping postal reform bill. I think it is a vital first step toward improving the Department and bringing it into the 20th century. I do not think the bill is perfect, but I do think we should be moving to a corporate setup soon—before it is too late.

The mail volume is expected to increase in fiscal 1971 by some 2 billion pieces, from 84.3 billion to 86.3 billion. But the bulk of that mail will continue to be handled manually. Approximately 80 percent of postal costs are personnel costs. I repeat, 80 percent of costs are for manpower, at a time when machines save private industry thousands of man-hours and man-years.

As if that were not bad enough, I had the Department provide me with a chart showing the age of major postal facilities at page 996 of the Post Office hearings. The average age is 38 years. More interesting, however, is that of 163 facilities, three were built before the turn of the century, 30 between 1900 and 1930, and only 28 since 1940. Moreover, most of the equipment in use is anywhere from 30 to 100 years old.

So when I talk about bringing the Post Office into the 20th century, I mean it.

The postal strike should have awakened the entire Nation to just how bad things are. The postal system could collapse at any time, just like it did in Chicago in 1966. I do not want this to happen again, and I want the record absolutely clear on this.

I am going to continue to work for and support real postal reform, including the proposed postal corporation. I hope my colleagues will do the same. This Nation cannot afford further deterioration of our postal system, and the people will not, and should not, tolerate it.

POSTAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

My pet project in the Post Office is the Bureau of Research and Development. When I first looked into this operation, they were designing mud flaps for trucks. A lot of progress has been made since then.

By the end of fiscal 1971, the use of equipment and techniques developed or first applied to postal operations through R. & D. programs will save 12,800 man-years per year. I think this is a remarkable record of accomplishment, and I commend the Bureau of Research and Development for it. I know they will continue to work hard and improve upon the outstanding record they already have set.

What this shows is that we can solve some postal problems right now. For example, in fiscal 1970 automatic readers will account for savings of 160 man-years. The Bureau estimates net savings of 10 man-years per machine on each of the 16 readers that will be in operation by June 30, 1970. These machines reach a cost beneficial point when they process 250,000 letters per machine per day. Some of them are currently processing over 500,000 letters per machine per day.

Moreover, the Bureau estimates that by 1975 cumulative savings from letter sorters alone should offset all postal R. & D. investments made in the past 18 years.

I think my colleagues would agree with me that part of the answer to the postal problem lies in automation. Mechanization accounted for $11.4 million savings in postal operations estimates for 1971. That is why the R. & D. program is so important.

Unfortunately, the Post Office does not emphasize it to the extent that private industry has. For example, private industry investment in R. & D. in 1966, as a percent of net sales, was 3.4 times the estimated postal level for 1971. Moreover, as an investment per employee and using the same years, private industry put in 9.1 times what the Post Office will. Specifically, private industry invested $600 per employee in 1966 compared to the postal level of $66 for 1971.

SAVINGS FROM SUBURBAN FACILITIES

Research and Development is, as I have said, part of the answer. Another solution lies in the building of postal facilities on the outskirts, rather than in the centers, of our major cities.

I mentioned this briefly in my earlier discussion of the Denver Mint. I have been after the Post Office for years to start building their plants where there is more room for their construction and for their operation.

I am very happy to see that the Department is now doing this, and it is paying off handsomely. The new bulk mail facility in New Jersey saved an estimated $72 million in investment costs and $38 million in annual operating costs over what a similar facility would have cost to build and run in downtown New York City.

I might also note, in view of what I said a moment ago about the importance of research and development, that this New Jersey complex is the result of an R. & D. study.

The remarkable savings that were achieved in this instance attest to the importance of building in the suburbs. I hope the Department will continue to move in this direction and continue to come up with such great savings for the taxpayers.

CONSOLIDATION OF WHITE HOUSE BUDGET

Before concluding my remarks, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues two changes in the White House budget. For years now the budget has not clearly shown the full cost of White House staff operations. The reason is that the specific "White House" appropriation financed only about half of the total staff requirement. The rest were financed from various agencies or from the "special projects" budget.

The President has decided to end this confusing system by consolidating all staff funds under one budget. I support this consolidation. It makes good sense, and it will make it easier for us in Congress to analyze future requests.

The second change involves a new appropriation for the Office of Vice President under the title special assistance to the President. In recent years the responsibilities of the Vice President have increased tremendously. However, he has not had his own staff to meet these increased responsibilities. He has instead had to use temporary and permanent "loans" from agencies.

I also support this new appropriation because it eliminates the undesirable practice of staff loans and gives the Vice President the permanent personnel he needs.

CONCLUSION

I think the committee put together a very tight bill. It cut $73 million from the budget requests, and approved some $330 million above the 1970 proposed level. It also allowed 19,500 of 21,800 new positions requested, most of which are related to uncontrollable increases in workload.

I am pleased to have served on the Treasury-Post Office subcommittee again this year. It has been a real pleasure working with the chairman (Mr. STEED), and the ranking minority member (Mr. ROBISON) and I certainly appreciate the assistance they have given me.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill. It is a good tight money bill, the kind that is called for in these highly inflationary times and that will fit right in with the President's efforts to cool down the economy.

Thank you Mr. Chairman for the opportunity to make these remarks.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. O'NEAL).

Mr. O'NEAL of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to the distinguished subcommittee chairman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies for the fiscal year 1971.

Included in this bill are funds for site acquisition, design and construction of a post office and vehicle maintenance facility for Albany, Ga., the largest city in my congressional district.

Albany is one of 29 cities designated by the Post Office Department to receive a major postal facility through this appropriations measure under consideration today.

Let me assure my colleagues that these construction funds are critical if the Albany project is representative of the needs of the other 28 cities.

The Albany post office not only serves a city of 70,000, but it is also a postal sectional center servicing 84 associate post offices in the area.

The post office is located in a building constructed in 1911. The building also serves as a courthouse and Federal office building for an extremely limited number of agencies.

The space allotted to the post office is so inadequate that it became necessary several years ago to lease additional space across town. Even with a split postal operation, which increases costs and prevents efficient manpower utilization, less than one-third of the needed workroom area is available.

The need for a new post office building in Albany has been critical for many years.

In view of the needs of the postal service for adequate space and more efficient facilities throughout the Nation, I feel that our Committee on Appropriations has acted wisely in funding the full amount requested by the administration for construction of postal facilities.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I think we have brought to the House today a good bill, cutting some $73 million from the request in the budget. I think the cuts are justified, and I hope the House will uphold the subcommittee in this effort.

I think I should comment just briefly on the question of the Bureau of Customs that was alluded to by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE). We tried to give the Bureau of Customs substantially everything they asked for, and yet I keep being concerned that the Bureau of Customs now being separated from the Narcotics Bureau is not able to do as effective a job as they should be doing. I do not personally know, for example, what the Bureau of Narcotics is asking for this year. I know when the question came up a year or two ago I introduced the disapproval resolution that attempted to hold Narcotics in the Treasury Department where I think it should be. I hope some day we can get these two hard-working bureaus back together, because I am convinced it is the only way we will be able effectively to put a stop to the import of narcotics.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I want to compliment the gentleman from Alabama not only upon that point but for the very fine contribution he has made to the Post Office and Treasury Subcommittee as well as the Committee on Transportation.

Is it not ridiculous to try to cut some narcotics jurisdiction away from customs? I say this especially in view of the fact that when you have a smuggling case, and the smuggled article comes over the border, for example at Laredo, Tex., from Mexico, and the customs agents have some knowledge of it, they have to drop that case once they find out and turn it over to the Narcotics Bureau. In many cases they do not want to make their case right there on the border. They may want to get the individual who is the center of the ring, such as in the case mentioned in subcommittee hearings where the marihuana came over the border at Laredo, customs rented a plane and flew it with the smugglers out to San Diego, and there arrested the people—the smugglers and the ring in California. Is it not ridiculous to have to hand this case over at the border to a narcotics agent to pick it up cold at another location?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I think the gentleman's statement is well taken. It proves the reason why these two Bureaus should not be separated. I say this because they run into all sorts of problems, not intentionally, but the little problems are there for the simple reason that one is in the Justice Department and the other is in the Treasury Department.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KAZEN. I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the two gentlemen on this question of the agents coming from the border at Laredo as has been stated. I have known first hand the work that is performed by these customs agents and I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts it is really ridiculous to cut these cases in half and let two separate agencies handle them. I think the customs agents have done a wonderful job and that they should not be handicapped in this manner.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wonder if the gentleman in the well or the members of the committee could enlighten me on something that concerns me deeply? As I understand it, 80 percent of the hard drugs today in the United States come from one route—the poppies are grown in Turkey, they are then taken illegally across the international border into Switzerland where they are then manufactured by professionals—this is not a backroom operation—and then placed into the commercial channels, illegal but commercial drugs, and they then go to France and mainly come out of the port of Marseilles to the United States principally through the John F. Kennedy International Airport.

This has been published information in the New York Times and in other publications and I am inclined to put credence in the published information, although I would recommend the interdiction of this route.

What I would like to know is why the U.S. customs agents, assuming they are knowledgeable about this, are unable to interdict that flow of hard drugs into this country?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that, of course, they do interdict a substantial portion that comes in. To assist in that situation we added 800 new jobs for the Customs Bureau.

The problem as I see it is that we do not have the overseas network that we should have. I am convinced that in the old setup we had a much greater in-depth overseas scrutiny than we have today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I am also convinced, if I may say to the gentleman from New York, that part of the problem has been the result of this division of the two most effective agencies in the country that have been working on narcotics.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield further?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I yield further to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman why could not the Department of State, assuming that these facts are right and, as I said, they have been published and I have read them in more than one instance, and I have seen no contradiction of them, assuming they are right, why could not the Department of State utilize the influence of the Government of the United States with, say a country such as Turkey which is an ally under NATO, to use what influence we have to stop this?

The same with Switzerland and with France. I mean I agree with the gentleman about the overseas customs situation, but in addition to that—

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. One thing that I do not profess to do is to speak for the Department of State. I do understand that they, in fact, are carrying on quite an extensive discussion in this area with these countries at this time.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. STEED. May I say to the gentleman that a lot is being done in the field we are talking about. The international conference on narcotics, with 86 countries, has been very effective. We do get the active cooperation of the Turkish Government. They are the only country under this agreement that can produce opium for medicinal purposes, and it is done strictly under Government control. The illicit part of it is something that the Turkish Government fights as hard as we do, but it is not all confined to that country. There is illicit opium grown in other countries that we have to cope with also.

Under the international program, working together, through the joint efforts of these countries, they confiscated over 5 tons last year. We are getting a lot of help in these areas. By the very nature of the conspiracy that involves any kind of smuggling, especially narcotic smuggling, which is the important one we are dealing with here, I think it is desirable to give the customs service the people they need to keep the smugglers at arm's length across the border, and after it crosses the border it means we will be much less effective than in the work we are doing now.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, while I do not question what the gentleman has said, I have myself had firsthand knowledge and experience where apparently two different agencies of the Government were working at cross purposes in this field.

Mr. STEED. Perhaps I can say it this way: The thing we are dealing with is the police part of the action after the opium is produced and on its way, the other part is in the field of international relations, and I think they do a very good job there. It is in or at the police level where the action is, and that is where customs becomes involved, and that is where we are trying to put the muscle.

Mr. McCARTHY. When I was in Thailand 2 years ago, and up in the mountainous area where they had a Communist infiltration problem, and we were being conducted by the AID people—at least, they said they were AID, I do not know, they could have been some other agency—but they informed us that the infiltration there by the Communists was attempting to foment discord among those Thai—actually, they were mountain tribesmen, they were not Thai, although they were under the protection of the Thai Government—and they had a brush, burn, and slash economy, and their main product was opium, and that this was illegal under Thai law, and they were seeking to dissuade the Thai Government from enforcing this law because otherwise these mountain people might become Communists. They were continuing to grow opium while we were there. And they explained that this finds its way out of there, and from there into the United States.

I wonder if we really have, and you have just explained here, a dichotomy regarding two agencies of Government? We discussed the Department of State and here we have AID. I seriously question whether there is a consistent and uniform policy emanating out of this administration on this problem.

The gentleman from Oklahoma cites the progress that has been made. But the fact of the matter is that this stuff is inundating this country and while there may be some progress, there still is a big job to be done.

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. May I say to the gentleman from New York, one of the major problems is that this is a cash crop and in Turkey and in some of these other countries, I understand, our folks have even gone so far as to try to help them to produce new moneymaking crops to relieve the economic burden of doing away with this particular crop.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. First of all, let me say this is not a partisan matter because it was the past administration that recommended taking the Bureau of Narcotics out of the Treasury Department. That little band of agents had, I think, one of the most remarkable records of any agency in the U.S. Government. Now this has been shifted over by the past administration to Justice where they have a tremendous increase of personnel over what the Narcotics Bureau once had under Treasury.

The route you mentioned is somewhat wrong. The great part of opium comes in from Turkey through Beirut, Lebanon, Sardinia, and in Marseilles where it is processed into heroin. You must realize the gigantic problem of interception. They have caught airline hostesses with heroin on some unmentionable parts of their body. They have caught in Lebanon an Ambassador from one of the Central American countries smuggling heroin into the United States. They hide it in ships, and in some of the most peculiar and most difficult places to find in packages, baggage, and so forth.

It is really remarkable that with the ports we have in the United States with no Coast Guard, no customs, and no narcotic agents, a lot more of this stuff does not come in.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why is it that they practically put out the red carpet—as you pass through customs—nobody interdicts you? The policy seems to have been almost in order to encourage tourism that there is no inspection.

Mr. CONTE. Let me answer that, if I may.

First of all, most of your narcotics seizures from overseas are made through informers and through tipsters. This is where you make your case. First of all, you must understand that the U.S. Government cannot go over there and arrest a person who intends to sell heroin in the United States. What he has to do is to work with the local police. As the chairman said, tons of heroin, marijuana, hashish, and cocaine has not come into the United States because of our law-enforcement agents. That is why I suppose heroin is so costly. But our agents have to work with the local police. They have to work with the French police and the Italian police and the Turkish police and the Lebanese police. They are the ones who have to make the arrest.

It is the American agent who really makes the case and hands it on a silver platter to the foreign police department. Then they make the arrest.

What we have done in this particular field is amazing.

Thailand, Laos, and Southeast Asia, have not been a great threat to the United States.

Most of it is coming into the United States from Turkey, some by way of Mexico.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, I will try to reply in several respects to the words of the gentleman from New York.

For a number of years I was engaged in the suppression of illegal narcotics. I was a supervisor of the narcotics squad of the State of New Jersey and worked very closely with the Treasury Department, many States, and in many nations.

First, Mr. Congressman, let me tell you, you are very fortunate in getting through customs without being inspected. I came through last week and they looked through my wife's lingerie. I guess our faces are a bit different in that respect. They detect me pretty well. I thought it was a pretty good inspection.

Mr. McCARTHY. Did you take that as a compliment?

Mr. HUNT. I sure did. I thought it was nice to be checked. I thought that at times they pass you through by virtue of the fact that you are a Member of Congress. Maybe you have the knowledge of how to get through those things.

In respect to narcotics, you talk about the poppies. Gentlemen, they do not carry the poppies around. A poppy comes through a bulb, an opium bulb. They take a three- or four-pronged piece of metal and lacerate the head of it so it exudes a white, gummy substance which we refer to as the opium tar. The workers in the field take this off ultimately into a barrel with dirt and everything else in it. The first rendering becomes what is known as the tar. It is rendered down to what we call opium tar, and from that comes the morphine base, which is further rendered and from the morphine base heroin is rendered. The chemical process reduces it to heroin, which is a white powder.

It is true that Turkey produces the bulk of our legal opium. However, some of the farmers there raise illegal quotas, and they smuggle it out across the border into Greece and other places, and the Turkish Government and the Greek Government have been trying for years to suppress this traffic. They have even planted mine fields at the border, but the smugglers drive sheep and goats across in front of them to explode the land mines. This has been going on since 1955, though I have campaigned against the traffic, around the French port of Marseilles. The bulk of the clandestine laboratories producing heroin are located there. We have had an increasing facility with the French police. We do maintain in Europe a force of narcotic agents who do an excellent job.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts said, it is very difficult, but we are moving in the right direction. It is not, however, that the smugglers have specially built automobiles with specially concealed appointments. They do have certain portions of women's garments where you might find padding, and the padding is something else coming out. There are many ways to smuggle, and it is very difficult.

The gentleman who was with me many years, Mr. Pacino, had all of Europe. He has now returned and is engaged in training agents. But let me tell you, in 1955 the United States of America depended upon 280 Federal agents to suppress the narcotics traffic in the entire world—280 men—and we couldn't get any more men. They would not give them to us.

Now we have the money coming out of our ears, but the tragedy is they have removed the detection processes from the Treasury Department and placed them in another department. It should be back in the Treasury Department so the narcotics agents and the customs agents can work hand-in-hand, the same as they used to, for a smooth-running, flowing operation.

If you want the truth of the matter, that is how it should be set up. You can talk about theory all day long. The thing we have to get down to are the basic fundamentals. We can suppress this traffic with the aid of the other nations. We can suppress it if we can come back once more to that type of operation with the customs and the narcotics agents in the same category.

There is no doubt in my mind that we have the finest group of men, and we can do it, but someone downtown must listen to us.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, may I have 3 uninterrupted minutes?

Mr. ROBISON. I am happy to yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman if he can keep it that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama. I was about to talk about the post office buildings and facilities for which there is such great need. We provided $269 million for postal public buildings in this bill, and yet that is just a drop in the bucket compared to what the post office really needs.

If ever there was an area that pointed up the need to go into a separate postal corporation with separate borrowing capacity, it is this area of facilities. We have to spend more money to build more modern buildings and update the equipment. There is not enough money in the Treasury of the United States to provide these facilities.

The Tax Court has been a subject I have been greatly interested in because of the small taxpayer. A couple of years ago I introduced legislation to try to give the small taxpayer his day in court without all the necessity for great legal proceedings. The Tax Court heard our plea and it has instituted the Small Tax Section for Taxpayers where claims of $1,000 or less are involved. It was reported to us in the hearings that this procedure is now working very well. The taxpayer who cannot afford a lawyer or who does not want to have to go through the great delays in tax cases can get an early hearing and fast decision through this procedure.

I am convinced the small taxpayer today is being treated much better and is being given greater opportunity to have his appeal heard and a decision rendered at an early date. I think the Tax Court should be commended for this procedure it has put into effect.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is a good bill. It is just about as tight as we could make it, considering the particular departments we are entrusted with. I urge its adoption.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would take this opportunity to reiterate my position in support of the authorization request for the Treasury Department's Consolidated Law Enforcement Center.

In a time marked by rising crime statistics, any effort, on any level, to provide better training and training facilities for law-enforcement officers must be welcomed by both beleaguered public officials and the public at large—victim of those statistics.

The proposed facility, which is a key in the President's program to improve the lot of law-enforcement officers, would provide a specialized central training complex for 21 Federal police agencies, including those under the Treasury Department.

The present, expanded facilities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Quantico, Va., could not be used for the specialized training programs spelled out for the proposed Law Enforcement Center. There is virtually no duplication between the proposed school complex and the established FBI facilities which are used to capacity.

The present facilities available for training of Treasury, Secret Service and customs agents are severely lacking and Treasury officials have expressed concern over the future prospects for training agents.

This same concern was voiced by the Warren Commission when it called for a prompt remedy to the problems encountered during the increasingly complex task of maintaining adequate protection for the President.

The proposed center would provide the Secret Service a course for motorcade training and a range area for teaching techniques of firing weapons from moving vehicles.

Enactment of the authorization in this bill will provide the funding necessary for the completion of the first phase of constructing and equipping the much-needed center and will narrow the gap between present training and future training afforded Federal law-enforcement agencies.

The training center will be located on about 60 acres of property northeast of the intersection of the Washington-Baltimore Parkway and Powder Mill Road near Beltsville, Md., in my congressional district. The facility will consist of a campus-like Center with modern classrooms, ranges, specialized training areas and equipment, dormitories, support facilities and services to accommodate 750 resident students at one time.

After an in-depth study of similar training requirements for other Federal agencies, it was concluded that it would be less costly and more effective to establish a single training center for all interested agencies under the administrative supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Having served as an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, I can appreciate the value of such training. However, even more important, I know, are the very evident reasons for urgency in getting this Center underway, especially today, when there is such a great need for more effective law enforcement. This urgency becomes even more apparent as the crime rate continues to rise. One of the solutions, which can be implemented soon by building this school, lies in giving optimum training to professional law-enforcement personnel.

Mr. RARICK. Mr. Chairman, the bill H.R. 16900 making appropriations for the Treasury, Post Office, Executive Office of the President, and others offers little encouragement in the showing of any fiscal responsibility needed to curb inflation.

With great deference to my colleagues on the committee, I simply have not heard anything to convince me that I am justified in voting to take this kind of money out of the pockets of my constituents.

I most certainly support law and order as well as security, yet I question any imperative need and any corresponding expense to the taxpayers of a prestigious $21.5 million Federal Law Enforcement Training Center at Beltsville, Md., or anywhere else. The country has armed forces—are we now preparing for a national police force?

The IRS was set up for revenue collection, yet in the measure at hand an appropriation of $645 million for "compliance" as compared with only $220 million for all the accounting and processing suggests plans for an aggressive tax collection program. Is the tax revolt here?

Nor does the Executive Office appropriations offer any example of restraint.

Operating expenses—entertainment	$1,100,000
White House salaries and expenses	8,550,000
Special assistant	700,000
Advisory Council	500,000
Intergovernmental relations	300,000
Special projects	1,500,000
Expenses of management improvement	350,000
Emergency fund for President	1,000,000
Bureau of Budget	13,000,000
Council of Economic Advisers	1,233,000
National Security Council	2,182,000

And none of these figures include the President's salary of $200,000 or his statutory expense allowance of $50,000.

Financially our country is in a deplorable condition. Few seem to worry about it, but my constituents do and are increasingly incensed with every new tax, every tax extension, and with every inflationary decrease in the purchasing power of their take-home pay. They cannot seem to rightfully understand why there are more taxpayers, more taxes paid and yet the cost of their Government continues to soar out of proportion.

I simply cannot, in good conscience, cast my people's one vote for these lavish funds to further escalate the bureaucracy. To cut out the fat we need to start somewhere, sometime. If enough of their Representatives start talking and voting the way the people are talking and will be voting we might even be able to let the surtax die a natural death this June.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. ROBISON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that the bill do pass. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. MONAGAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 16900) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered. The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 333, nays 3, not voting 94, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STEED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON RULES TO FILE CERTAIN REPORTS

Mr. STEED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file certain reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATIONS, 1971

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 16915) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Bow) and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 16915, with Mr. MURPHY of New York in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. ANDREWS) will be recognized for one-half hour, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Bow) will be recognized for one-half hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is the usual annual appropriation bill for the legislative branch of the Government for the next fiscal year commencing July 1. It contains appropriations for all activities except those of the Senate; it is the custom to leave those for the decision of the other body.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE BILL

The appropriations recommended total $346,649,230.

This recommendation is $9,394,055 below the budget requests. Not all of this represents savings. Over half is a deferral of two items for the Government Printing Office; the establishment of a proposed regional center for the Superintendent of Documents, and plans and specifications for a new plant.

The bill is $61,754,173 over fiscal year 1970 appropriations to date. However, there are pending supplementals totaling $13,375,525, which if allowed in full would reduce this figure to $48,378,648. Of this total increase, $22,000,000 is an addition to the Government Printing Office working capital revolving fund to help finance a larger volume of reimbursable business, and $15,610,000 is to begin construction of the James Madison Memorial Library Building. Funds are included throughout the bill to "annualize" the so-called third-step comparability pay raise—of 10.05 percent—that was effective July 1, 1969. No funds are included for the 6-percent pay raise that the House acted upon last Thursday and earlier today. Financing this increase will be handled in a supplemental appropriation bill at a later date.

MAJOR INCREASES AND DECREASES

Mr. Chairman, as is true each year, there are a number of increases and decreases in the many items in the bill, some of which are made according to requirements and direct actions of the House authorizing specific funds. The committee report summarizes the major increases and decreases, starting on page 3 and following through page 5, both as to the 1971 budget and changes from 1970 appropriations to date. I would refer you to those pages.

INCREASES OVER 1970

Some of the major items that have put this bill over 1970 are as follows:

First, $2,188,120 is to cover increased pay costs for House officers and employees effective July 1, 1969, and 17 additional positions for various offices under the Clerk of the House.

Second, $1,200,000 is to cover increased pay costs for Members' clerk hire.

Third, $1,060,000 is for Government contributions for House officers and employees directly related to the salary increases just noted.

Fourth, $1,083,000 is to cover the additional costs of official franked mail for the entire Congress, fiscal year 1969 over 1968.

Fifth, $15,610,000 is to initiate construction of the James Madison Memorial Library Building.

Sixth, $2,268,500 is to enable the Library of Congress to meet mandatory personnel costs, hire 25 additional employees under its main account, proceed with the preservation program, and continue automation studies.

Seventh, $1,700,000 is to cover the additional costs and increased requirements for congressional printing and binding.

Eighth, $1,732,000 is for the Superintendent of Documents.

Ninth, $22 million is for additional reimbursable working capital in the Government Printing Office revolving fund to meet increased volume of business as well as to allow certain necessary improvements to the plant.

Tenth, $10,712,000 is to enable the General Accounting Office to meet mandatory personnel costs and hire 175 additional employees.

HOUSE RESTAURANT

The House Restaurant is now operating under the direction of the Select Committee on the House Restaurant. That committee estimates a deficit of $248,000 in operations in 1970, which it currently anticipated may reach $270,000 in 1971. The bill provides that amount, as recommended by the select committee and the Architect of the Capitol.

The committee is also recommending the employment of a sanitarian to inspect and supervise the food service areas on Capitol Hill as recommended by the Attending Physician, and the two restaurant committees. He will be working under the supervision of the Attending Physician and on request will be available to inspect other public service areas on the Hill.

CONGRESSIONAL STUDENT INTERN PROGRAM

Mr. Chairman, the committee has recommended resumption of the congressional student intern program. The prohibition against the use of funds for the program in recent Legislative branch appropriation acts has been dropped and language is included to make the funds available immediately on enactment of the bill into law in order that the program may commence in June in accord with the terms of the authorizing resolution, which was House Resolution 416 of the 89th Congress, and regulations set up by the House Administration Committee. The bill also includes $300,000 for the program. This amount is the best estimate that the committee could make at this time and is based on past experience.

OFFICE OF THE ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

The committee has made a slight adjustment in the language of this appropriation to accord with a realignment proposed by the Architect in certain top positions in the office and it is explained in the report on page 7. I regret to report that Mr. Stewart, the Architect, is in the hospital. I wish him a speedy recovery. He has served in this capacity since 1954 and as I have said on previous occasions, in my opinion he has been subjected to a lot of unwarranted and unfair criticism. While not always agreeing with all of his recommendations, I have a high regard of his integrity.

EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL

No funds were requested for the west central front. Last year's bill provided $2,275,000, including $250,000 for the employment of independent, nongovernmental engineering and other services on the feasibility and cost of restoring the west front. The committee is advised that the Commission for Extension of the U.S. Capitol has contacted the American Society of Civil Engineers and also the deans of a number of schools of engineering throughout the country to secure the names of competent engineering firms who might be considered to study the feasibility of restoring the West walls.

The Architect of the Capitol advised the committee of evidence of new structural deterioration which points to the need for the study to get underway as soon as reasonably possible. The hearings on pages 439-461 include a number of drawings showing both old cracks and new ones that have occurred recently.

JAMES MADISON MEMORIAL BUILDING

The committee has recommended the $15,610,000 requested to commence construction and to secure the exterior stone for the superstructure. Legislation increasing the limit of cost to $90,000,000 was enacted on March 16, 1970. The need for this building is well known and has been reviewed in detail in various reports of this and other committees. The overcrowded conditions in the Library have existed for a good many years. Rental costs are now approximating $2,000,000.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

As I noted earlier, the committee has deferred two items requested by the Government Printing Office. The Superintendent of Documents requested $1,623,000 to establish a branch distribution center. The committee deferred action until this proposal has been acted upon by the Joint Committee on Printing. The budget also included a request of $3,934,000, for plans and specifications for a new Government Printing Office plant on the assumption that a site would be acquired. Inasmuch as this had not transpired, Mr. Harrison, who was still occupying the position of Public Printer at the time the committee took its action, asked that the estimate not be considered at this time.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Chairman, I have tried to touch the more significant matters in the bill. The committee report covers them in much more detail as do the printed hearings. We will try and answer any questions.

Mr. Chairman, before closing, I want to note the excellent cooperation from all concerned during the conduct of the hearings and in developing information on the various items in this bill. I have in mind the Clerk of the House, Mr. Jennings, and other House officers and officials; Mr. Campioli, the Acting Architect of the Capitol; Dr. Mumford, the Librarian; Mr. Harrison, the Public Printer; and the Comptroller General, Mr. Staats. They and their staffs have cooperated fully in every way. I believe the record of the committee hearings bears witness that the various items were generally well documented and well presented. We always appreciate full cooperation in securing orderly consideration and dispatch of the many items dealt with.

TRIBUTE TO DR. REIFEL

I want to say this is the last time that our distinguished colleague on the subcommittee on legislative branch appropriations will be helping us present this bill to you. I am referring to Dr. BEN REIFEL who has announced that he will not seek reelection after 38 years of distinguished public service to his State, his district, and his country. I want to say personally I will miss him. He has been a great member of the subcommittee for a number of years and rendered yeoman service. He is not only a good public official, but he is a good man. It is always a pleasure to be with him and I hope in his retirement he will enjoy continued happiness. Certainly, the subcommittee, the full committee, and entire House will miss him.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I want to join the gentleman in paying tribute to the fine record of service of the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. REIFEL).

I also want to commend the distinguished gentleman from Alabama for presenting this bill to the House of Representatives on the 13th of April.

It is true that, traditionally, this bill has been presented later in the session in order that some of the other appropriation bills might have the right of way, so to speak, especially because certain Members—such as the gentleman from Alabama—have important responsibilities on other subcommittees, and, therefore, hearings were held at a later date, usually, on the legislative appropriation bill.

So, Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Alabama for bringing this bill out early in the session.

I would point out that, last year, the amended budget of the President for fiscal 1970 was not submitted to the House until April 15. Today, 2 days before that date in 1970, we are presenting two bills to the House, and a third one tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

I again yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman and the members of his subcommittee, in my opinion, have done an excellent job and are due the thanks of the House.

Of course, this bill provides for the salaries of Members and employees of the House, for the Library of Congress, the Architect of the Capitol, and many other purposes.

I wanted to ask the gentleman if he is thoroughly in accord with the actions taken by the Committee on Appropriations in providing the additional funds over last year for the General Accounting Office. The General Accounting Office is an arm of the Congress. They have several thousand employees who are working in an effort to prevent waste and to promote efficiency in the operation of the Government. I believe this bill provides about 175 additional employees for the General Accounting Office.

Is the gentleman, in his study of the work of the General Accounting Office, satisfied that this organization is doing a good job for the taxpayer in trying to promote efficiency and economy and avoiding mistakes wherever this can reasonably be done as a result of their work?

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. I will say to my chairman that the committee was unanimous in its conclusion that additional positions are needed, and also in the thought that the General Accounting Office is doing a good job.

If you will read the hearings you will find that the General Accounting Office is responsible for approximately $188 million in savings to the Government, which is about 2½ times the total cost of operating the Office. The General Accounting Office is like a policeman on the beat.

Now, that saving is pinpointed in the hearings, and if I remember correctly, amounts to about $20 million in cash that they have recovered for overcharges against the Government, and most of it results in savings by the Government agencies putting into practice suggestions made by the General Accounting Office.

I do not think there is any question but that the General Accounting Office is doing a good job. As the gentleman well knows, Government expenditures are increasing year by year and I continually hope that we can see the end in sight. But so far we have not. And the more money the Government agencies spend the more need there is to have, figuratively speaking, that policeman on the beat. And the General Accounting Office will make them do right, in many instances catch them and if they do wrong see they are punished, and then collect the money that the Government otherwise would not get.

So, answering the gentleman's question, I think the General Accounting Office is doing a good job.

Many of these positions will no doubt be assigned to supervise military expenditures. As the gentleman knows, that is a field that is very fertile for investigation and scrutiny and many of the savings that the General Accounting Office accounts for comes from the area of military expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. ANDREWS) has consumed 16 minutes.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. ANDREWS), has fully explained this bill and has done a magnificent job in handling the hearings and explanation here on the floor. There is little that I can add to what the gentleman from Alabama has said.

I might repeat that the 1970 level for this bill was $284.9 million. The 1971 budget was $356 million, and this bill totals $346.6 million. This is $61.7 million more than was provided for these items in 1970, and $9.4 million less than was requested in the budget.

The increase over last year includes $12.8 million for the Library of Congress, Madison Annex Building, and provides for a necessary increase in the Government Printing Office revolving fund of $22 million.

The bill also provides for 175 additional employees for the GAO. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama that they were necessary to undertake the additional duties we have assigned to the GAO in the various areas of the Government.

The bill also provides for summer interns. I might say that in the committee I voted against this program, but it is here, and it may be the subject of further discussion later on.

Mr. Chairman, I would like also to join the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. MAHON) in paying my respects to BEN REIFEL, who will retire at the end of this session. Dr. REIFEL, as you know, was born in a log cabin to a Sioux Indian mother and a German-American father. He went on to earn a doctor of philosophy degree in public administration from Harvard University. He has devoted his life to Government, and much of it to the welfare of the Indian population of our Nation. I feel quite certain that when BEN REIFEL leaves these Halls, he will continue his efforts on behalf of the American Indian. He has been a faithful member of both the subcommittee and the full committee, and highly responsible to his duties here on the floor. Truly, we shall miss BEN REIFEL in this House of Representatives.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I wish to join in the remarks of my colleague from Ohio. We will miss BEN very much. As one who has served on this committee with BEN REIFEL, I know of the very great contribution he has made to the activities of the committee, not only in terms of the knowledge that he has brought to the committee, but the fine, warm, personal traits that identify him. It was a pleasure to work with him, and I wish to join the gentleman from Ohio in wishing him a very happy retirement and express the hope that he will come back to see us often.

Mr. BOW. I appreciate very much what the gentleman has said about our friend. He has been an intelligent and delightful companion, and I know of no one who has worked harder to achieve the success that he enjoys today than our colleague from South Dakota, BEN REIFEL.

Mr. KEITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KEITH. I, too, wish to join in paying tribute to this fine American soldier, statesman, and public servant. He is one of the most delightful Members of our Congress. He and his family will be very much missed from our Washington scene, but I know his constituents and neighbors in South Dakota will be more than pleased to have him again in their midst for 365 days a year.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE).

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I think it only fitting that I make a few remarks about our "knights in blue"—I refer of course to none other than the U.S. Capitol Police.

This is truly a unique force. This is not a blanket indictment of our police force, but rather an indictment of the system.

It is estimated that the Capitol Police will cost the taxpayers $5.8 million in fiscal 1971. That is a lot of money, and I think we ought to see whether it is being wisely spent.

What kind of police force is this?

Well, before answering that, let me tell you a little story about my car. I left it in the Cannon Garage over the Easter recess—under the careful watch of the U.S. Capitol Police. Lo and behold, I returned to find that someone had taken the stereo system right out of the locked car. I repeat the car was locked and presumably being looked after by those old hawkeyes, the Capitol Police.

This, of course, is not the first time that something has been stolen inside the Cannon Garage, and the Hill itself is no stranger to crime. Last week at page 10751 of the RECORD, Senator MANSFIELD reported that two pages had been assaulted, mugged, and in one instance robbed in the vicinity of the Capitol.

There are repeated thefts on the streets. There are repeated thefts in the buildings. And there are repeated thefts right in our offices.

Pocketbooks are stolen. Radios are stolen. Money is stolen. Automobiles are stolen. You name it, and the Capitol Police have a record of that item being stolen.

And the crime does not end with theft. Senator MANSFIELD mentioned the two pages. A few weeks back, a relative of the Speaker was beaten and robbed on Pennsylvania Avenue a few blocks from here. And several years ago a Congressman was stabbed in the Longworth Building.

This, however, was not the first time that a stereo had been stolen from my vehicle in the Cannon Garage. Nor was it the second time. It was—you guessed it—the third time.

My initial reaction was one of anger, as it had been on the other two occasions. After all, one Capitol Policeman is supposed to be on duty inside the Cannon Garage, and another outside the garage at all times from Monday through Friday. On Saturdays and Sundays, one officer tackles both inside and outside. It often seems, as these gentlemen congregate to discuss the events of the day, that more than one is around.

Nonetheless, I decided this time to look into the matter a bit further. I wanted to see if the U.S. Capitol Police were perhaps being overworked.

I checked with the police force back in my hometown of Pittsfield, Mass., a town of about 60,000. I came up with some interesting data.

To begin with, the Pittsfield force totals 86 men. The Capitol force totals 665, including 49 from the Metropolitan Police Department, or over eight times the figure for Pittsfield.

Moreover, the salaries in Pittsfield total $614,207 and range from $6,900 to $7,900. The salaries for the Capitol police will run about $4.8 million in 1971, with privates getting $7,665; sergeants getting $10,293; lieutenants getting $12,483; and captains getting $14,893.

The Pittsfield Police cover 42.3 square miles, or 27,072 acres. The Capitol Police cover 155 acres plus the Capitol and the House and Senate Office Buildings. To get around this monumental job, the Capitol Police need five cars, including one for the Chief. The Pittsfield Police need a lot more—15 cars, two ambulances, one wagon, three motorcycles, and two boats.

But Pittsfield cannot claim the distinction of having six canine privates, also known as dogs.

The U.S. Capitol Police spend $134,000 on other equipment, including $21,500 for laundry and dry cleaning and $81,700 for uniforms. Pittsfield spends $35,210, including only $9,410 for uniforms.

I have a list of crimes in Pittsfield, but there is no sense using them because the Capitol Police would not give me similar information.

I think this sketchy comparison raises some serious questions about the efficiency of the Capitol Police. The force here should be the best in the world. It should be the best in every respect—in appearance, in mannerism, in decorum, and in effectiveness.

I feel this way because Congress and the Hill are the center of the world, and people from throughout the Nation and the globe come here to visit. I want them to see a sharp, efficient outfit. I want us to have the finest anywhere.

In order to be the best, a lot of changes are going to have to be made. There should be some kind of review board that would set minimum standards for the Capitol Police—and for all the Capitol Police, not just the majority who are now doing a commendable job.

There should be specialized training, perhaps like other Federal enforcement agencies get. Maybe they could use the new Law Enforcement Training Center we discussed in the Treasury bill earlier today. But they must have topnotch training.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleagues will join me in calling for the best Capitol Police force in the world.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend from Alabama.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. I want to say to my friend from Massachusetts, he has made a most persuasive argument. It is eloquent and factual, and I agree with him in most respects.

I wish the gentleman would make that argument before the Committee on House Administration, because that is the committee which authorizes this police army the gentleman refers to.

We have some good policemen on Capitol Hill. We need them here. The gentleman knows that from time to time thousands of people converge on this Capitol, and they are not tourists. They are so-called lobbyists. The police have to handle them.

There was a period 2 or 3 weeks ago when the members of the police force, or many of them, were on duty 24 hours around the clock. The Capitol was in danger. The building was in danger. The Members of Congress were in danger.

There are a number of so-called patronage policemen on that list of 650 some odd the gentleman mentioned.

Some of them are not in any sense of the word policemen. You see them at a desk. They are studying law. Some of them are studying medicine. And it has been that way for years. I am trying to tell the gentleman that our committee, this legislative appropriations subcommittee, does not have any jurisdiction over the number to be employed. All of them are authorized by resolutions that are presented to the House and usually these resolutions pass the House unanimously.

Mr. CONTE. If the gentleman will allow me to, I will answer him.

Certainly we have to start somewhere. I talked about this on the floor on several occasions. This is not a blanket indictment of all the policemen on the Hill. There are some good ones. But let me tell you that I will appear before the Committee on House Administration if I can find out when they are holding hearings on this matter. I will not vote again for this, or I will demand a rollcall vote and move to recommit the bill if they ask for any additional policemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CONTE. You say they need this large amount of policemen for lobbyists. I know what you mean when demonstrators come here, but they do not come here every day. What do they do the rest of the time?

The other thing I want to say is that we need better security here. You try this. I have done it myself. Go into any one of these garages. You could go in with a truck and strip down every car and walk out, and nobody will say a word to you.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Our committee used to receive a lot of complaints on the operation of the garages. We had and have no jurisdiction over the garages. Two or three years ago the garages were supervised by the Architect's office. Our committee suggested that a select committee be appointed to look after the garage affairs. That was done. Since that time we have received very few complaints. The gentleman from California (Mr. SISK), the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GROSS), and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HAYS) are on that committee. I would suggest that if the gentleman has concrete evidence of things happening in the garages, he should take them up with the members of that select committee.

Mr. CONTE. I want to answer the gentleman on that. They are merely in charge of the attendants. They have nothing to do with the police. I talked to Mr. HAYS about it earlier. What we have to have is better security. Congressmen and secretaries and other employees should have keys and there should be locks on every one of those doors, at least in the Cannon Building. There should be someone to check every car in and out.

Now let me continue further. You say that there is no complaint made about this. Since I have told people that this happened to me, I have had more Congressmen come up and tell me the same thing. The Congressman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL) had three stereo sets stolen. The police told me themselves that that week they had six stereos stolen. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MINSHALL) had one of his secretaries robbed. We had five secretaries robbed in our hallway. They just walked in, picked up the wallet, took the money out, and ran. We had a girl, the secretary of Congressman BECKER, who was robbed and stabbed right in the Catholic Church behind the Cannon Building while she was praying.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. I remember that unfortunate occasion.

Mr. CONTE. Do not tell me about complaints. There are plenty of complaints but they are difficult to get a compilation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. I wish the gentleman would read the language of the bill on page 12 regarding standards for police appointees. We are trying to help you. We want a good police force, but I can say to you that it is my honest opinion, if you put the best police force in America up here, you cannot stop crime, because this Capitol Hill is a part of Washington, D.C., and the gentleman well knows it is the crime capital of the world.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

I agree with much that has been said here, but I do not think we should let this discussion pass without also paying tribute to some of the police who work here. I think Captain Powell, the Chief of the Capitol Police, does an excellent job. He is trying his best to build an effective police force. In my opinion, if we could let him handle the entire responsibility, a better job would be done. I also believe that the Metropolitan Police assigned here—and one does not see much of them because many are plainclothesmen—do an excellent job. Many of our police perform well. However, I agree that we should be concerned, and I hope the Members of this House will do something to bring about a completely professional police force. In the meantime, I do not believe we should condemn all of those now on our police force here on Capitol Hill.

Mr. PIRNIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PIRNIE. I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I would like to commend the gentleman for the voice of reason which he has just introduced into these comments.

No doubt there are conditions which prevail here on the Hill which we regret to see and which should be improved. However, I am very sure that there is a danger of overstating the case. For instance, reference was made to the unfortunate incident in the church. If we were to have a police force of any size, I am confident it would not be on duty all the time within the edifice of the churches around here. But I do feel that we have some very loyal, efficient, and competent men who are faithful to their task and who desire to be responsive to the needs of the Congress.

If we have specific suggestions which we wish to make, I believe, as the chairman has indicated, he would like the House Administration Committee advised as to those recommendations and I join in that approach.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. PIRNIE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, and if we have specific recommendations, I am sure we will have a courteous hearing and I am sure if those recommendations are meritorious they will be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, we are anxious to have Capitol Hill safe not only for those who work here but for those who may visit our Capitol. Any constructive action which can be taken I shall be very glad to support. But I do not think we wish to convey the impression that we have so much inefficiency, indifference, and incompetency.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOW. I do think we have about exhausted this issue, but go ahead.

Mr. CONTE. The gentleman from New York, if he had been around here in the past few years when we have debated this bill, he would have heard me make these complaints. I have made them repeatedly for the last 3 or 4 years. If the gentleman will recall, I said that this is not a blanket indictment of the police force. There are good policemen. It is a blanket indictment of the system. I would say to those who go home and scream about law and order that this is our chance to start right here.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SISK).

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to get into this, but statements have been made by my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), that I think do require some comment.

I am not here taking any personal exception to any of the comments. I recognize that things are not perfect here by any means. But I do want to say that if a great many of the comments that the gentleman from Massachusetts made about robberies having occurred here in the garages and even on the Capitol Grounds recently, they have not been reported, because I happen to have a complete breakdown of all categories of crime on the Capitol Grounds for the entire year. This is for the year 1969 and also for 1 month of 1970. They simply do not show on the record.

With reference to the gentleman's theft of the stereo, I believe recently, I heard about it for the first time last Friday morning in the garage.

I discussed it with the superintendent of our garage, Mr. Michael Preloh, who I think is doing a very excellent job. But I would just like to cite a few statistics, and I understand we have very limited time, but for example, for the entire year 1969—and I am not here to carry on any fight, necessarily, for the Capitol Police Force, but I do believe that basically they do an excellent job. At the present time they have on board 585 men, and of this moment I might say that 365 of the men are professionals. We have been moving toward a professional force, and are basically doing a good job, but for the entire year 1969 let us take a look at criminal homicides. In the District there were 287, and none in the Capitol.

Manslaughter, there were 28 in the District and none in the Capitol. Rape by force, there were 162 in the District and none in the Capitol.

Assault to rape, there were 41 attempts in the District and none on the Capitol Grounds.

Robbery, in the District there were 12,366 last year, and 19 on the Capitol Grounds.

Assault with a deadly weapon, there were 3,477 instances in the District and one for the entire year for the Capitol Grounds.

Aggravated assault, 132 in the District, none in the Capitol.

Assaults not aggravated, there were over 2,000 in the District and five on Capitol Grounds.

Burglary total, under that category there were zero at the Capitol.

Forcible entry, there were 21,028 in the District and none on Capitol Grounds.

Unlawful entry, there were 455 in the District and on the Capitol Grounds during 1969 there were zero.

Attempted forcible entry, there were 1,450 in the District and during 1969 there were zero on the Capitol Grounds.

And then larceny; that is, in cases of thefts over $50, there were 11,508 in the District and 33 at the Capitol.

And while I will agree that is more than there should have been possibly, but at the same time, as I say, there were over 11,500 in the District of Columbia as a whole.

Then larceny under $50, there were over 20,000 cases in the District of Columbia, and 222 on the Capitol Grounds.

Auto thefts for the entire year for last year on the Capitol Grounds, there were 26, as against 11,000 in the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, I will take further time under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. REID of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would merely wish to indicate my strong support for the funds provided in this bill for the congressional student intern program.

Dropping the prohibition against the use of such funds is a positive step that will indicate to young men and women that the Congress does respect and count on their assistance and point of view. Many student interns perform valuable services for Members and their staffs and, as important, provide a fresh outlook, a link with a large segment of the American population which is often ahead of its Government.

While some colleges and universities are able to provide financial support for students working for the Congress during the summer, many students have been missing out on this experience because they had to have summer income either to meet expenses or to help with next year's tuition. I am indeed pleased that financial barriers will no longer stand in the way of promising students who wish to learn more about their Government at first hand.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. ANDREWS), the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, will be happy to hear that I have no amendment to offer today. He surely recalls my efforts in the past to amend the legislative appropriations bill to continue the congressional student intern program. Fortunately, no such effort is required today as the Committee on Appropriations has recommended the resumption of this program.

During the summer months, hundreds of students come to Washington from all sections of this country to work in congressional offices, and it has been my experience that the congressional student intern program has served as a great benefit to both students and Congressmen alike. I have found interns to be of valuable assistance in all tasks, from the most rudimentary to the most intricate.

More importantly, this experience is a highly valuable one for interns. As they observe our Government in action, the words they have read in books turn into reality.

For the last two summers, the Congress has not appropriated funds to compensate these interns for their living expenses. The real reason that these funds were eliminated was because Members of the House did not like the idea of interns expressing doubts about our Vietnam policy. I considered this congressional response to concerned, committed young men and women ill advised. Rather than reacting adversely to constructive criticism, Congress should have welcomed it. After all, the very purpose of education is to encourage thought and informed participation in our governmental processes. These interns who expressed their misgivings about the war in Vietnam—totally justified misgivings to my mind—represented those very qualities which we should be looking for in our youth, and those very ends for which education should strive.

A mark of the commitment of the young men and women who come to Washington each summer to labor industriously in congressional offices is the fact that, according to a survey taken by our distinguished colleague from California (Mr. MOSS), 540 legislative interns worked in Members' offices this past summer. They were dependent on personal funds, or compensation from their college or the Member for whom they worked, to sustain them. Since many offices cannot afford to pay these youths, summer interns for the past 2 years have had to subsist on meager amounts.

What is more, many youths who simply could not afford to come to Washington and live here for several weeks have been unable to participate in the internship program. Without the $75 a week authorized in the 89th Congress in House Resolution 416, and appropriated by the 1971 legislative branch appropriation bill, it would be impossible for all students to have an equal opportunity for summer internship jobs; many extremely able and deserving students would not be able to participate in this program.

The congressional student intern program should be viewed as an investment in the future of this Nation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

Mr. LANGEN. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as having been read and be open for amendment at any point and points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order?

Are there any amendments?

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take the time of the House to delay further the passage of this bill which I assume is imminent. But I want to just complete briefly the comments I had here, as I said not necessarily just as to the police force but there has been a good deal of discussion about further protection in the garages.

I want to say this in connection with the comments made by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), I agree with him that we do need all the protection and security we can get in the garages as well as on the Capitol Grounds. Here again, if we recognize what we are talking about, I suppose we could do the kind of policing job within these garages that maybe would make it absolutely a cinch so far as security is concerned. In just analyzing the problems that we have, even with the underground, this is not counting the some 2,000 spots that we have to be concerned about on the outside parking lots, I did a quick calculation and came up with a figure that we need at least another 50 men on the police force to do the kind of job that some people have indicated we should do in connection with keeping policemen at various levels of these garages.

Again I suppose we could double that or cut it in half depending on how far we want to go to get that security.

The point I want to make to my good friend, and I am not here seeking an argument with him, is just how much security do we want? Because frankly we have had very, very rarely any report of either theft or of any indiscretion within the garages. And if these things exist we are not getting reports of them and naturally we want to know.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Can the gentleman tell me how many policemen we had here on the force 10 years ago?

Mr. SISK. I am sure there is a record available. I would guess it would be probably somewhere within 150 or 200 of what we have now—I am not sure.

Mr. CONTE. It might be less than that.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to line 19 on page 12 of the bill. This committee has done all that we could to try to get a professional police force on Capitol Hill.

I would like to read the provision on page 12, line 19:

No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be paid as compensation to any person appointed after June 30, 1935, as an officer or member of the Capitol Police who does not meet the standards to be prescribed for such appointees by the Capitol Police Board:

We have striven through the years in trying to get a professional force on this Hill.

Mr. SISK. If the gentleman will let me comment there. I just happened to take the time to get a breakdown as I indicated earlier, as of this morning we have 368 professional policemen on the present force. That means there were approximately 220 patronage spots and of those, approximately 126 students.

I may just say this, because of another little housekeeping job that I get involved in occasionally, I have been getting some beefs from Members of Congress because we are insisting on their patronage policemen working rather than studying, and orders have been handed down that these men must be available for police duty, and they cannot study on the job in the future after the end of this semester. So we have had to say, in essence, that they can no longer expect to be on the police force and carry a full college load.

As I have said, we have had complaints on this that what we are doing is to destroy the ability of their political patronage to continue to go to college. Unfortunately, again this is a part of the step to improve security and very simply they cannot work and cannot carry the full college load and at the same time be good policemen 7 hours a day.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. SISK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CONTE. I certainly appreciate the gentleman's argument. I think everyone thus far in the debate has missed my point. My point is that I am not condemning the vast majority of Capitol policemen who are doing a fine job. Rather, I am condemning the system itself, and that is the point I have been trying to make all day. However, I challenge the figure used by the gentleman from California because I see a total of 665 on page 100 of the hearings.

Mr. SISK. That is the authorized strength.

Mr. CONTE. Let me tell you what is in this budget. As I just noted, a total number of 665 is shown on page 100 of the hearings. The total cost is shown on page 96 as $5.8 million, of which $2.7 million is for House salaries and $2.0 million for Senate salaries. That is the authorized strength. Whether they are hired or not I do not know, but that is what is authorized. I think if you go back and check the records you will find that this force has increased, and the gentleman himself admits that half of them are still under patronage.

Mr. SISK. About a third of them, approximately.

Mr. CONTE. About 200.

Mr. SISK. Approximately 220 at the moment.

Mr. CONTE. That is in the House, is it not?

Mr. SISK. No; this is the entire number I am talking about.

Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion that I appreciate the desire for security by all Members and I join in this desire. It is my firm conviction that when we look at the broad picture we will find the Capitol police force, their officers and Chief Powell are all doing an outstanding job. The same thing is true of Mike Preloh, garage superintendent and his staff of people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. SISK) has expired.

Mr. REIFEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized.

Mr. REIFEL. I shall not take more than 30 seconds. I wish to commend the ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Bow) for pointing out our wholehearted support of the Chief of Police, and the wonderful job he has done. The chairman of our subcommittee (Mr. ANDREWS) has emphasized this again and again in our committee meetings. I am glad that both have set the record straight as far as the professional police force and the leadership of our Chief are concerned. I want to commend both of them, Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. Bow, for their remarks concerning our capable police force.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT) having assumed the chair, Mr. MURPHY of New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 16915) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1971, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed, and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATION FOR OUR RETIRED MILITARY

(Mr. VAN DEERLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Mr. Speaker, a little more than 7 months ago—on September 11, 1969—I took the floor to talk about a matter of concern to our retired military. I observed that a full year had then passed since Mr. Nixon, as a candidate, made these people a firm and specific promise, "At the earliest possible time" as President, he vowed he would propose legislation permitting retirees who left the service before June 1, 1958, to recompute their benefits in line with increases subsequently awarded to active-duty personnel.

Although it pained me to do so, Mr. Speaker, I pointed out in September that Mr. Nixon had by this time been 8 months in office without once mentioning the recomputation matter.

To refresh the memory of colleagues, let me recall the rather conspicuous circumstances under which Candidate Nixon committed himself less than 8 weeks before the presidential election. In its October 1968 issue, the Retired Officer carried a telegram from Mr. Nixon to Maj. Gen. W. Preston Corderman, president of the Retired Officers Association. Dated September 13, 1969, it said in part:

Retired military personnel have been unjustly treated because of the failure of the Administration and the Democratic-controlled Congress to remedy the growing disparity between active duty and retired military pay. This unfair discrimination is wholly contrary to the long established principle of equalizing retired pay with existing active duty pay for the same grade or rank. It is a break of faith. . . . An intolerable and unfair burden for our retired military.

I intend to urge the Congress to remedy this injustice at the earliest possible time.

Well, Mr. Speaker, almost 15 months have now passed since Mr. Nixon raised his right hand on the east steps of the Capitol. And thousands of retired fighting men in my San Diego district, as elsewhere across the land, are still waiting for that first word from the President indicating he meant what he said at campaign time.

I hope they will not feel too disappointed by an explanation given them recently by our friend and colleague Rogers Morton, chairman of the Republican National Committee. Responding to an inquiry from Eugene, Oreg., Mr. Morton dispatched the following letter on March 25:

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE,

Maj. LAMAR PEEPLES,
Eugene, Oreg.

DEAR MAJOR PEEPLES: This will acknowledge your letter of March 18 regarding your comments relative to President Nixon's Campaign promises concerning the inequities in retired military pay.

I do wish to assure you that the President has not forgotten his promises. We do appreciate, however, that it is not going to be possible for the President to solve all problems which he inherited from two previous Democratic Administrations and also a Democratically controlled Congress within one year of his Administration.

It has been my good fortune to have known our distinguished President over a period of years, and I have great faith in his sense of integrity and judgment. I believe that decisions he has made and will make give to all of us a great and better America.

Therefore, may I take this privilege that you extend additional time to the President to accomplish the promises he had made in the course of his campaign. In other words, I do hope you will keep the faith in our distinguished President.

Yours sincerely,

ROGERS C. B. MORTON,
Chairman.

The military life teaches patience, Mr. Speaker. But I suspect there may be some among the ranks of the retired who will be churlish enough to take issue with Mr. Morton. They will point out that Mr. Nixon did not restrict nor circumscribe his campaign pledge in the manner now suggested by his party chairman. The promised correction of injustice to retirees was not made contingent upon first solving all other problems his administration faces. The Nixon telegram indicated a determination to undo the evil of two Democratic administrations—not to be awed and immobilized by it.

With an optimism which I feel certain was unjustified, Chairman Morton would soothe the long-suffering retirees with an injunction made famous by another of our more prominent colleagues. He admonishes them to "keep the faith."

Mr. Nixon offered them hope. Mr. Morton invokes faith. Let us pray for administration action before the career military must ask charity.

THE 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE KATYN FOREST MASSACRE

(Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 1943 the Big Three were too preoccupied with the tasks of winning the war and minimizing friction between the Allies to give much attention to reports of torture and massacre which came from the eastern front. It was felt that questions which might prejudice Allied cooperation should be postponed until after the war.

But Nazi Germany chose to expose one decisive incident of massacre. April 13, 1943, Radio Berlin announced the discovery of the mass graves of thousands of Polish officers who had been methodically executed by a pistol shot in the back of the head and buried in Katyn Forest, near the Soviet city of Smolensk. The broadcast attributed to typical "Jewish-Bolshevik bestiality" the over 4,000 victims in the graves. In reporting the discovery of the graves, Germany uncovered a great international crime which altered postwar history.

All parties concerned with the crime immediately claimed innocence. In accusing the Soviets of the murder of thousands of Poles, the Germans, guilty of similar crimes in the Warsaw ghetto and elsewhere, tried to turn Polish wrath against the Russians. The Soviets, in turn, blamed the Germans, charging that the Poles were taken prisoner by the Nazis when Germany invaded Russia in 1941. The United States remained publicly silent for fear of alienating the Russians during a crucial period of fighting on the eastern front. Questions of why certain files and reports on the crime at Katyn disappeared or were suppressed were left to be answered by congressional investigation conducted years later.

But the announcement over Radio Berlin had a special significance for the Poles themselves. For the thousands of Poles buried at Katyn represented the elite of the Polish military and civilian intelligentsia who would have provided the leadership of a future independent Poland. Regardless of who committed this appalling crime, Poland was forever deprived of the talents of its victims.

The majority of subsequent investigations have attributed the atrocious crime at Katyn to the Russians. The Poles were sure that the Soviet guilt of Katyn exposed the Soviet purpose to replace the independent Polish state with a Soviet-dominated government—and in this they were right—for it was such a government that Moscow eventually established in Warsaw.

It is unfortunate that Poland today still suffers under repressive Soviet domination. Therefore, on the 30th anniversary of the brutal Katyn Forest massacre, it is fitting that we not only honor the memory of those courageous victims, but also that we rededicate ourselves to the cause of a completely free and independent Poland. We in the Congress shall continue to do all that we can in the days ahead to sustain the hope for a Poland free from Communist bondage.

On this occasion, I want to commend the Polish-Americans in my own Seventh Illinois Congressional District, as well as throughout the United States, for their devotion to this just cause as well as for the distinguished patriotic service they have rendered to America. In particular, I want to mention Aloysius A. Mazewski, president, Polish-American Congress and Polish National Alliance, as well as his associates in these outstanding Polish-American organizations, for organizing in Chicago a 30th anniversary observance of the Katyn Forest massacre.

I would like to include at this point in the RECORD, the program for this observance which took place on Sunday, April 12, at the Lane Technical High School auditorium in Chicago, as well as an editorial from the April 11 edition of the Polish-American commemorating the tragic event.

The program and article follow:

PROGRAM OF THE POLISH-AMERICAN CONGRESS

10:30 a.m. Distinguished Guests are requested to assemble at the Five Holy Martyrs Parish Rectory, 4327 South Richmond Avenue, for participation in the Procession to the church.

11:00 a.m. Mass for the repose of the Katyn Massacre victims offered by Most Reverend Bishop Alfred Abramowicz.

12:00 noon Service for the victims at the Parish War Memorial. Prayers will be offered by Most Reverend Bishop Jaroslaw Gabro, Rabbi David Graubart, D.D., Ph. D., and Most Reverend Bishop Alfred Abramowicz, D.D.

12:30 p.m. Luncheon for Distinguished Guests at the Parish Hall. Invocation by Reverend Nyika Bela, D.D.

3:00 p.m. Commemorative Program at Lane Technical High School Auditorium, Western and Addison.

Invocation—Most Reverend Bishop Vincent Brizgys.

Remarks—Aloysius A. Mazewski, President, Polish-American Congress and Polish National Alliance and Honorable Roman C. Pucinski, M.C.

Principal Speaker—Colonel John Van Vliet, U.S. Army, Ret. American eyewitness at the massacre site.

Prayers for the victims—Most Reverend Bishop Franciszek Rowinski and Rabbi David Graubart, D.D., Ph. D.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF KATYN FOREST

Thirty years ago, in 1940, the Soviets, still as friends of Poland, murdered 10,000 Polish officers in the black chasms of Katyn Forest in Soviet Russia. They blamed it upon the Nazis later on, but for once Hitler was not to blame.

This Sunday will mark thirty years since that horrible event. Thirty years is a generation, but it is not long enough for the world to forget. This is an atrocity which must be forgiven, as all sins of our neighbors must be, but that does not, in any way mean, that it should be forgotten, or that information about it should be suppressed from those who are ignorant.

Poland, today, is in a dire situation. Though supposedly a self-determining country, everyone knows that it is run by the Soviets. Poland can, therefore, protest Katyn indirectly—by protesting the paralleled atrocities of the Germans. But clearly, such a protest is not enough, and must somehow be expanded and perpetrated.

In view of this situation, it is the Free World which should take up the task of memory which Poland cannot do. Unfortunately most of the Free World has either forgotten about the Katyn Massacre, or else chooses not to remember, or even, is ignorant of that world-shaking event. It is therefore, up to Polonia in Chicago and the other concentrations of Poles and Polish-descendants from around the world outside of Poland to decide upon action in this matter, and to carry it out.

Chicago is doing something, by having a public commemoration of Katyn this Sunday. But this little thing is not enough.

The action with regard to commemoration of the Katyn atrocity must not limit itself to just one day. Thirty years of remembering is enough to warrant a longer public recognition of that horrible fact.

Many people, unused to horror in their daily lives, may protest an activity which would lead to impress upon them what happened at Katyn. But if we are to maintain the proper perspective of the Russians (who at the present time are trying to get closer to the United States) we cannot forget what they have done among others to Poland—a country which, despite its present political situation, was, is, and will be at heart an ally of the United States.

It is therefore, we feel, very much in the interest of Polonia to band together on this project. We must do it together, and we must do it now, and do it well, if it is to have any serious repercussions in this country and elsewhere, if it is to become as meaningful a historical fact as it is in actuality. Its importance, today, does not lie in the number of Poles shot there; but in what such a deed says of the people who executed it.

Polonia, especially Chicago's Polonia, with its wonderful resources, both in television, radio, and the press, should outline a project for itself, and carry it out consequentially.

There should be a week, or perhaps even a month, during which, regularly, the Polish-American press, radio and television would inform its public about the significant details of the Katyn massacre and related deeds, of the Soviets. It should be a project which would concentrate not only on presentation of facts, but also on the repetition of them, in suitable intervals, so that the listeners, viewers and readers would be permanently impressed.

In order not to jeopardize the truth, a research committee should be set up in Polonia which would be composed of scholars who would research the matter of the Katyn Forest Massacre, and would provide the news and entertainment media with the appropriate information, verified and worked out in detail.

Thus, the news and entertainment media of Polonia, and even of American society, would be provided with the truth, which could then be effectively presented. In this way, Polonia and Poland would be assured of proper results in informing the world of the importance of Katyn Forest.

PLIGHT OF FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY IN AMERICA

(Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Mr.

Speaker, I would like at this time to call the attention of the Members of the House to the plight of the footwear industry in America.

I have in my hand a letter from John R. Evans & Co., of Camden, N.J., signed by Paul B. Kurtz, president.

In the letter he states:

JOHN R. EVANS & Co.,
Camden, N.J., April 10, 1970.

HON. JAMES A. BURKE,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BURKE: Some time ago I wrote to various members of Congress concerning the impact of shoe and leather imports on domestic leather and footwear products industries, seeking an Orderly Marketing approach to this ever-increasing problem. My concern was echoed by letters from our employees and their union representatives.

Replies to these letters showed sympathy, but very little action.

Since that time this company, a large and important tanner of kid and kangaroo leathers, has announced its intention to liquidate, as per the enclosed copy of my letter which went out to about 150 hourly employees this past February. The import situation, to be very candid, was only one of a number of factors that led to this painful decision, but it was a very important one.

It is our understanding (and fervent hope) that the question of a shift in our foreign trade policy is and will continue to be hotly debated in the House Ways and Means Committee this month, and that this debate will result in finding a way to cope with the increasing amount of imports from labor-intensive industries. Any relief will be too late to help our particular situation, but as a good (?) example of what is happening I would hope that our story would have some effect in obtaining some positive action to help those in our related industries that are left to keep up the struggle. To my way of thinking, this help should be in the form of realistic import quotas, not some form of burial allowance. I know President Nixon has been opposed to restrictions on trade as has the majority of the House and Senate. Yet it seems to me that the Administration is now more willing to listen to reason and a majority of the Congress may be willing to put this vital question to a test. Will you do what you can to help?

Sincerely yours,

PAUL B. KURTZ,
President.

JOHN R. EVANS & Co.,
Camden, N.J., February 16, 1970.

To All Hourly Employees:

It is with a deep sense of regret that I have to announce that John R. Evans & Company is shutting down after over one hundred and twelve years of business.

The diminishing supply of raw skins, their high cost, the inability of the shoe manufacturers to use the lower grades, foreign imports of leathers and shoes, the high cost of borrowing money to finance our skin purchases and the lack of enough business to fill this plant, have all contributed to this painful decision.

We are in the process of notifying our customers that we will be able to supply their needs for our products through the fall season. Our plan is to continue soaking until about March 24th, and perhaps operate the tanhouse through May and continue work in the dry departments through July or the first part of August. It is difficult to put exact dates on this tentative schedule right now, but we will keep you informed as to any changes as we near the shutdown time for any particular department.

We will be sitting down with your Union representatives to discuss the various details regarding severance pay, vacation pay, Blue Cross and Blue Shield and other matters covered by the Union contract. It is hoped that you will be able to get definite answers to whatever questions you might have about these matters shortly.

You have worked long, hard and well to keep this company in business. We appreciate your efforts and are only sorry that a combination of factors beyond our and your control have led to our decision. We and your Union will do everything we can together to help you find other employment.

We in management thank you so much for your loyal support.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL B. KURTZ,
President.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members of the House will read this letter and find out what is happening throughout the entire nation in the footwear industry.

MORTGAGE RATES MAY GO EVEN HIGHER

(Mr. ALBERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, the sharp increase in the unemployment rate during March, coupled with the prediction that record high home mortgage rates may go even higher, is the latest manifestation of the abject failures of the Republican administration's economic policies.

The Nation's unemployment rate which jumped sharply to 4.4 percent in March, rose much faster than administration economists had predicted. This myopic outlook is not new: administration officials have been predicting for a full year that their policies would control inflation and prevent a recession.

Exactly the opposite has occurred: inflation has soared with the greatest increase in the cost of living under this administration since the Korean war, and practically every economic indicator reflects the recessionary trend that has already cost 1 million decent, hard-working Americans their jobs since this administration took over.

The excessive high interest rate policy, adopted by the present Republican administration, is not new. It is the same policy, applied by the same group in favor of big business and the moneyed interests, which brought on the recessions of the 1950's. In addition to the increasing rate of unemployment, the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board predicts that the home mortgage rates may continue to increase.

The depressed state of the housing industry, brought on by the excessive and costly interest rates, is the fuel firing the general recessionary trend.

Congress—and this includes leading members of both political parties who are concerned with the plight of the working people, the elderly, and the poor who are bearing the cost of this inflationary recession—has sought relief. The President has been given some powerful tools by Congress to bring relief to the housing industry, and to fight inflation. The President has refused to utilize these, as he has failed to use the moral suasion of the powerful office he holds, to hold prices in line.

Knowledgeable members of the Joint Economic Committee—Republicans and Democrats alike—have urged the administration to act.

I renew that plea today. The unemployment of 1 million men and women who want to work, but who have been put out of work since this administration assumed control, is too costly a price to pay to please big business and big bankers.

THE REVENUE CRISIS

(Mr. ECKHARDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Speaker, the need for money is perennial with local and State governments. The need is growing more acute. When the time comes for raising the revenue, the standard answer is to raise taxes. Translated, this usually means that the middle class and the poor will provide the funds, especially in Texas where the sales tax is one of the principal sources of revenue. Yet, a recent study indicates we have prospects of raising substantial additional revenue without raising taxes if all persons—including those who have been able to depress the tax rate on their valuable oil lands in various ways—were made to bear their fair share. A major source of county and city revenue is the property tax and millions of dollars may be slipping through this tax net because of the inequities of the ad valorem tax. A study indicates that had property been evaluated fairly, the school board budget in Ector County, Tex., alone would have been increased by $7 million in 1969. Oil companies in this area are having their property undervalued by about 50 percent and sometimes not assessed at all. All we need to do to close this loophole is to have property evaluated at its fair market value. In Ector County, if property had been assessed at its fair market value in 1969, the county taxes for the homeowner and small businessman would have dropped about 32 percent. The implications for Texas and the Nation from shutting this loophole are great.

We are indebted to Mr. Ralph Nader, once again, for bringing this situation to our attention. I, in turn, want to bring this important study to the attention of my colleagues:

STATEMENT BY RALPH NADER

One of the major crises in which most cities and towns find themselves throughout the country is the revenue crisis. There are too many pressing community needs coming up against increased costs and too few tax revenues. While most of our national interest in some kind of tax reform has been focused recently on the inequities, or "loopholes," in the federal income tax, abuses of grave concern to financially hard-pressed local governments have been overlooked. I am speaking of inequities in the ad valorem tax—that is, the property tax we pay to our county and city governments, and to our school and hospital districts and other special taxing agencies.

In order to compute this tax, your local taxing authority is expected, in theory, to do the following:

1. Appraise all of its taxable property (both the surface and subsurface, or mineral property),
2. Decide upon its budget, and
3. Compute the necessary tax ratio and rate to raise the taxes to meet its budget.

Now this can be a fair system—provided all of the property is appraised at its fair market value. But the potential for tax-abuse here is great. If A's property is substantially undervalued in relation to B's property, then B will be paying far more than his fair share of the local tax.

Let us look now, for example, at Ector County, Texas, in the heart of the Permian Basin—one of America's richest oil discoveries. The city of Odessa, located in Ector County, is a town of about 83,000 people—mainly working people. Oil was discovered here in the 1920's, and the industry has grown substantially since then. Ector County ranked second in the state in the value of production in 1968, with total oil and gas production valued at $214.1 million.¹ The oil companies, like major industries in other towns, owe the people not only the wages they earn, but also their fair share of the property taxes.

Like most counties, Ector County taxing agencies (county, school, city, etc.) depend upon a private evaluation firm to appraise its taxable property, in this case the firm of Pritchard and Abbott. In fact, the Pritchard and Abbott Valuation Engineers in Ector County not only appraise the property they compute the tax as well. The County Tax Assessor then just mails out the statements—and collects the taxes. (Texas is one of the few states that does not even conduct a periodic ratio study, which, in its most commonly employed form, involves comparison, on a sampling basis, of the prices of sold properties with their assessed valuation—an attempt to determine assessment levels and measure non-uniformity of assessment.)²

Pritchard and Abbott contract with almost 70% of the state's taxing districts. The firm has an interest in pleasing not only the tax assessors, but the county's biggest taxpayers as well. The oil companies have tax representatives who contact Pritchard and Abbott in an effort to persuade them to lower their valuations, and—in the words of one Pritchard and Abbott engineer—"We get 99% of their pressure."

The oil companies, despite their pressure on Pritchard and Abbott really know what their property is worth: after all, they purchase it, produce it, and make the kind of "in-depth" studies and projections vital to its success. But a comparison of what the industry considers its property to be worth, with what Pritchard and Abbott say it's worth, reveals a striking disparity.

A look at some property called the Headlee-Devonian Unit, rich in oil and gas reserves, and located in Ector County,³ is revealing. This unit, which covers about 15,000 acres, allows the unit operators to pool their production efforts.⁴ Prior to entering into this pooling arrangement, the unit operators made a six-weeks, continuous study, culminating in a report (Devonian Report, Headlee and Dora Roberts Field, Ector and Midland Counties, Texas), filed with the Texas

Railroad Commission, Oil and Gas Division (August, 1956). (See Appendix, p. 14)

Valuation estimates based on net income and reservoir data from this report (the report from the industry itself), when compared to the Pritchard and Abbott appraisals, (at 100%) reveal an undervaluation for property tax purposes of at least 50%! For at least the last seven years, a period in which actual production corresponded very closely to, and even exceeded in the aggregate, the projected production, this piece of property has been consistently undervalued! (See Appendix, pp. 6-7 and 9-10)

But this is a very conservative estimate. Atlantic Richfield⁵ claims that the "profits have proven to be higher than originally estimated for the field at this point in time" (referring to March, 1956, when the report was compiled), and, that "[T]he predicted recovery for the reservoir is currently estimated to be almost double that referred to in this report." (Emphasis added). This means, then, that to say this 15,000 acres of oil and gas property has been undervalued by approximately 50% is being very generous to the oil companies⁶—considering our estimates are based on reservoir data which is approximately half of the actual predicted recovery!

This is a startling example of the under valuation of producing property . . . but consider next the nonvaluation of property having little if any production. It must be remembered that the taxes we are concerned with are taxes on property value—the value which a willing buyer would pay to a willing seller. We are not talking about a production tax.

Texaco acquired leasehold interests in June of 1965, and January and February of 1966, for a price totaling slightly more than $460,500—but this property was not carried on the tax rolls in 1967, 1968, or 1969. Inexplicably, this was not rendered. (See Appendix, p. 3-5) This means, of course, that no taxes were paid on the property. (However, in 1969 Texaco reported some nonproducing property in a "lump" sum amount, but it totaled only $85,581 at 100%.) (See Appendix, p. 4 NOTE.)

Other nonproducing leases are carried on the tax rolls, but only at a nominal value, varying from approximately $.50 to $1.00 an acre. The explanation for this nominal assessment by the County Tax Assessor, Curtis Wynn, is that the property is just "not worth taxing." The Odessa District Manager of Pritchard and Abbott, Earle Bruce, explains that "until a non-producing property is developed, it could be worthless."

This means, of course, that even though Cities Service purchased a lease in 1961 for $27,272, it is arbitrarily assessed at only $999 (at 100%) for the 1962 tax rolls. And Shell purchased a lease for $100,000 in 1955 which was taxed in 1956 at an assessed value of only $3200 (at 100%). There are other examples. (See Appendix, pp. 1 and 5.)

The point is, of course, that even though not all nonproducing property will prove to be worth even as much as its purchase price (which is really just a bonus to induce the signing of the lease) it should not be just appraised arbitrarily. A lack of production does not mean that the property is worthless. In fact, property which a major company does not find worth producing may prove profitable to a small independent, who is interested in making a faster return on his investment. Or, as the noted oil and gas tax authority Leland E. Fiske has said, ". . . any tract which has not been definitely condemned will have some mineral value; many tracts on which a dry hole has been drilled will not be considered worthless, but will carry a small value. This is because there is always considered to be possibilities of production in other horizons, and many properties which were once thought to be worthless are now producing oil and gas."⁷ (Emphasis added.)

What is important to recognize is that a starting point in the appraisal process should at least be the purchase price, or bonus value—⁸ and then the owner of the leasehold interest could be allowed to show why the value might have changed. This would prevent the loss of tax revenue that occurs before a lease starts producing, and before it "suddenly jumps" from a "nominal" value to a much higher sum. Continental, which took a lease by assignment in 1961 for $21,500, then could have it assessed on the tax rolls in 1962 for only $1,142 before production apparently boosted the value to $106,386 the following year. (All figures at 100%) (See Appendix p. 2 and 5.)

Production should not be a prerequisite for an appraisal at fair market value; lack of production should not be an excuse for nominal valuation, or none at all. The homeowner does not stop paying taxes on his home just because it is not earning him any income!

Let us look at the homeowner in Ector County to see if he is paying his fair share. A random survey of homes purchased within the last year reveals that, on the average, the homeowner's property is being undervalued on the tax rolls by only approximately 7.06%! (Appendix, p. 12-13.)

So, while the homeowner is being undervalued by approximately 7%, the oil companies are being undervalued, by very conservative estimates, at about 50%, and sometimes not assessed at all! What does all this mean?

To the homeowner and small businessman it means a loss of revenue which is sizable. If all the property had been assessed at fair market value in 1969, the county taxes for the homeowner and small businessman would have dropped approximately 33%! And the same budget requirements could have been met in both cases!

The revenue loss to the county government and school board is even more dramatic. If all the property had been assessed at fair market value in 1969, and the tax ratios and rates had remained the same, the county government of Ector County revenue could have increased approximately $1.5 million last year alone! Think what this could have meant over a period of just the last five years, for example, to a community which is now concerned with the financing of a $5.8 million hospital expansion! Think what it could have meant to a community whose goals in the past few years have included developing its county airport, establishing a juvenile court, improved police protection, building new recreational parks and swimming pools, and expanding its public library!

To the county school board, the proper assessment of the Headlee-Devonian oil and gas property alone, in just the past seven years, would have meant an additional $2 million! But the overall increase to the school board is staggering! If all the property had been assessed at the fair market value in 1969, and the tax ratios and rates had remained the same the school budget could have been increased by approximately $7 million! Look at the goals this community could have met in the last ten years with these additional funds: new science laboratories, more classrooms, basic adult education programs, vocational and technical laboratory facilities, addition of the kindergarten to the school system, and the recommended free hot lunch to every child who needs one, but cannot afford it!

But this additional revenue does not depend upon raising the tax rates, or adding new taxes, or tacking another penny onto the overburdened sales tax. All of this additional revenue can be raised simply by assessing the oil property at its fair market value!

The implication here is great and national in scope: at a time when our cities are facing their greatest crises in history, the local governments can now respond immediately with "money in the pocket" that they never knew they had! Underevaluation of big business property and undertaxation of these corporate industries from banks to insurance companies to oil companies and others is not just an Ector County or Texas phenomenon. It is a nationwide injustice that has deprived local communities and cities of desperately needed local revenues. This deprivation has helped increase the reliance of local communities on Washington and has accordingly reduced those communities' control over their public affairs.

CONCLUSION

I am asking Chairman Ben Atwell, of the Commission on State and Local Tax Policy to initiate an inquiry into these gross discrepancies with the objective of presenting as soon as possible a plan to correct these gross inequities for the upcoming tax year.

In addition, there is every reason for aggrieved individual taxpayers who are paying more than their share to subsidize these highly profitable companies to assert their rights in court against offending local taxing authorities.

We have heard the cry for "law and order" in the streets—it is long overdue to have some law and order in the property tax assessment system. It is imperative and just that the burden of local government be shared equally by all of its citizens, including the oil companies—and not just by the homeowners.

Because of this unwarranted underevaluation these companies have received an unjustified windfall. It is only right and honest to require a full public accounting as to this multi-million dollar windfall and to give the other taxpayers the benefits of a full refund plus interest from these companies.

⁶ Also—this estimate is conservative because the price upon which the report is based is only $2.83 per barrel; the price since that time (mid-1956) has never been that low, and is currently around $3.25 per barrel.

Column 1 gives the oil company which purchased (or in some instances took by assignment) the lease or working interest in the property.

Column 2 gives the date the lease (or series of leases) was recorded in the Deed Records, County Clerk's office.

Column 3 gives a description of the working interest.

Column 4 gives the amount of the initial payment, or bonus, made at the time of execution of the lease. (If the property proves to be productive, the bonus value will be only a fraction of the fair market value, because the present value of future royalty payments is excluded.) Although the usual lease recites only "for $10.00 and other valuable consideration," the revenue stamps (in effect up until Jan. 1, 1968) can be used to determine bonus value of any lease over $100.00. The valuation of a nonproducing property should be based on the actual sales price, if available. Leland E. Fiske, Federal Taxation of Oil and Gas Transactions (1969), page 169-71.

Column 5 gives the actual valuation (at 100%) by Pritchard and Abbott where the property is rendered, or notes the fact that the property is not even rendered at all.

A. PRODUCTION

The Production columns are included to substantiate the validity of a study comparing actual valuations by Pritchard and Abbott for the tax rolls, and the valuations based on projections by the operators in the field.

Column 1 gives the projected 8/8 Daily Average Production and total number of wells, as estimated by the operators in the field. Devonian Report, Headlee and Dora Roberts Field, Ector and Midland Counties, Texas, March, 1956. (Filed with the Texas Railroad Commission, Oil and Gas Division, in preparation for the hearing [August, 1956] relative to the unitization agreement.)

Column 2 gives the actual 8/8 Daily Average Production and the total number of wells, as reported by Pritchard and Abbott.

The seven-year period (1963 through 1969) is chosen as representative because the actual daily average production, when compared on an annual basis, corresponds closely to the projected daily average. In fact, the total actual daily average exceeds the estimates during this period.

1963	114,790,000	141,388,000	128,089,000	51,499,535	59.8

Column 3 gives the valuations of the 7/8 mineral interest based on the price paid for oil and gas "in the ground." The prices used in the calculations are approximately one-third of the actual sales prices (for this period) per barrel (of stock tank liquids and plant products) or thousand cubic feet (of gas). This ratio is consistent with accepted oil and gas valuation procedures. Leland E. Fiske, Federal Taxation of Oil and Gas Transactions (1969), p. 163-4. Estimates of reserves are from the operators in the field. Devonian Report, supra.

Column 4 gives the valuations of the 7/8 mineral interest based on the present value of future net income, discounted at 10%

using the Hoskold Formula, suggested as a means of determining the fair market value of oil and gas properties. Fiske, supra at p. 166-8. Johns M. Campbell, Oil Property Evaluation (1959), p. 452-4. Annual estimates of future net income are from the operators in the field. Devonian Report, supra.

Column 5 gives the valuations based on averages of the values determined in the two approaches used in columns 3 and 4.

Column 6 gives the actual valuations (at 100%) of the 7/8 mineral interest as reported by Pritchard and Abbott.

Column 7 gives the annual approximate percentages by which this unit has been undervalued, as well as an average of these percentages.

TEXAS GULF PRODUCING Co.,
Houston, Tex., August 15, 1957.

Mr. PAT KELLY,
Engineering Department, Railroad Commission of Texas, Oil and Gas Division, Tribune Building, Austin, Tex.

DEAR MR. KELLY: I am sending you under separate cover the report entitled Devonian Reservoir Report, Headlee and Dora Roberts Field, Ector and Midland Counties, Texas. This is the report written by the Headlee-Dora Robert Devonian Engineering Committee in March, 1956. This report was the result of six weeks continuous effort on the part of all Operators in the fields. All subsequent recovery factors and engineering testimony is based on the results indicated by this report. The report was placed on the Commission's record in the August, 1956 Hearing and it is so noted in the transcript.

I am sending you this report as a result of your request and would appreciate your placing it in the record of that Hearing to substitute for the one you informed me was missing.

Yours very truly,

ROBERT H. PARKS.

CXVI—712—Part 9

JANUARY 30, 1970.

HON. BEN ATWELL,
Chairman, * Commission on State and Local Tax Policy, Capitol Station, Austin, Tex.

DEAR CHAIRMAN ATWELL: I commend the enclosed report to your careful attention in your capacity as Chairman of the Commission on State and Local Tax Policy. The study demonstrates that oil properties in a representative Texas county are grossly undervalued for "ad valorem" tax purposes. I urge the Commission to take whatever immediate action may be necessary to ensure that the tax burden is equitably distributed among ALL the taxpayers of the state.

In attempting to alleviate the obvious injustices that presently exist and to provide for collection of oil company taxes unpaid in the past, the Commission should direct its attention to the following basic inquiries:

(1) Exactly how many tens of millions of dollars have been lost by the State and its citizens due to undervaluation of oil properties?

* Ex-officio as Chairman, House Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

C. TAXES—ECTOR COUNTY INDEPENDENT SCHOOL DISTRICT

Column 8 gives the approximate values of school taxes that should have been paid on the 7/8 mineral interest, based on the valuations in Column 5.

Column 9 gives the actual values of school taxes paid on the 7/8 mineral interest, based on valuations in Column 6.

Column 10 reflects the difference between actual taxes and the taxes that should have been paid, i.e. taxes due (without interest).

(NOTE.—All valuations, as well as the tax values, reflect only the 7/8 mineral interest, and exclude appraised values of equipment and personal property. This is done so that accurate comparisons can be made with the valuations based on the present value of future net income, which does not reflect equipment and personal property unless added to the present value figure Fiske, supra at p. 165-6.)

quiries. Congressional hearings may prove to be necessary. Or, if the Commission prefers to tap purely local resources, the public-spirited student body of the University of Texas School of Law may prove to be a valuable source of manpower. At any rate, I am sure that the Commission will take whatever steps are required to rectify this grave situation.

Sincerely,

RALPH NADER.

WHERE WERE YOU WHEN THE LIGHTS WENT OUT OVER AMERICA?

(Mr. KUYKENDALL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. KUYKENDALL. Mr. Speaker, in facing the grave problems of our time, probably the greatest threat to our freedoms is apathy on the part of too many of us.

We have had plenty of dialog on crime, drugs, subversive activities, and a decline in our national morality, but only a few have tried to take an active role in doing something about these problems.

In a recent address in Memphis, our capable director of fire and police, Frank Holloman, warned of where such apathy may lead us. I include his remarks, "Where Were You When the Lights Went Out Over America?" at this point in the RECORD:

WHERE WERE YOU WHEN THE LIGHTS WENT OUT OVER AMERICA?

(Frank C. Holloman, director, division of fire and police, Memphis, Tenn., before the Tennessee Teachers Association, Retired Teachers Department, April 3, 1970)

At 5:15 PM on November 9, 1965, a catastrophe struck some 30 million American people. It was at that instant that an electric power failure plunged parts of eight northeastern states into sudden stygian blackness. The greatest blackout in history engulfed a vital section of our nation. Where an instant before there had been millions and millions of lights and a colossus of electrical brightness, there were now darkness and silence. The lights had gone out for over fifteen percent of the population of America!

A special research grant was made to a group to determine what the people affected by the Great Blackout were doing at that time and where they were. A large number of people asked the question: "Where were you when the lights went out?"

The United States of America has for almost 200 years been a sparkling, glittering, dazzling light freedom. In the galaxy of nations on this earth, America has been the brightest star of liberty. In the sphere of justice all other nations have orbited our Nation, drawn to it by its influence of morality and integrity.

Francis Scott Key stood on the deck of a British man-o-war off the coast of Maryland and peered through the mist and smoke of a breaking dawn to catch a glimpse of the symbol of liberty, freedom, and justice—the Star Spangled Banner—and seeing it proudly unfurled in victory, wrote those time-honored words:

"... may the Heav'n-rescued land
Praise the Pow'r that hath made and preserved us a nation:
Then conquer we must when our cause it is just;
And this be our motto: 'In God is our trust.'
And today all of America's coins and currency bear the inscription, "In God we Trust."

Throughout its history America has associated herself with God and pledged her allegiance to a Nation "under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Patrick Henry sounded the challenge for all Americans: "Give me liberty or give me death".

Nathan Hale's answer to tyranny as he stood on the British gallows still resounds in the ears of true Americans: "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country".

Thomas Paine prophetically declared: "Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom, must, like men, undergo the fatigue of supporting it".

J. Edgar Hoover has said: "We have heard about America with our ears but not with our hearts".

Yes, a special research team asked the question of those who experienced the Great Blackout of 1965. It is my fear that all Americans will be required to answer in the not-too-distant future: "Where were you when the lights went out—the lights of American freedom, liberty, justice, morality, integrity, truth and decency?"

Where were you when the light of morality went out in America? Morality of our Nation and of each of us is measured by the more than 4 million serious crimes committed annually with a spiraling increase each year, nine times that of the increase in our population, by a steadily increasing annual number of crimes committed by youngsters under 18 years of age; by an annual crime bill of over $32 billion; by parents who impose upon themselves little self discipline, and even less discipline upon their own sons and daughters; by adults who still think they can live their own selfish lives with no influence on others, especially, the youths of their neighborhoods and communities, by doting parents who take teachers who paddle their children to court rather than taking their children to the shed; by rationalizing vandalism as the accepted way for young hoodlums to let off pent-up energy; and by showing no concern over youthful criminality because it didn't cost us anything or our lives this time.

Where were you when the light of decency went out in America? The Biblical admonition is that a house built on sand cannot stand. I say that a Nation built on dirt cannot stand the tides of time, America is being bombarded by the most colossal barrage of filth, smut, obscenity, and lasciviousness the world has ever known. This muck is not confined to our movie houses, but appears also on our newsstands and on television. The average citizen—and it appears all too many are just average today—is not even concerned enough to protest, much less censor what his own child is exposed to. One sociologist has suggested we expose our children to a full menu of nakedness and obscenity and smut as a cure. It appears that most parents and adults are following that advice!

Where were you when the light of integrity went out in America? We have become such a "fat-cat" society with our stomachs full, our garages enlarged for a third car, our homes expanded for the 4th and 5th baths, our bank accounts bulging, that we have become a Nation of apathetic and indifferent "milque-toasts" who have lost our sense of values. Compromise and appeasement are now the accepted philosophies. Why should we get "involved" when a woman being raped pleads for help? Why should we get "involved" when a gang of teen-age hoodlums beats an old man to death outside our window? Why should we get "involved" in this plebeian thing of voting or serving on a jury or testifying to a truth we witnessed? Why should we get "involved" in civic and community problems that will involve only our children, if not us? Why should we get "in-involved" in politics, when the politicians are involving us and our heritages in moral bankruptcy much too often?

Where were you when the light of freedom went out? There is so much said today about freedom of speech, especially when such freedom is mocked by intellectual prostitutes who parade with placards bearing the most vulgar four-letter words. American freedom today is represented by the principle espoused by too many mental perverts that only those laws they agree with or had a part in passing should be observed and that all others should be ignored or violated at will. Whose freedom is being championed when whole cities or communities are threatened with sacking if the demands of certain violent crusaders are not met? What brand of freedom is represented by cowardly acts of physical violence performed in the name of God beneath a hood in the dark of night?

Who will enjoy freedom after it is slowly whittled away by growing Government controls imposed as the result of subsidies on every level? Supreme Court Justice Jackson declared in 1942 "It is hardly lack of due process for the government to regulate that which it subsidizes." And the due process continues, and it is expedient for the average citizen to permit the process to slowly slice away his individual volition through the opiate of economic prosperity. It was refreshing the other day to see a pick-up truck with a sign on the rear window: "I'm fighting poverty—I'm working." That's rather old fashioned in this day and time when individual achievement through ingenuity, labor, and honest effort are minimized and even discouraged by the doctrine and give-aways, handouts, and subsidies in the name of social reforms. There are all too many today who think that freedom is free. If we have any left, they will learn it's not free but bought only by vigilance, concern, blood, tears, courage, and even lives—our lives and those of our sons.

Where were you when the light of liberty went out? John Philpot Curran, on July 10, 1790, declared: "The condition upon which God hath given liberty to man is eternal vigilance". And Benjamin Franklin contended: "Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety". While we have bought a measure of safety and mental peace for the time being, we have compromised the heritage of American liberty. Where we once examined the facts and formed an honest opinion and expressed it, we now submissively agree in silence with the opinion that is popular and expedient at the moment. Where we once were thrilled at the sight of the flag and the sound of the Star Spangled Banner, we now ignore both as well as the defiant kid who publicly destroys his draft card.

Where were you when the light of Justice went out? In too many of our courts today if the blindfold were removed from the lady of justice, we would find her eyes filled with tears and shame. Where is there justice when rapists and murderers are set free to continue their criminal acts because of some tautly drawn grammatical errors in indictments? What kind of justice is there when two policemen are condemned and castigated by a judge who said they used undue force in drawing their revolvers when attacked by two vicious hoodlums with broken beer bottles in an alley? And it didn't matter that one of the officers suffered severe facial cuts! The lights of justice are dimmed when bleeding-heart judges release hardened criminals on probation or impose ridiculously minor sentences or fines. It is becoming more and more prevalent in some of our courts that the individual rights and liberties of known criminals are paramount to the rights and liberties of society as a whole. Too little concern is given to the woman violated, the man assaulted, the businessman robbed, and the widowed wife—and too much given to the welfare of the criminal who is charged. Too much concern is expressed over so-called police brutality and too little over efforts of certain segments of our population to destroy respect for authority and law enforcement which will surely destroy every individual liberty in America. You may well be sure that when law enforcement is discredited and rendered impotent, ours will be a jungle nation.

Where were you when the lights of liberty, freedom, justice, morality, decency, and integrity went out in America? Most were sitting on their hands doing nothing but enjoying the ease and comfort of a self-indulgent and apathetic society. In the midst of affluence and economic prosperity, the basic American birthrights have been cheaply sold for the expediency of the moment. The chains of complacency and self-satisfaction have become binding shackles. In the midst of economic prosperity and affluence, the nation is on the verge of moral bankruptcy. There is no longer displayed a debt to the past, an obligation and responsibility to the present, or a promise to the future.

Is it really necessary for the lights of American heritage once so treasured to go out? I think not. They can be rekindled. They can once again sparkle in all their glory, but they are not self-powered. We must be their generators. Old-fashioned American patriotism must return to style. Righteous indignation must once more be displayed. Humility, and not arrogance; decency, and not filth; integrity, and not expedience; morality, and not materialism; sweat, and not self-pity; truth, and not deceit; courage, and not fear; principle, and not appeasement; sacrifice, and not self-indulgence; ballots, and not clubs and bullets; are the sources of power to light the lights of our priceless American heritages.

An old proverb says: "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness." It is time that Americans quit cursing the darkness. It is time that Americans quit their pitiful whining. It is time that Americans quit wringing their hands hopelessly. It is time that Americans quit rationalizing their faults and weaknesses. It is time that Americans quit compromising and appeasing.

Our nation still has patriots. Our nation still has citizens imbued with old-fashioned Americanism. Morality still does prevail in some quarters. Integrity is still alive in the breasts of some men. Courage still surges through the veins of some. It is time that they roll up their sleeves and go to work to bring America back—an America of strength and courage—an America of morality, integrity, and decency—an America of freedom, liberty, and justice—an America under God, with one hand in God's hand and the other clenched to battle those who would shame us, who would weaken us, who would bury us.

We can do it by boycotting filth wherever it is found. We can do it by openly supporting those who are right and condemning those who are wrong. We can do it by living an example of truth, morality, and integrity. We can do it by practicing discipline and imposing discipline on our own. We can do it by getting involved when civic responsibilities require it. We can do it by getting the facts, forming an opinion, and expressing it regardless of the economic or social consequences. We can do it by publicly condemning dishonesty and guile in high places and low. We can do it by being true Americans.

Edward Hale, a former chaplain of the U.S. Senate once said: "I am only one, but I am one. I can't do everything, but I can do something. And what I can do, that I ought to do. And what I ought to do, by the grace of God, I shall do."

Where were you when the lights went out in America? Let's don't let them. We don't need to. We dare not! We must not! Civilization depends on it!

PRESIDENT'S FAMILY ASSISTANCE PLAN—POSITION TAKEN BY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

(Mr. BETTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BETTS. Mr. Speaker, since the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is opposing the Family Assistance Act of 1970, I think it is only fair to the administration to call attention to a recent report sent by the chamber to President Nixon. The report refers to a series of 15 urban action forums conducted by the chamber across the country between September 22 and October 10, 1969, and indicates that the President's family assistance plan for welfare reform was approved by 86.5 percent of the 2,163 respondents in a poll conducted at the urban action forums.

Of those favoring the proposal, 1,026 said their principal reason for supporting it was that it "would require welfare recipients who can do so, to take work or take training"; 669 said the plan "would help make taxpayers out of many welfare recipients"; 396 felt it "would establish national minimum standards for welfare," and the fourth highest number, 372, said their principal reason for backing the President's welfare reform plan was that it "would help those working full time, but who are still poor."

The U.S. Chamber's report on the urban action forums, designed to inspire greater interest and participation in urban problems by businessmen, states that its poll showed over 83 percent of the respondents at the forums supported the administration's revenue-sharing plan, and over 84 percent, the President's new comprehensive manpower training program.

The report reads:

The welfare plan enjoys broader support than the revenue-sharing plan—86.5 voting in favor.

The impression given by this report, therefore, is that chamber members look favorably upon the plan incorporated in the Family Assistance Act of 1970—H.R. 16311. I call this to the attention of the House at this time in order that the chamber if it cares to may comment upon it prior to the debate on the welfare bill.

DEATH OF LAURENCE S. BURTON, UTAH RELIGIOUS AND CIVIC LEADER

(Mr. LLOYD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker. Laurence S. Burton, father of our esteemed colleague LAURENCE J. BURTON, passed away in Ogden, Utah, on April 10 at the age of 74, and his funeral is being held today at the Ogden Fourth LDS Ward Chapel.

For 22 years, Mr. Burton was president of the Ogden Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—Mormon. In addition, he was a member of the Dee Hospital board of trustees and the Lake Bonneville Boy Scout Council. He was local PTA chairman and president and had served as co-chairman of "All Faces West," a traditional pioneer-day presentation. He was a member of the executive committee of the Weber County Red Cross, and was associated with the USO and the Community Chest. He was secretary and a member of the board of directors of the George A. Lowe Co., which he served for 55 years.

President Burton was a native of Ogden and was a son of Thomas Walter and Bernadina Schat Burton. He married Marguerite E. Roghaar on March 10, 1926, in the Salt Lake LDS Temple.

He is survived by his wife; three sons and one daughter, Representative BURTON, Dr. Thomas R. Burton, and Richard R. Burton, of Ogden; Mrs. Darold H.—Kathleen—Chambers, Pocatello; 14 grandchildren; and one sister.

At the funeral services today, President Harold B. Lee, first counselor in the LDS Church First Presidency, will be the principal speaker. Burial will be in the Ogden City Cemetery.

Mr. Speaker, our colleague's father was truly one of Utah's great men. Our State still is a pioneer State. Settled in 1847, those pioneer qualities of hard work, honest devotion to duty, to God, and country, and a lifetime of service to others were remarkably illustrated in the life of President Laurence S. Burton, natural leader of men and possessed of robust good fellowship. I express the thanks of a grateful citizenry for the life of service rendered by the father of our colleague, LAURENCE J. BURTON, and sympathy to his loved ones at his passing.

STEBUEN SOCIETY TO HONOR VICE ADMIRAL RICKOVER

(Mr. ADDABBO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, this year the Steuben Society of America will honor Vice Adm. Hyman G. Rickover, U.S. Navy, by presenting him with the Fifth Steuben Society of America Award. The presentation will take place on May 23, 1970, on the occasion of the 51st Founders' Day banquet of the society at the Americana Hotel in New York City.

Previous recipients of the Steuben Society Award have been the late President Herbert Hoover, the late Gen. Douglas MacArthur; the Hon. J. Edgar Hoover, and the late Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen.

The society is actively participating in the American Revolution bicentennial program sponsored by Congress and is creating an exhibit depicting the significant accomplishments of Americans of German descent.

Mr. Ward Lange, national chairman and Edward Sussman, national secretary of the Steuben Society of America, announced that on Saturday, May 23, 1970, on the occasion of its 51st Founders' Day banquet, at the Americana Hotel, the recipient of the fifth Steuben Society of America Award will be Vice Adm. H. G. Rickover, U.S. Navy, pioneer in nuclear research and father of the nuclear submarine. Admiral Rickover will thus join the ranks of the previous illustrious holders of the award; the late President Herbert Hoover, 1954; the late General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, 1956; J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the FBI, 1965; and the late U.S. Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen, 1967.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the following statement of the society is a fitting description of Admiral Rickover:

Always driven by a crusading zeal, Admiral Hyman Rickover was haunted by the thought that time may run out before he had completed his "revolution" of the U.S. Navy which he loves dearly. He fought a tough battle with a then obstinate administration until he won the support of the U.S. Congress. Finally, in 1963, the Navy, after years of opposition, accepted the Rickover doctrine that the surface fleet of combatant ships should be converted to nuclear power. He did pioneer work in leading the Navy into the nuclear age. One of the missile carrying ships is the "Von Steuben" SSB (N) 632.

Admiral Rickover's experiences in the nuclear reactor program have led him to his sometimes outspoken, sometime philosophical indictment of the American industrial and school system. He has no patience with waste and inefficiency.

The future Admiral had a hard beginning when he entered the Naval Academy in 1919. His father was a tailor who had immigrated from Russia and settled in Chicago, where young Rickover was born and attended the public schools. In his early Naval career he went through the normal jobs of an engineering officer, serving aboard ships and at shipyards. Not until after World War II did he arouse controversy, when he began pressing the Navy to study the feasibility of developing nuclear propulsion for submarines.

Rickover, already an engineer, got some of his special interest in harnessing atomic power during a brief assignment with the war-time Manhattan project, which developed the atomic bomb. Since then, he has been self-taught on nuclear matters. Out of his efforts came the Nautilus, the first atomic submarine, and the construction of the nation's first large-size atomic power station at Shippingsport, Pa.

In 1965 he was awarded the Enrico Fermi Medal, one of a total of 52 awards, medals and citations.

With his mandatory retirement in 1964, his prominent place in American Military history was firmly established. But, retirement was not for him. The then President Johnson immediately reassigned him to active duty as the Director of Naval Nuclear Reactors for the Atomic Energy Commission, so he could continue his tireless efforts to modernize the United States Navy.

Today he directs the research on nuclear power plants, their installation and refueling in the submarines and surface ships of the U.S. Navy from the Atomic Energy Center. While his specific field is nuclear propulsion, he keeps a close watch on the conversion of the ballistic missile submarines to Poseidon missile carrying ships, increasing their power ten fold. He does not hesitate to call the ships captain, even at his home, when the project is not progressing as well as he feels it should.

The "Father" of the nuclear submarine is uncompromising in his insistence upon exact performance of duty, absolute loyalty, dedication to service to Country and genuine patriotism of the men who serve in the nuclear submarines.

He is held in high esteem by all who serve under him as well as the officers on the highest echelons of the United States Navy and is considered an outstanding patriot, serving beyond the call of duty, without much public notice and without fanfare.

We all salute Vice Admiral Hyman George Rickover, U.S.N., a genuine Patriot.

THE 227TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

(Mr. DOWNING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DOWNING. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 227th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, one of our greatest Americans. He was born in Virginia on April 13, 1743. His 83 years were filled with unnumbered accomplishments of uncommon greatness. The Gloucester-Mathews Gazette-Journal, which is published in my district, called attention to Jefferson's birthday in its editorial column this week. I am pleased to offer it for inclusion in the RECORD in the hope that those of us who had the honor to serve here today might spend a brief moment in reflective tribute toward one of those who made our service possible:

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Thomas Jefferson, whose birthday will be observed Monday, is considered by many historians as one of the three or four greatest Americans. He was born at "Shadwell" near Charlottesville on April 13, 1743 and died at his beloved "Monticello," not far from the place of his birth, on July 4, 1826, the fiftieth anniversary of the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence.

He crowded into his long life span of 83 years more worthwhile activities than would be normally accomplished by a dozen persons in the same length of time. A man of gigantic mind, he received his training for the law at the College of William and Mary. While that could be listed as his occupation it soon became evident that he was destined for many undertakings, all successfully carried into effect.

He was a scientific farmer, architect, politician, statesman, diplomat and, in his day, was undoubtedly the man with the greatest advanced thinking among his contemporaries many of whom were also of large mental stature.

He was elected to the Virginia House of Delegates and to the Continental Congress. As a member of the latter body he was the chief draftsman of the Declaration of Independence, one of the great documents in the history of western civilization. He was elected Governor of Virginia in 1779. In 1784 he, Benjamin Franklin and John Adams were sent to France to represent this new nation in vital peace negotiations.

Jefferson returned to the United States to become Secretary of State under President Washington. He was Vice-President during John Adams term as President and then himself served as the third President of the United States from 1801 to 1809.

With all his many worthy accomplishments in behalf of mankind his humanitarian philosophy and the belief that all men are entitled to rise to the top, though, have to rank as his greatest contributions.

It is interesting to note, in passing, that Jefferson did not regard the Presidency among his celebrated deeds. His epitaph, self-written, simply reads: "Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia."

A TIME TO SHOW INTEREST IN OUR MISSING SERVICEMEN

(Mr. SIKES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, a truly tragic part of the Vietnamese war has been the refusal of the North Vietnamese to provide information on missing U.S. servicemen who presumably are held prisoner by the Communists. A total of 1,450 U.S. servicemen are missing in action and many of these are presumed to be prisoners of the Communist forces. Little is known about the plight of these men, their physical condition, or even whether they are living or dead. The continuing refusal of the Communist captors to divulge information is a shocking indictment of the cruel methods which they follow and their indifference to humanitarian considerations. It is a great pity that those who protest the war do not spend their time protesting Communist inhumanity.

An equally serious part of the problem is the fact that the families of these missing men in most cases know little or nothing about them. Even the fact that they are prisoners of war frequently is not confirmed, and the families can only hope that their loved ones are still alive. The Geneva conference long ago established a program for humane treatment of prisoners of war and nearly all non-Communist nations have abided by its terms. These include an exchange of mail, inspection of camps by a neutral organization, and delivery of medical aid and food parcels to prison camps. None of these have been permitted by the Communists in Vietnam. Hanoi signed the Geneva conference agreement in 1957 but now refuses to abide by its terms.

Efforts have been in progress for months seeking a less barbaric attitude by the Communists on the prisoners of war problem, but these have been unavailing. Representations to the Communist delegates at the peace conference in Paris have also been rejected.

Several Congressmen and Senators, including myself, are serving on a special committee to sponsor a national tribute to American prisoners of war and Americans missing in action in Vietnam. The program will center around a rally on May 1 in Constitution Hall in protest to the treatment of American prisoners of war by the North Vietnamese and Vietcong. Veterans organizations are actively supporting the program plans which are designed to clearly demonstrate America's concern for prisoners of war and those men who are missing in action. Efforts have long been in progress to win world opinion for their cause and it is hoped that the rally in Constitution Hall will help to add momentum to these efforts.

It is hoped that strong support from all of these groups will be forthcoming to help make possible an outstanding rally in Constitution Hall on May 1.

THE ONE AND ONLY LEWIS B. HERSHEY

(Mr. SIKES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, February 16, 1970, was marked what some have noted as "the passing of an era" in the United States of America.

That was the date of the relief of Gen. Lewis Blaine Hershey as Director of the Selective Service and his elevation to a new position as Adviser to the President of the United States on Manpower and Mobilization.

It marked a milestone also in one of the most remarkable careers in the history of our country.

General Hershey, now wearing the four stars of full general which he so richly deserves, began his military career on February 16, 1911. Many—perhaps a majority—in this House had not been born in that year. The President of the United States was William Howard Taft. Since that time Mr. Taft's son and grandson have served in the Congress. Lewis Hershey served under more Presidents than any military man in our history, in turn giving his loyalty, dedication, and outstanding competence to 11 Commanders in Chief. He has been decorated by more Presidents, and he has enjoyed the confidence and he has given his unquestioned loyalty to more Presidents than any man in history. Truly, he has been a remarkable citizen and it is to his credit that he has considered himself and he has been publicly recognized as a true citizen-soldier in the most splendid of American traditions.

It is no service to General Hershey in paying tribute to his 59 years of service already behind him, to seek to gloss over the fact that during these past several years he has been under fire and that many consider his elevation to the post he now occupies as a means by President Nixon of solving a political problem.

We can truly say, however, and the Members of this body are fully aware of it, that General Hershey has been a "good soldier" throughout these unhappy days of social unrest in our country and in the campaign of violence and outlawry, which unhappily has been waged in our United States. He has taken the brunt of the manifestations of resentment by some elements of American youth against the draft, and has uncompromisingly and unflinchingly carried out his duty. He has carried out the law as enacted by the Congress and he has executed that law under policies laid down by the President of the United States.

It is a tribute to his character and it will always remain bright in his record that he never sought to shuffle criticism on to the shoulders of anyone else, either in the Congress or in the White House, when some elements of American society sought to subject him to painful and embarrassing incidents.

There are so many things about the service, the character, and the personality of General Hershey which merit him a place in American history. He did, indeed, represent an era—an era of strong men and women, an era of trial and tribulation, an era when our democratic society was being tested.

And it is men like Lewis Hershey, many of whom came on the scene, made their contributions and passed on into history, while he in his quiet homespun strength was still making his mark and contributing to the United States as it emerged from conflicts which shook the world, and as it grew and developed into the strongest, richest, and the freest nation which the world has ever seen.

President Nixon, in announcing the promotion of General Hershey and his new assignment as the President's Manpower Mobilization Adviser, paid him a deserved tribute in which I believe the Nation should share. In this White House statement, President Nixon said:

For thirty-three years General Hershey has served with distinction in the Selective Service System. He has administered a program of paramount importance to the security of the United States, and few Americans have performed a more important service to their country through difficult and often turbulent days. The nation owes General Hershey a hearty "well done."

I look forward to having the benefit of General Hershey's advice and counsel as we move ahead on a broad range of reforms designed to ensure that our manpower mobilization policies are equitable, efficient and geared to the requirements of the future. General Hershey brings to his new assignment vast experience and a perception into national manpower resources, perhaps unmatched in the country. The Nation is fortunate that she will continue to have his wise counsel.

An even richer and more personal tribute was paid to the general by one of his home State metropolitan newspapers, in an editorial under the heading "The General Did His Duty." I quote it as summarizing so many of the thoughts and convictions which I am sure we all share.

Gen. Lewis Blaine Hershey, the homespun, earthy Hoosier who drafted some 15 million Americans for three different wars, is not the first man to be pilloried unjustly for doing his duty. Nor will he be the last. His stature is elevated, not lowered, by his detractors.

His foes crowded with glee when it was announced that he would retire early next year as director of Selective Service to become a presidential consultant on manpower. They chortled that he had been "kicked upstairs." They sneered that he had refused to quit while he was ahead.

But like most short-sighted critics they overlooked important things. One was that the general, who enlisted in the Indiana National Guard as a private in 1911 and rode against Pancho Villa on the Mexican border, has served his country as a military man for more than 50 years. The crackerbarrel general, who learned the facts of life as an Indiana farm boy, is 76 years old. Few generals of any country or any time have served so long, so well.

The Selective Service System that he took over shortly before World War II was neighborhood oriented. It was, as he put it, "The one area in which people are more immediately participating in governing themselves by deciding on a local level who should go, and not to suit a lot of people."

It was no computerized, punch-card process. It was a hard job but a human job and one that had to be done. In Gen. Hershey the nation had a man with the heart and the stomach for it, with no illusions about what was involved.

This brings up another matter the critics always seemed to forget. They acted as though Gen. Hershey was the draft. He was not, of course. The law was passed by Congress. The duty of carrying it out was assigned Hershey. And he did it.

"I'm probably shortsighted enough to think that in my lights I'm right," He said not too long ago, "I have felt that to the best of my knowledge and ability I was doing what I thought was good for my country, and that was selfishness because I have some children and some grandchildren. They're going to have to live in this country, and if there isn't a country, I don't know where they will live.

"And I happen to believe from what I know of our history and what I've lived, I just don't know any country I like better than this one. Ah, what is it?"

"England with all thy faults, I love thee still," said somebody. And I could say the same thing about America."

As long as enough Americans go on feeling this way and being brave enough to back their feelings up, there will be an America.

It would require many hours, Mr. Speaker, for me to recite all of the significant contributions General Hershey made to the strength and well-being and the character of this country, and for which today he is a living symbol, and which will be an inspiration to Americans for all time to come.

Lewis Hershey was born September 12, 1893, and he grew up on the family farm near Angola, Steuben County, in the northeastern part of Indiana. As was necessary for many in those days, he worked on the farm and he had the advantage of the character building which comes with meeting responsibility. Even as a 4-year-old boy he had his share of the chores and the work which was a part of farmlife three quarters of a century ago. At the age of 10 he had already learned to plow, mow, rake, harrow, and cultivate the fields, and he was driving a horse team and doing other work on the farm with the dexterity of an adult.

He learned to respect the mysteries of nature and the God-given miracle of life from his personal, wholesome experience on the farm. He developed his love for this free country while still a young man. His respect for the requirement for every citizen to serve his country was manifested when at the age of 18 he joined the Indiana National Guard.

He subsequently made it to Tri-State College which today recognizes him as one of its outstanding alumni. It is Tri-State which is maintaining the library of his papers and which is carrying forward a development program as a tribute to Lewis Hershey, because of that institution's great pride in his career.

Lewis Hershey's military career alone deserves an entire volume to recount. The medals and decorations, not only in the military but from States and communities and institutions throughout the country, are too many to recite. Yet, General Hershey was more than a soldier; he was more than a Federal official; he was more than a national leader who competently and swiftly carried the major burden of mobilizing the manpower of our country for three wars. I think perhaps the most American aspect of General Hershey's life has been his character as a family man.

The devotion of General Hershey to his wonderful wife is itself a legend. She has traveled with him throughout the United States and she has been his daily companion wherever his duty carried him throughout the world. Their two sons and their two daughters and their 13 grandchildren represent, with General and Mrs. Hershey, a close-knit, thoroughly American group which is a tribute to the soundness of American society.

I think it likely that everything General Hershey has done has been with the thought of helping to build an America and to keep an America in which his children and grandchildren and their children and grandchildren, may enjoy the freedom which has characterized life in America during the three quarters of a century of his life. Because he fully realizes that a free nation is one built on the family unit, and the tradition of the individual family which is transcendent in free American life.

General Hershey's life and career remind us that freedom is not free, and that every citizen must, indeed, be ready and willing—as General Washington said—to give a portion of his property and of personal services, to his government, if that government and that society is to remain free.

General Hershey has done so much in so many areas of American society; he has shared with so many so much wisdom; he has inspired us so often; and he has served his country so well that he deserves every honor this Nation can give him.

More than anything else, I hope that the Congress and American citizens throughout the land will give him one thing which I think he would value above all else—and that is the assurance that the Nation he served so long and so well comprehends, and is indeed grateful for his services.

THE $15,000 FARM PAYMENT LIMIT COULD SAVE $300 MILLION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALBERT). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, as the House Committee on Agriculture comes closer to its final version of a new farm program, it seems likely that the bill approved by the committee may not contain any provision calling for a limitation of farm program payments.

Since the names of the Nation's farmers who received $25,000 or more from Federal farm program payments in 1969 were inserted in the RECORD on March 26, 1970—pages 9632-9675—several Members have inquired about data on farmers who received less than $25,000 last year.

I am inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today a listing of the Nation's farmers who received between $15,000 and $24,999 for farm program participation in 1969. This list contains the names of 12,806 farmers who divided a total of $242,57,832.

The earlier listing of farmers receiving $25,000 or more contained the names of 7,795 farmers with total payments coming to $366,779,995.

It was expected that the list of farmers receiving between $15,000 and $24,999 would contain the names of more farmers but reveal a lower total Federal outlay than the list of those farmers receiving more than $25,000, and this proved to be the case.

This data will eventually be available in printed form when the testimony of the Senate hearings on appropriations for agriculture and related agencies is published. The hearing testimony will show by name, address, county, and State each recipient whose payments in 1969 exceeded $5,000 under the various commodity programs. Unfortunately, the document is not now available and probably will not be available prior to the time the House considers a general farm bill.

The data is of vital concern, because it shows precisely the impact of a payment limitation. By examining the earliest insertion on March 26, together with today's, each Member can determine which of his constituents would be affected by various payment-limit levels, and to what extent.

Although the limit at $20,000 per farm is the level which has received the widest publicity and on which Members of the House have registered their views most often, other levels have been discussed.

This has importance in terms of potential savings. For example, 20,601 farmers each received $15,000 or more in 1969. Total payments in this category came to $609,327,827. Making the adjustment that each would receive the first $15,000, this means that the unadjusted maximum savings would be $300,312,827—assuming payments in 1970 are the same as 1969. Actually the payments will probably be somewhat higher this year. Adjustment of course must be made for administrative cost, and also for offsetting increases in program costs elsewhere.

These adjustments would be relatively minor, however. Only 2 percent of all corn is produced on farms receiving over $20,000 in payments. Therefore, only a fraction of the 2-percent adjustment could be assumed there. Adjustments for cotton land going to other purposes would be tempered by local circumstances. For example, the shift in land use would more likely go to vegetables, fruit, and other crops in most cotton areas, rather than to corn or other payment-program commodities.

Taking another possibility, if the limitation is established at $25,000, this would affect 7,795 farmers whose payments last year came to $366,779,995. Making adjustment for the fact that each would continue to be eligible for the first $25,000, the potential saving would be $171,904,995.

If the limitation is established at $20,000, then the potential gross savings for this group of farmers would be $210,879,995. Not included in this figure is the savings from those whose payments were between $20,000 and $24,999, so a more accurate estimate of savings at the $20,000 level would be $250 million annually.

Shown here is a table containing the numbers, by States, of farmers who in 1969 received farm program payments from $15,000 to $24,999, and those who received more than $25,000. This is followed by the names and amounts in each county in the Nation who received between $15,000 and $24,999.

While the entire table itself is worthy of careful examination, one of its most notable features is the prominence of the State of Texas and the large number of farmers receiving payments in these proportions. Last year it had 4,034 of the 12,806 farms in the Nation getting $15,000 to $24,999 in Government farm payments. At the same time, Texas had 2,460 of the 7,795 farmers in the Nation getting $25,000 or more from Federal farm programs.

TYRANNY OF YOUTH

(Mr. CEDERBERG asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, last year about this time I brought to the attention of my colleagues a series of "handbooks" which were prepared and distributed by the radical Students for a Democratic Society. Since my remarks last March and April we have seen a split in this radical organization over depth of revolutionary ideology, and a marked increase in violence as a method of social protest. Recently we have been reading of bombings and threats of bombings in the major cities of our Nation. Great office buildings have been racked with explosions that have threatened hundreds of lives. A courthouse not very far from this great Capitol was the object of one explosion—an explosion which was calculated to take place at the height of an emotion-laden trial in one of its courtrooms.

We have created in America an atmosphere of genteel permissiveness which has been directed at apologizing for the wrongs of the world. A small, a very small, minority of misguided and ill-directed young people have taken upon themselves the task of being judge, jury, and executioner of American society and the American way of life. I do not, I cannot, agree with their premise that America is all wrong, that it is our institutions and our way of life which have created all of the world's problems and that only by eliminating those institutions can we achieve greatness. America is a great nation today. The vast majority of both young people and their elders work constructively day by day, with sweat, blood, and tears, to make America greater—to make a contribution to improving the quality of life all over the world.

I think that it is time for us to stop apologizing for our past, to stop the insane coddling of our young which has led them to look upon us as failures, and to project this attitude to the institutions of our society. We have succeeded more often than we have failed, and with all of society working together we shall continue to succeed. Man will attack and conquer, as he has for thousands of years, the problems of poverty, prejudice, and greed.

A recent article on the tyranny of youth from the San Francisco Sunday Examiner and Chronicle by Dr. Ross K. Toole, a professor of history at the University of Montana explores this whole business of the atmosphere we have allowed to develop in our young people. The author, a father of seven, who is in daily contact with college-age youth, decries the "tyranny of spoiled brats," and makes some very solid observations about our future conduct with respect to these young radicals. This minority of our young people is tyrannizing both the majority of the youth and the leaders of our institutions. We cannot allow it to continue. I want to recommend very strongly that my colleagues take a moment to read this rather lengthy but well-written article and reflect on its meaning for our actions here each day.

The article follows:

OUR MILITANT BRATS: PROFESSOR DENOUNCES YOUTH TYRANNY

(By Dr. Ross K. Toole)

(NOTE.—The author of this article is in the history department of the University of Montana and offers his views as a representative of the middle age generation.)

I am 49 years old. It took me many years and considerable anguish to get where I am—which isn't much of anyplace except exurbia.

I was nurtured in depression; I lost four years to war; I am invested with sweat; I have had one coronary; I am a liberal, square and I am a professor.

I am sick of the younger generation, hippies, yuppies, militants and nonsense.

I am a professor of history at the University of Montana, and I am supposed to have liaison with the young. Worse still, I am father of seven children. They range in age from 7 to 23—and I am fed up with nonsense.

I am tired of being blamed, maimed and contrite; I am tired of tolerance and the reaching out (which is always my function) for understanding. I am sick of the total irrationality of the campus rebel, whose bearded visage, dirty hair, body odor and tactics are childish but brutal, naive but dangerous, and the essence of arrogant tyranny—the tyranny of spoiled brats.

I am terribly disturbed that I may be incubating more of the same. Our household is permissive, our approach to discipline is an apology and a retreat from standards—usually accompanied by a gift in cash or kind.

It's time to call a halt; time to live in an adult world where we belong and time to put these people in their places.

We owe the younger generation what all older generations have owed younger generations—love, protection to a point, and respect when they deserve it.

We do not owe them our souls, our privacy, our whole lives, and above all, we do not owe them immunity from our mistakes, or their own.

Every generation makes mistakes, always has and always will. We have made our share. But my generation has made America the most affluent country on earth. It has tackled, head-on, a racial problem which no nation on earth in the history of mankind had dared to do.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

It has publicly declared war on poverty and it has gone to the moon; it has desegregated schools and abolished polio; it has presided over the beginning of what is probably the greatest social and economic revolution in man's history.

It has begun these things, not finished them.

It has declared itself, and committed itself, and taxed itself and damn near run itself into the ground in the cause of social justice and reform.

Its mistakes are fewer than my father's generation—or his father's or his. Its greatest mistake is not Vietnam; it is the abdication of its first responsibility, its pusillanimous capitulation to its youth, and its sick preoccupation with the problems, the mind, the psyche, the raison d'être of the young.

Since when have children ruled this country?

By virtue of what right, by what accomplishment should thousands of teenagers, wet behind the ears and utterly without the benefit of having lived long enough to have either judgment or wisdom, become the sages of our time?

The psychologists, the educators and preachers say the young are rebelling against our archaic mores and morals, our materialistic approaches to life, our failures in diplomacy, our terrible ineptitude in racial matters, our narrowness as parents, our blindness to the root ills of society. Balderdash.

Society hangs together by the stitching of many threads. No 18-year-old is simply the product of his 18 years: He is the product of 3000 years of the development of mankind—and throughout those years, injustice has existed and been fought; rules have grown outmoded and have changed; doom has hung over men and been avoided; unjust wars have occurred; pain has been the cost of progress—and man has persevered.

As a professor and the father of seven, I have watched this new generation and concluded that most of them are fine. A minority are not—and the trouble is that minority threatens to tyrannize the majority and take over.

I dislike that minority; I am against that the majority takes it and allows itself to be used. And I address myself to both the minority and the majority.

I speak partly as a historian, partly as a father and partly as one fed up, middle-aged and angry member of the so-called Establishment—which, by the way, is nothing but a euphemism for society.

Common courtesy and a regard for the opinions of others is not merely a decoration on the pie crust of society, it is the heart of the pie.

Too many youngsters are egocentric boors. They will not listen, they will only shout down. They will not discuss but, like 4-year-olds, they throw rocks and shout.

Arrogance is obnoxious; it is also destructive. Society has classically ostracized arrogance without the backing of demonstrable accomplishment.

Why, then, do we tolerate arrogant slob who occupy our homes, our administration buildings, our streets and parks, urinating on our beliefs and defiling our premises?

SENSITIVITY

It is not the police we need (our generation and theirs), it is an expression of our disgust and disdain. Yet we do more than permit, we dignify it will introspective flagellation.

Somehow it is our fault. Balderdash, again. Sensitivity is not the property of the young, nor was it invented in 1950. The young of any generation have felt the same impulse to grow, to live freely and to let the minds loose along unexplored corridors.

Young men and young women have always stood on the same hill and felt the same vague sense of restraint that separated them from the ultimate experience—the sudden, and complete expansion of the mind, the final fulfillment.

It is one of the oldest, sweetest and most bitter experiences of mankind.

Today's young people did not invent it; they do not own it. And what they seek to attain all mankind has sought to attain throughout the ages.

Shall we, therefore, approve the presumed attainment of it through heroin, speed, LSD and other drugs?

And shall we, permissively, let them poison themselves simply because, as in most other respects, we feel vaguely guilty because we brought them into this world?

Again, it is not police raids and tougher laws that we need; it is merely strength. The strength to explain, in our potty, middle-aged way, that what they seek, we sought; that it is somewhere but not here and sure as hell not in drugs; that, in the meanwhile, they will cease and desist the poison game.

And this we must explain early and hard—and then police it ourselves.

Society, the Establishment, is not a foreign thing we seek to impose on the young. We know it is far from perfect. We did not make it; we have only sought to change it.

The fact that we have only been minimally successful is the story of all generations—as it will be the story of the generation coming up.

Yet we have worked a number of wonders. We have changed it.

We are deeply concerned about our failures; we have not solved the racial problem but we have faced it; we are terribly worried about the degradation of our environment, about injustices, inequities, the military-industrial complex and bureaucracy.

But we have attacked these things. We have, all our lives, taken arms against our sea of troubles—and fought effectively.

But we also have fought with a rational knowledge of the strength of our adversary; above all, knowing that the war is one of attrition in which the unconditional surrender of the forces of evil is not about to occur.

We win, if we win at all, slowly and painfully. That is the kind of war society has always fought—because man is what he is.

Knowing this, why do we listen subserviently to the violent tacticians of the new generation?

Either they have total victory by Wednesday next or burn down our carefully built barricades in adolescent pique; either they win now or flee off to a commune and quit; either they solve all problems this week or join a wrecking crew of paranoids.

Youth has always been characterized by impatient idealism. If it were not, there would be no change. But impatient idealism does not extend to guns, fire bombs, riots, vicious arrogance, and instant gratification. That is not idealism; it is childish tyranny.

The worst of it is that we (professors and faculties in particular) in a paroxysm of self-abnegation and apology, go along; abdicate, apologize as if we had personally created the ills of the world—and thus lend ourselves to chaos.

We are the led, not the leaders. And we are fools.

As a professor I meet the activists and revolutionaries every day. They are inexcusably ignorant. If you want to make a revolution, do you not study the ways to do it? Of course not! Che Guevarra becomes their hero. He failed; he died in the jungles of Bolivia with an army of six. His every move was a miscalculation and a mistake.

Mao Tse-tung and Ho Chi Minh led revolutions based on a peasantry and an overwhelmingly ancient rural economy.

They are the patternmakers for the SDS and the student militants.

READING

I have yet to talk to an activist who has read Crane Brinton's "The Anatomy of Revolution," or who is familiar with the works of Jefferson, Washington, Paine, Adams or even Marx or Engels.

And I have yet to talk to a student militant who has read about racism elsewhere and/or who understands, even primitively, the long and wondrous struggle of the NAACP and the genius of Martin Luther King—whose name they invariably take in vain.

An old and scarred member of the wars of organized labor in the U.S. in the 1930s recently remarked to me: "These 'radicals' couldn't organize well enough to produce a sensible platform let alone revolt their way out of a paper bag."

But they can, because we let them, destroy our universities, make our parks untenable, make a shambles of our streets, and insult our Flag.

I assert that we are in trouble with this younger generation not because we have failed our country, not because of affluence or stupidity, not because we are antediluvian, not because we are middle-class materialists—but simply because we have failed to keep that generation in its place and we have failed to put them back there when they got out of it.

We have the power; we do not have the will.

We have the right, we have not exercised it.

To the extent that we now rely on the police, Mace, the National Guard, tear gas, steel fences and a wringing of hands we will fail.

What we need is a reappraisal of our own middle-class selves, our worth and our hard-won progress.

We need to use disdain, not Mace; we need to reassess a weapon we came by the hard way, but travail and labor, firm authority as parents, teachers, businessmen, workers and politicians.

The vast majority of our children from one to 20 are fine kids. We need to back this majority with authority and with the firm conviction that we owe it to them and to ourselves.

Enough of apology, enough of analysis, enough of our abdication of responsibility, enough of the denial of our own maturity and good sense.

The best place to start is at home, but, the most practical and effective place, right now, is our campuses. This does not mean a flood of angry edicts, a sudden clamp-down, a new policy.

It simply means that faculties should stop playing chicken, that demonstrators should be met not with police but with expulsion.

The power to expel (strangely unused) has been the legitimate course of universities since 1209.

A university is the microcosm of society itself. It cannot function without rules for conduct. It cannot, as society cannot, legislate morals.

VIOLATION

It is dealing with young men and women, 18 to 22. But it can, and must, promulgate rules.

It cannot permit students to determine when, what and where they shall be taught; it cannot permit the occupation of its premises, in violation both of the law and its regulation, by militants.

There is room within the university complex for basic student participation but there is no room for slob, disruption and violence.

The first obligation of the administration is to lay down the rules early, clearly and positively, and to attach to this statement the penalty for violation.

Expulsion is a dreaded verdict. The administration merely needs to make it clear, quite dispassionately, that expulsion is the inevitable consequence of violation of the rules.

Among the rules, even though it seems gratuitous, should be these:

Violence, armed or otherwise, the forceful occupation of buildings, the intimidation by covert or overt act of any student or faculty member or administrative personnel, the occupation of any university property, field, park, building, lot or other place, shall be cause for expulsion.

The disruption of any class, directly or indirectly, by voice or presence or the destruction of any university property, shall be cause of expulsion.

This is neither new nor revolutionary. It is merely the reassertion of an old, accepted right of the administration of any such institution. And the faculty should be informed, firmly, of this reassertion, before trouble starts. This does not constitute provocation.

The failure of university administrators to use it is one of the mysteries of our permissive age—and the blame must fall largely on faculties because they have consistently pressured administrators not to act.

Suppose the students refuse to recognize expulsions, suppose they march, riot, strike. The police? No. The matter, by prearrangement, publicly stated, should then pass to the courts.

If buildings are occupied the court enjoins the participating students. It has the awful power to declare them in contempt.

If violence ensues, it is in violation of the fears, not part of the action.

Too simple? Not at all. Merely an old process which we seem to have forgotten. It is too direct for those who seek to employ Freudian analysis, too positive for academic senates who long for philosophical debate and too prosaic for those who seek orgiastic self condemnation.

This is a country full of decent, worried people like myself.

It is also a country full of people fed-up with nonsense.

We need (those of us over 30), tax ridden, harried, confused, weary and beat-up, to reassert our hard won prerogatives. It is our country too.

We have fought for it, bled for it, dreamed for it, and we love it.

It is time to reclaim it.

ALCOHOL AND ACCIDENTS

(Mr. SCHWENGEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, we are all alarmed by the ever-increasing death rate on our Nation's streets and highways. It would appear that during the calendar year 1969, we managed to cut short the lives of 50,000 to 60,000 of our fellow Americans in traffic accidents. This is to say nothing of the thousands injured and maimed. The total cost in terms of deaths, injuries, pain and suffering, and dollars and cents is staggering.

One of the most widely recognized factors causing this extensive death and destruction is alcohol. It is reliably estimated that alcohol is a factor in 40 to 50 percent of our highway accidents.

It is high time this very serious problem received the attention it so badly needs, and the emphasis should be placed on the single most readily identifiable factor, alcohol.

One approach which has been suggested is that of a massive infusion of funds into our highway and automobile safety programs. It has also been suggested that a logical source for these funds is the excise revenues received from the sale of alcoholic beverages. This seems like a reasonable approach to me. I am therefore introducing today, a bill calling for the expenditure on highway and automotive safety programs of an amount equal to 50 percent of the sum of all funds derived from the taxes on distilled spirits, wine, and beer. The following articles provide some excellent background information on the extent of the problem, and a suggested solution:

[From Traffic Safety, January 1970]

THE CASE FOR QUICKIE BREATH TESTS

(By Forst Lowery)

We spend a lot of money and effort to spot check trucks to make sure they're not overloaded and apt to break up the pavement.

Why not, then, spot check automobiles to make sure they're driven by licensed drivers who are not overloaded and apt to break up my family?

This is the burden of the proposal I am making—that we take a few simple, logical steps toward controlling the pollution of our roads by the drunken driver.

One of the roadblocks to these steps is the fact that there are a lot of people who know a lot of things about the constitution that aren't true. And most of these people are also very skilled at playing the "Yes, but—" game.

Their response to the proposal that we adopt an Americanized version of the highly successful British program for controlling the drinking driver is to say, "Yes, but we can't do it here because it would be unconstitutional."

I propose a plan for an adaptation of the British program that cranks in an important additional element to give us another handle on the problem.

Let's briefly list the significant elements of the British program.

A British police officer may require a driver to take a simple preliminary screening breath test at the roadside in any of these situations: (1) the officer has reason to believe that the driver has alcohol in his body; (2) the driver has committed a moving traffic violation, or (3) the driver has been involved in an accident.

In this preliminary screening alcohol breath test, a simple, cheap, one-use ABT device is used to guide the officer's decision on whether to make an arrest. It is not used in court. Upon arrest a driver is required to provide a blood or urine sample for analysis in a forensic laboratory.

British law provides simply that it is illegal to drive if your blood contains more than .08 per cent of alcohol. Period. No need to show or presume "under the influence" or "impairment" or engage in any other such Mickey Mouse. British law, drawing on medical knowledge, simply says nobody with this much alcohol in his blood can legally drive.

Obviously I have omitted considerable detail. For the most recent published information about the British program's effectiveness, see the August 1969 Traffic Digest and Review. An earlier issue of TD & R, February 1968, provided an excellent description of the British law and how it came about.

The British reduction in death and injury was sharp and immediate. The law is still effective. The total of traffic deaths and injuries has been cut 10 per cent, and 80 per cent of this reduction is taking place between 8 p.m. and 4 a.m., the prime time for alcohol related crashes.

EVENTUALLY, WHY NOT NOW?

The results of the British program are clear and remarkable. New York has enacted a preliminary screening breath test law incorporating some features of the British program. New Mexico allows breath test screening. Nebraska has a fixed illegal blood level law.

I'm suggesting that we are going to go the British route sooner or later, and the sooner we do, the sooner we are going to cut the body count.

I said I want to crank in one additional element. And that is a program of routine, random spot checking of driver licenses. Here is an opportunity to get a handle on the slippery problem of driving after revocation or suspension.

When we say that a drunken driver—or any driver who loses his license—has been "ruled off the road," we're only kidding ourselves. Too often it's only a piece of plastic that has been taken out of his pocket.

In California, one-third of the drivers whose licenses had been suspended and two-thirds of those whose licenses had been revoked were known to drive, because they had violations or crashes during the period they had been "ruled off the road." These figures, of course, represent only those who get caught. We don't know the total number of people whose licenses are lifted but who continue to drive anyway.

In Minnesota one out of every 19 of the fatal crashes involves a driver whose license is under suspension or revocation or who simply never had one.

Spot checking to improve compliance with license suspension and revocation is fully justifiable for this purpose alone. The by-product of it—deterrence of drunken driving—is even more vital.

Before describing the specific deterrent effect spot checking has on the drinking driver, let's look at one particularly important aspect of the problem. Driving an automobile after drinking is a very popular pastime. How popular is apparent when we note that the majority of drivers, at least occasionally and sometimes frequently, drive after drinking. Surprising? Among those who "frequently" do so are found 65 per cent of those with concentrations of more than .10.

In other words, the worst offenders, the ones who are the drunkest and who are most often responsible for the most violent crashes, are also the ones who most frequently drive while drunk.

Whether we call these people "alcoholics" "problem drinkers", "heavy habitual drinkers," or, using a more old-fashioned word, "drunkards," they are the biggest part of the problem.

Let's settle for calling them heavy drinkers. A few years ago at a legislative hearing where we were getting the presumptive limit reduced I was asked to describe the difference between .10 and .15. I think I was accurate in saying that the difference between .10 and .15 was the difference between being boiled to the eyebrows or bombed out of your skull.

Anyway, whatever we call them, the people in our society who drive when their ability is impaired by alcohol, whether occasionally or frequently, must be deterred from doing so. It's of little importance to the victim whether he has been killed by an infrequent drinker, a heavy habitual drinker, an alcoholic, a problem drinker, or some unlabeled variety of drunk. But it does matter in our efforts to prevent drunken driving that our control measures control . . . our deterrents deter.

It seems clear that we did not deter the drinking drivers who killed about 500 people last week. The body count is kind of high, isn't it? Isn't it about time we deployed an ABT safeguard system to protect our citizens against the aggressive missiles actually being fired down our highways by drunks? These little one-shot, ABT screening units are mighty cheap hardware. They don't cost billions of dollars and we know they work. As a part of a deterrent system they will perform effectively where our present armament, consisting only of counter strike capability, does not.

Let's see why.

The means of improving control of drunken driving most often suggested is that of handing out stiffer penalties. I don't think hanging people from a 15-foot scaffold instead of a 10-foot one increases deterrence very much. Increasing penalties, whether fine, jail sentence, or period of license revocation, may offer courts and licensing authority a wider range of punishment to apply and thus achieve penalization more nearly suited to the offense, the offender and the circumstances.

But we shouldn't kid ourselves by thinking that people who drive when they are drunk do so because they think the penalty is not significant. What they regard as insignificant is the chance of being caught.

Let's look at the considerations we might think would inhibit a person from drunken driving.

There is a general public belief—well-accepted or at least verbally agreed to by most people—that many traffic accidents are caused by drunken driving, and that it's a bad thing to do.

There is virtually complete public knowledge that drunken driving is against the law, and that there is some degree of enforcement of this law in nearly all localities.

Besides the legal penalty of fine or jail sentence and license revocation, the corollary economic costs of a drunken driving conviction can be heavy—sharply increased insurance bills, lawyers' fees, possible loss of work or loss of job. These extra costs do not, of course, affect all people the same, nor do all people know about them. But it is reasonable to assume that the person who would be most affected would also be most apt to know how big the price tag is on a drunken driving rap.

Drunken driving carries some degree of social stigma, although this certainly varies widely with different groups, and the stigma seems to attach principally to causing a child's death, spectacularly maiming someone or getting caught. The act of drunken driving, itself, unless accompanied by serious consequences or gross behavior such as vomiting on a fellow occupant of the car, does not seem to carry much opprobrium. Nevertheless, we should include social disapproval as one possible influence that might be thought to inhibit drunken driving.

Public information and education, in the form it has taken, is based primarily on letting people know that these are consequences of drunken driving and urging them, therefore, not to do it. Just as we have said that these considerations have not been effective, so we must also say that communicating them successfully so that people will be guided by them has been ineffective.

Why, then, if the considerations we've listed ought to deter drunken driving, do they so clearly fail to do so?

These, I believe, are the reasons:

Many people, perhaps most people, are not influenced to avoid driving after drinking by the possibility of having an accident. They simply do not believe that their own driving behavior is likely to result in an accident. For whatever psychological reasons—ego, self-image, rejection of an idea too distasteful to think about—the idea of causing an accident through personal misjudgment, error or lack of skill is not acceptable. Being able to "hold your liquor" is an item of self-esteem.

For somewhat similar reasons—inability to believe in the likelihood of one's own mistakes or incompetencies resulting in tragedy—these people do not seriously believe that the outward appearance of their driving maneuvers could result in their being stopped on suspicion of drunken driving. In some cases this belief is perfectly correct. The experienced, habitual heavy drinker who is also an experienced driver may, although seriously impaired, be able to negotiate routine driving tasks without appearing to be doing anything much different from all the other drivers around him—until the routine task becomes an unusual or an unexpected one.

Police describe many cases in which a driver is stopped for something seeming unrelated to drunken driving, such as for having no taillights or failing to signal a turn, and having the driver literally fall out of the car and be unable to walk. A high percentage of those drunken drivers who are apprehended are caught quite literally "by accident"—when routine piloting of the car is not enough and quick good judgment and even ordinary reflex motor skills are lost to alcohol impairment.

The rational knowledge that thousands of other drivers do crash when they are drunk, and that many more thousands do get arrested for drunken driving, does not shake this highly irrational but stubbornly held feeling of personal immunity.

This feeling of immunity to accident or arrest as a result of drunken driving seems to lie with self-caused trouble. It does not seem to extend to immunity from chance. People whose self-confidence (however misplaced) leads them to believe they can get away with drunken driving without anything bad happening if only their own conduct is involved, do not feel immune to the possibility of being caught if, for instance, police are checking a sampling of all traffic at random times and places to see that cars are being driven by properly licensed drivers—in short, a driver license spot check.

A sufficiently broad program of spot checking, carried on at different, constantly changing locations, accompanied by a well-planned program of public information, would deter many people from drunken driving who are not deterred now and, coupled with the authority to require simple preliminary screening breath tests as a supplement to a police officer's objective judgment, would result in apprehension of drunken drivers before the accident they don't believe they can have.

I believe that a great deal of the success in the British program has resulted from the deterrent effect of greatly reducing this feeling of immunity I have described. I believe that an even greater deterrent will result from a parallel program of driver license spot checks. I do not mean stopping at random and requiring every driver stopped to blow up the baggie. I do not mean stopping a sampling of cars at random, courteously and without unnecessary delays, to see that they are being driven by licensed drivers. And if the driver appears to merit the opportunity of blowing up the baggie, requiring him to perform that simple task.

I say it would be effective. The "Yes, but" say, "It sounds like a good idea, but it's unconstitutional."

Courts have consistently held that stopping drivers for driver license checking is a justifiable, legitimate exercise of police powers, that the procedure does not constitute an "arrest" and does not violate constitutionally guaranteed liberties.

The questions of requiring that a breath sample be given when a police officer has reason to believe there is a violation of law is not clearly decided by the courts simply because until very recently no state had enacted such a requirement and no such program of preliminary screening testing had legally required the driver to give a breath sample. Thus the question has not been asked of our courts.

However, in other decisions involving other aspects of chemical testing for alcohol, the courts have frequently noted the general need to prevent drunken driving; the precedence of protection for the general public over the slight inconvenience of the test procedure, and the fact that constitutional privilege against self-incrimination is not applicable to this kind of evidence.

All these considerations, plus the recent decision by the U.S. Supreme Court upholding stop-and-frisk laws are not being violative of protection from unreasonable search and seizure, leads me to urge that states get started with this proved program that will save lives. After a late start we made some headway in the 1969 session of the Minnesota Legislature. We're pulling out all the stops in preparation for next session.

I firmly believe that these measures would be acceptable to our courts and that the procedures would not be an infringement of constitutional protections. Legal authorities whose judgment I respect agree with this position. Others may disagree.

But the point is, there is only one way to find out.

It won't cost a lot of money. After all, it isn't as if we are asking a legislature to build a fantastically costly building and, if the Supreme Court said it was unconstitutional, we'd have to tear it down.

Let's don't just play, "Yes, but." Let's give it a try.

BRITISH PREARRESTS BREATH TESTS—CONSTITUTIONAL IN THE UNITED STATES?

(By Andrew R. Hricko)

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—Mr. Hricko is General Counsel for the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, Washington, D.C. In his capacity as General Counsel, he is the chief legal adviser of IIHS, and also serves as a Program Director in the areas of traffic laws and ordinances and traffic courts.)

(This article is based on a paper presented by the author at the Institute on Motor Vehicle and Traffic Law, August 18-21, 1969, University of Colorado, Boulder, Colorado.)

(In view of the current interest in the problem of the abusive drinker who drives and legislative action to attempt to control this problem, we are presenting Mr. Hricko's article on this subject in lieu of our regular feature, "Know the Law.")

(The City of Baton Rouge, La., has passed a law permitting police to request a breath test of drivers for blood-alcohol content before arresting them on drunk driving charges. Enforcement of the ordinance, which was passed in October, began on November 15. The law permits police to request the test of drivers charged with a moving violation, or involved in a collision, if the officer has reason to suspect the driver has been drinking. The test is offered on site prior to arrest and the driver may refuse—but if he does, he may be fined up to $200 and/or be sentenced to up to 60 days in jail. It is our understanding that the ordinance will be tested in a municipal court during the month of December. We will keep our readers informed as to that court's ruling on this ordinance as well as possible future appellate court decisions.)

A continually rising highway death and injury toll and a greater public awareness that a substantial portion of this carnage can be attributed to hard-drinking drivers have intensified legislative action to attempt to control this problem. In the past three years 26 states have passed implied consent legislation. Now only five states lack it.

Despite these long overdue efforts, it appears that additional legal tools are needed before any real headway can be made to manage the problem of the abusive drinker who drives.

One of the problems with existing chemical test-implied consent laws is that they still rely on the police officer's interpretation of symptoms which may be caused by the excessive use of alcohol: a flushed face, slurring of speech, lack of coordination, etc.

Until the police officer places the suspect under arrest, based on his observation of these external symptoms, one or more of which can be caused by a variety of pathological conditions, he cannot use the provisions of the chemical test-implied consent laws. Police officers, knowing full well that charges of driving while under the influence of alcohol, lacking scientific evidence, are difficult to prove in court, usually arrest only persons exhibiting symptoms of gross intoxication. Two California studies, noted in the U.S. Department of Transportation's report to Congress on Alcohol and Highway Safety,¹ indicated that approximately 95 per cent of those arrested had a blood alcohol concentration of 0.15 and above, a concentration far above that at which all individuals are affected. A recent Oregon study of 1,000 drivers convicted of DWI noted that the average blood-alcohol level at time of arrest was 0.21 per cent.

In their everyday operational practices some law enforcement officers offer the suspect an opportunity to take a chemical test prior to arrest. However, since there is no penalty for a refusal, the refusal rate is understandably high.

Footnotes at end of article.

In search for a legal tool to assist the police in their investigation of a possible case of DWI, legislators and safety officials are looking to the feasibility of a law similar to the one enacted in the United Kingdom, the Road Safety Act of 1967.²

This British statute provides that a uniformed officer may require any person driving or attempting to drive a motor vehicle to provide a specimen of breath for a breath test if the officer:

1. has reasonable cause to suspect him of having alcohol in his body; or
2. has reasonable cause to suspect him of having committed a moving traffic violation; or,
3. if an accident occurs and the officer has reasonable cause to believe the person was driving or attempting to drive.

If the person refuses to take the test, none is given. However, refusal could be punishable by a fine of not more than £50, (about $120).

If he takes the test and it indicates a violation of the DWI law, he can be arrested. At the police station a second breath (or blood or urine test) is offered.

In considering the enactment of a similar law in this country one of the first questions raised is whether it would abridge the state and/or federal constitutional safeguards against self-incrimination, unreasonable search and seizure, and due process. Although other constitutional questions could be considered, these three would receive prime consideration.

TEST CASE

Assuming that a state enacted a law containing the principal elements of the British statute, one of the first cases might arise under the following circumstances:

John Doe is involved in a collision. The investigating officer requests him to supply a specimen of his breath for a chemical test to determine the alcoholic content of his blood. Mr. Doe refuses and is charged with a violation of the new statute. He is found guilty and appeals his conviction on the grounds that the statute is invalid because it violates his constitutional rights against self-incrimination, unreasonable search and seizure, and due process.

FIFTH AMENDMENT—SELF INCRIMINATION

The majority of state supreme courts and the U.S. Supreme Court have taken the position that the results of chemical tests of the type under consideration do not violate the Fifth Amendment.

In *Schmerber v. California*³ the U.S. Supreme Court stated: "... We hold that the privilege protects an accused only from being compelled to testify against himself, or otherwise provide the State with evidence of a testimonial or communicative nature, and that the withdrawal of blood and use of the analysis in question in this case did not involve compulsion of these ends."

Although this case involved a blood sample rather than a sample of breath, the principle involved should apply equally to both.

There are a number of state supreme court decisions to the same effect that the Fifth Amendment relates only to "testimonial" or "communicative" evidence.⁴

Under the decisions of these cases it is apparent that the statute would not violate the Fifth Amendment.

FOURTH AMENDMENT—UNREASONABLE SEARCH AND SEIZURE

The Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

In *Schmerber v. California*⁵ the Supreme Court declared that blood testing procedures plainly constitute searches of the person and other courts have extended this holding to other chemical testing devices including the breathalyzer test.⁶ Thus, an investigatory breath test statute must meet the Fourth Amendment standards for search and seizure.

There is a long line of cases dealing with reasonable circumstances for search and seizure and whether such involved a valid warrant or if such search was incident to a lawful arrest.

A strict interpretation of these cases would lead one to the conclusion that a statute of this type would violate the Fourth Amendment.

These cases, however, are principally concerned with the exclusion of evidence, a gun, narcotics, stolen merchandise, etc. The statute in question, however, presents a different set of circumstances since the initial or investigatory breath test would not be used in evidence. It is the subsequent test, after arrest, that would be offered. Thus, these cases are not strictly on point.

In discussing the Fourth Amendment's application to the states, the Supreme Court has stated that:

"The States are not thereby precluded from developing workable rules governing arrests, searches and seizures to meet 'the practical demands of effective criminal investigation and law enforcement' in the States, provided that those rules do not violate the constitutional proscriptions of unreasonable searches and seizures. . . ."

One such state seems to be California. A good statement of the law was given by the Supreme Court of California in the case of People v. Mickelson.⁸

"In this state, however, we have consistently held that circumstances short of probable cause to make an arrest may still justify an officer's stopping pedestrians or motorists on the streets for questioning. If the circumstances warrant it, he may in self protection request a suspect to alight from an automobile or to submit to a superficial search for concealed weapons. Should the investigation then reveal probable cause to make an arrest, the officer may arrest the suspect and conduct a reasonable incidental search."

"We do not believe that our rule permitting temporary detention for questioning conflicts with the Fourth Amendment. It strikes a balance between a person's interest in immunity from police interferences and the community's interest in law enforcement."

New York adopted a similar procedure with the enactment of its so-called "stop and frisk" law. In upholding the statute, a Federal District Court discussed the law's "reasonableness" in not requiring probable cause.

"The adjective 'unreasonable' chameleon-like adopts coloration from its surroundings. . . . Common sense would seem to dictate that as we diminish the concept of 'seizure' from one of arrest with the heavy burden that it carries to one of the briefest stopping entailing at most minor inconvenience, the Constitution should not be offended if simultaneously fewer and less weighty reasons are required to justify the police action. Sparse circumstances sufficient to render a stopping 'reasonable' may well be found 'unreasonable' justification for the more lasting inconvenient and significant arrest."⁹

It could be argued that the case upholding a "stop and frisk" statute rely on the need to offer protection to law enforcement officers in the performance of their dangerous duties and that such a need is not present in a case involving a suspected DWI offense. However, since research indicates that half of the nation's highway death toll involves abusive use of alcohol, a parallel argument can be made in support of such a testing procedure for the protection of other users of the highways.

One of the provisions of the British statute permits testing upon the occurrence of a collision without any accompanying suspicion that alcohol is involved. There are indications in several cases that this may violate the Fourth Amendment. Even in the stop and frisk cases the California courts have been careful to insist that, at the very least, there must be some suspicious circumstances to justify even such a limited interference with an individual's freedom of movement, and the New York statute requires reasonable suspicion.

If a court would follow the decision in Carroll v. United States,¹⁰ such a testing requirement would be unreasonable. The Carroll case involved the search of a vehicle for contraband liquor. The court noted the need for probable cause prior to such search and stated:

"It would be intolerable and unreasonable if a prohibition agent were authorized to stop every automobile on the chance of finding liquor, and thus subject all persons . . . to the inconvenience and indignity of such a search. . . ."

However, this case and the others of this nature can be distinguished on the grounds that the objects searched for are unrelated to the question of the driver's ability to safely operate the vehicle. Alcohol in the trunk of a car is somewhat different than alcohol in the blood, as it relates to safe vehicle operation.

Courts have held that the operation of a motor vehicle is a privilege, or a right subject to restrictions, and have granted more leeway in applying the search and seizure doctrine in cases involving vehicle operation than in cases involving a person's home or right to walk the streets.

State statutes requiring a driver to display his license upon the request of a police officer have been uniformly upheld, even to the extent of permitting the use of road-blocks for this purpose. In City of Miami v. Aronovitz,¹¹ the Supreme Court of Florida refused to enjoin a municipality from operating road-blocks for the purpose of checking automobile drivers' licenses and went on to hold that such practice did not violate the search and seizure provision of the State or Federal Constitutions.

The language of the court bears repeating: "The owner of such a license exercises the privilege granted by it subject to reasonable regulations in the use of the highway common to all citizens . . . so long as the regulations themselves are reasonable and are reasonably executed in the interest of the public good, the courts should not interfere. . . ."

"Giving recognition to our established judicial viewpoint that an automobile is a dangerous instrumentality, we must conclude that any procedure lawfully directed toward the effective prevention of the negligent operation of the automobile and the imposition of requirements of competency on the part of the driver thereof, should meet with judicial approbation."

The prime purpose of the driver license statute is to insure that the driver has at some time exhibited ability to operate a motor vehicle safely. If the roadblock technique of enforcement is permissible to determine if the driver has exhibited such past ability, it can be argued that he could be required to submit to a breath test to determine his present ability to operate a vehicle safely. Under this line of reasoning no suspicion of intoxication would be necessary to allow the police officer to request that the driver take a breath test after being involved in a collision.

In a recent Texas case, Myricks v. United States,¹² the U.S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, went into some detail in discussing the state's authority to stop vehicles and investigate drivers.

The defendant was stopped for a routine driver's license check. The defendant admitted he had no driver's license and further investigation showed that the vehicle had been stolen. The defendant appealed his conviction on the stolen car charge. One of the grounds for the appeal was that the initial stopping was without probable cause and thus subsequent information secured violated his constitutional guarantees. The conviction was affirmed.

The court's comments are instructive: "The Constitution is, it is often said, a living document. If it lives, it must take account of the dominant symbol of today's dynamic society. It must recognize, therefore, that Texas has a legitimate interest in the roadworthiness of automobiles which transport, but which also can maim and kill. . . . This comprehends both technical fitness of the driver and the mechanical fitness of the machine. After the event it is always too late. The State can practice preventive therapy by reasonable road checks to ascertain whether man and machine meet the legislative determination of fitness. That this requires a momentary stopping of the traveling citizen is not fatal. Nor is it because the inspection may produce the irrefutable proof that the law has just been violated. The purpose of the check is to determine the present, not the past: is the car, is the driver now fit for further driving?"

"In the accommodation of society's needs to the basic right of citizens to be free from disruption of unrestricted travel by police officers stopping cars in the hopes of uncovering the evidence of non-traffic crimes (case citations), the stopping for road checks is reasonable and therefore acceptable. Likewise, an arrest is proper if the check reveals a current violation which by its nature must have been taking place in the immediate past. State and Federal Courts, including this one, have uniformly sustained such checks and arrests when not done as a subterfuge or ruse." (Emphasis added.)

REASONABLENESS

Although not discussing the Fourth Amendment, a recent Iowa Supreme Court case, State v. Heisdorfer,¹³ draws an interesting parallel. The defendant was observed operating a motor vehicle in an erratic manner. He was stopped and the patrolman was confronted with alcoholic breath. Defendant was asked to get out of the car and attempt roadside sobriety tests which he was unable to complete successfully. He then was placed under arrest and later convicted of DWI for the fourth time. Several issues were raised including the request for an attorney, the Fifth Amendment and the failure to warn defendant of his rights.

The court in upholding the conviction stated:

"The erratic path of the car and the smell of alcohol on defendant's breath furnished good cause to suspect defendant might be guilty of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated. The tests were reasonably necessary to enable the patrolman to decide whether defendant should be arrested. . . . Such tests are more nearly akin to the taking of blood samples, fingerprints or handwriting exemplars. Requiring defendant to furnish such evidence does not violate his privilege against self-incrimination."

If a roadside sobriety test, touching the nose, etc., is held reasonably necessary to enable the patrolman to decide whether the defendant should be arrested, a preliminary breath test which is no more than a scientific substitute for the roadside test, should also be permitted. Although not directly on point the case gives some indication of what a state supreme court may hold on the issue of "reasonableness."

Footnotes at end of article.

WAIVER OF RIGHTS

Constitutional privileges can be waived and this type of law could be sustained under an extension of the waiver or consent theory. This has been the basis for upholding motor vehicle code requirements that a driver involved in an accident resulting in injury or death to another person must stop and give certain information.¹⁴ Courts have had little trouble with the Fifth Amendment problems that this type of statute poses, and the reasoning could be extended to include the Fourth Amendment. A sampling of opinions:

"Common observation and experience show that unrestricted use of motor vehicles on public streets would be extremely dangerous to life and limb and the property of the public. Their use thus becomes a fit subject for state regulation. Every person who operates or uses a motor vehicle must be regarded as exercising a privilege, and not an unrestricted right. It being a privilege granted by the Legislature, a person enjoying such privilege must take it subject to all proper restrictions."¹⁵

"Because of their size and weight, great power and speed, and the fatalities caused by them, the Legislature might absolutely prohibit the use of a motor vehicle on a public highway, and, therefore, assuming that the statute impairs the Constitutional privilege, the Legislature had power to require a waiver of that privilege as a condition to the use of the highways by a motor vehicle, at least to the extent to which it has required such waiver."¹⁶

"The statute is a simple public regulation. It does not make the accident a crime. . . . It does not attempt in terms to authorize the admission of the information as evidence in a criminal proceeding. . . . We have several statutes which require persons to give information which would tend to support possible subsequent criminal charges, if introduced into evidence. Persons in charge are required to report accidents in mines and factories. Physicians must report deaths and their causes, giving their own names and addresses. . . . Dealers must deliver for inspection foods carried in stock. . . . If the law which exacts this information is invalid, because such information . . . might possibly lead to a charge of crime against the informant, then all police regulations which involve identification may be questioned on the same ground. We are not aware of any constitutional provisions designed to protect a man's conduct from judicial inquiry or aid him in fleeing from justice."¹⁷

The court has used the same rationale to uphold the implied consent statutes. As stated by the Supreme Court of Nebraska:¹⁸

"The essence of the 'implied consent law' is that by driving a motor vehicle on the public highway, the operator consents to the taking of a chemical test to determine the alcoholic content of his body fluid. By the act of driving his car, he has waived his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination."

This leaves open the possibility of extending this waiver to a motorist's Fourth Amendment rights, or some form of implied or expressed consensual arrangement to implement this type of statute.

VEHICLE INSPECTION AND WEIGHT LAWS

Several other vehicle code provisions require mention, one that allows a police officer to stop and inspect a vehicle when he has reason to believe it is unsafe or that its equipment is not in proper adjustment or repair,¹⁹ and those that allow a police officer to require vehicles to stop and submit to weighing when he believes weight of vehicle and load to be unlawful. Both provisions have been held not to constitute unlawful searches and seizures.

The laws relating to stopping and weighing vehicles is a close parallel to a pre-arrest breath test statute. The Uniform Vehicle Code provision on this subject, which has been adopted in substance in most states, provides:

"14-111—Officers may weigh vehicles and require removal of excess loads

"(a) Any police officer having reason to believe that the weight of a vehicle and load is unlawful is authorized to require the driver to stop and submit to a weighing of the same by means of either portable or stationary scales and may require that such vehicle be driven to the nearest public scales in the event such scales are within two miles. . . .

"(c) Any driver of a vehicle who fails or refuses to stop and submit the vehicle and load to a weighing or who fails or refuses when directed by an officer upon a weighing of the vehicle to stop the vehicle and otherwise comply with the provisions of this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

Probable cause to require a driver to submit to a weighing is not necessary, only a reason to believe that the weight of the load is unlawful is required. In addition, failure or refusal to stop and submit to the weighing is in itself a misdemeanor.

In a case decided by the Illinois Supreme Court, People v. Munziato,²⁰ the defendant was convicted of operating an overweight vehicle on a toll road. He appealed on grounds that the state statute requiring the operator of the vehicle to stop and submit to a weighing violates the state constitution relating to unlawful search and seizure, the due process clause of the federal constitution and the privilege against self-incrimination. The state provides that failure to stop and submit is a misdemeanor and also contains the phrase "having reason to believe that the weight of the vehicle and load is unlawful."

The Court upheld the conviction, stating: "When a vehicle is driven onto a public highway of the State, its weight becomes a matter of public interest and, as we mentioned, subject to regulation by the State. The investigation authorized by section 132 (authority to weigh vehicles) is limited to relevant inquiry as to the weight of the vehicle, and is essential to effectuate section 131 (establishes gross weights by vehicles), and it is therefore reasonable." (Parenthesis added.)

Eight states²¹ currently have statutes permitting a "random spot check" of vehicles for equipment deficiencies. These laws have no requirement that the officer have "probable cause" or even a "reason to believe" or "suspect" that a violation has occurred. In practice it operates similar to the roadblock technique of checking driver licenses.

It could be argued that checking for driver licenses is not a true search in that the driver is only asked to produce his license. However, with respect to the vehicle inspection, there is a probing; looking at tires, turning on light switches and checking brakes. The California "spot check" inspection program has been upheld as constitutional, People v. De La Torre.²²

Several sound legal arguments appear to uphold a prearrest investigatory breath test as not being violative of the Fourth Amendment. Some of the case holdings even indicate that such a test may be given as a routine roadside checking of a driver's ability to operate a motor vehicle safely. However, it would appear that a stronger case could be made if the test were required only after the police officer had a reason to believe or suspect that the person may be violating the laws relating to driving while impaired by, or under the influence of alcohol.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT—DUE PROCESS

There is no precise meaning or definition of due process. It is "an elusive concept. Its exact boundaries are undefinable, and its content varies according to specific factual contexts."²³ Since the concept has been a part of Anglo-American jurisprudence throughout history, certain attributes have attached to it and have, thereby, given it some definition. For example, its essence has been described as being fair play. Put in the negative, due process prohibits conduct that denies "fundamental fairness, shocking to the universal sense of justice."²⁴

DUE PROCESS OF LAW IN APPLICATION

There are three aspects of a screening test law in which due process questions arise. These involve the pre-arrest part of the law, the imposition of a penalty for refusal to take the test, and the test itself.

The first encompasses the facts leading up to the request. In other words, has due process been violated by the focusing of attention upon a particular driver culminating in a request to take the test? At this point a screening test law must not run afoul of the due process of law aspect that prohibits vagueness, arbitrariness and overbreadth. A narrowly drawn statute that requires such a test in specific and well-delineated situations could overcome questions of vagueness and arbitrariness without any problem. However, it cannot be overbroad in application. The provision in the British law requiring the test for drivers involved in an auto crash (without more) may be found to be overbroad since it makes no distinction between those persons who are suspected of drinking and those who have not been drinking. Although the Department of Transportation's *Alcohol and Highway Safety*²⁵ report to Congress indicates that alcohol may be a factor in 800,000 crashes a year, this is only about 6 per cent of the estimated 14 million annual run-of-the-mill collisions in the United States. To require testing of all drivers involved may be interpreted as too broad a coverage. A law may be overbroad, and thus violate due process of law, although it is aimed at reaching lawfully punishable conduct.²⁶ By focusing attention on drivers that the officer has reason to suspect of drinking, the problem of overbreadth can be overcome. Reasons to suspect are not difficult for an officer to substantiate. Such reasons as voice, speech, eyes, breath and gait are sufficient.²⁷

However, it can be argued that since alcohol is involved in a disproportionate number of crashes involving serious injury, in addition to about 50 percent of fatal crashes, the testing of drivers involved in collisions is less broad than roadside checks for licenses or vehicle defects. Both of which have been held not violative of the due process clause.

The second aspect which imposes a penalty for refusal to take the test presents a different question. Does the imposition of a penalty—which involves depriving a person of liberty or property—violate due process of law, since the person is being punished for not performing an affirmative act which could provide evidence against him?

There are several types of statutes concerning the operation of motor vehicles that require affirmative action on the part of a driver that may lead to prosecution for a violation of the law. Failure to perform this affirmative act also carries a separate penalty. Uniformly these statutes have been upheld as not being violative of the due process clause.

A driver must show his license at the request of a police officer. Failure to do so is a misdemeanor in some states.²⁸ The use of roadblocks to check licenses also has been held valid, even if the police officer did not suspect the driver would be in violation of the law.²⁹

A driver can be requested to drive a vehicle on a scale to determine if it is in violation of the weight laws. Failure to do so carries a penalty.³⁰ Drivers also are required to stop and permit inspection of their vehicles for equipment deficiencies.³¹

Footnotes at end of speech.

Statutes also impose duties on persons involved in crashes; they must stop, give identification, and render aid. These also have been held not to violate due process in several states.²²

The third issue is the test itself. Is it of such a nature as to "shock the conscience" of the court and violate its "sense of justice" as was stated in the *Rochin v. California*²³ case? In that case a stomach pump was used to secure evidence of a violation of the narcotics laws.

The U.S. Supreme Court in the *Schmerber*²⁴ case held that the extraction of blood, despite the refusal of the driver to consent, did not offend its "sense of justice" since it was done in a proper manner.

The statute under consideration does not envision the forceable extraction of breath. Thus the issue only might arise if the court found that a criminal penalty was being imposed for refusing to take a test that offended its sense of justice. It is highly questionable that the court would find that blowing into a tube or balloon was comparable to having one's stomach pumped against his will.

The investigatory breath test does not appear to violate the due process clause of the Constitution. Although legal precedents can be cited, and analogies drawn from cases involving the inspection of vehicles, to allow testing of all drivers, a sounder case can be made for permitting such tests based on a reason to believe or suspicion of a violation of the DWI laws.

CONCLUSION

The constitutional issues—self-incrimination, unreasonable search and seizure and due process—are judicial questions determined on considering a set factual situation. It is therefore difficult to predict their application unless the exact factual situation is known.

However, a properly drawn statute providing for an investigatory breath test after a collision or traffic law violation in which the police officer has at least a reasonable suspicion, or a reason to believe, that the driver may be under the influence of alcohol does not appear to present insurmountable constitutional barriers.

PRE-ARREST BREATH TEST STATUTE OR ORDINANCE

The following is a draft statute authorizing an investigatory breath test. Municipalities in about thirty states have authority to pass ordinances of this nature and the wording of the statute could be adopted to an ordinance format.

DRAFT STATUTE

Section —. Operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol; implied consent to chemical test, effect of refusal to submit to tests.

(a) Any person who operates a motor vehicle upon the public highways of this State shall be deemed to have given his consent to submit to a chemical test of his breath, for the purpose of determining the alcoholic content of his blood if he is either involved in any collision which results in property damage, personal injury or death, or is cited, charged or arrested for a violation of any state law relating to a moving vehicle, upon the request of a law enforcement officer who has reason to believe such person was driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol in violation of section — of the statutes of this State.

If such person refuses to submit to such test, none shall be given, but such refusal shall constitute a violation of this section.

(b) Every person convicted of a violation of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $— or by imprisonment for not more than — days or by both fine and imprisonment.

(Penalty could be limited to a fine without imprisonment. States could also use a short license suspension as a penalty. However, if license suspension is used a provision would have to be added to provide for an administrative hearing prior to suspension similar to that contained in implied consent laws.)

GETTING THE ALCOHOL STORY TO THE PEOPLE

(By Howard Pyle)

"If you drink, don't drive!"

For years the National Safety Council gave this advice to drivers. And the Council still believes it's the best rule for drivers to follow.

But—

There are more than 107 million persons who drive in the U.S. and approximately 90 to 95 million who drink—at least occasionally. Very often the categories overlap . . . and so do the activities.

Trying to convince Americans that they should never drive after drinking has proved unsuccessful, for both drinking and driving are part of our current "life style."

Alcoholic beverages are gaining in social acceptance and are served at many public and private gatherings. Frequently, people drive to these functions, as well as to restaurants and bars. In fact, sometimes it's their only way of getting there—and back.

When you tell these people they shouldn't drive after they've had even a small amount of alcohol, they just tune you out. And you lose the chance to reach the very people you want to influence—the ones who drink and drive.

They'll tell you it's possible for most people to have a few drinks and drive home safely. They've seen their friends do it—and they've done it themselves.

The National Safety Council is in the business of saving lives. And you don't save any lives by advocating a policy that the majority of people won't buy. So, being realists, we're changing our approach somewhat. We're asking those who do drink and drive to drink in such a manner that they will not be under the influence when they drive.

In cooperation with the American Medical Society we have launched a program of alcohol education.

The goal of the new program is two-pronged. First, NSC and AMA educational efforts will be aimed at helping individuals determined, as accurately as possible, their personal "accident risk factor" in the use of alcohol. Using self-awareness techniques and known scientific information on alcohol's action in the human body, an individual can roughly predetermine where his own danger level starts.

The second major goal of the program is to build public support among responsible citizens to provide treatment for the drinker who is sick and to encourage the passage and enforcement of appropriate laws governing those who misuse alcohol and present a hazard to themselves, their families and society.

We are still of the opinion that the best policy is for individuals not to drink if they are to perform any activity requiring judgment and skill. But, recognizing the realities of the situation, we believe that many lives can be saved by getting those who do drink and drive to determine a safe drinking-driving level for themselves. In our campaign we plan to give them the "know-how" to do this.

As the occasions for drinking in today's society are endless, so are the chances for alcohol related accidents.

The problem of alcohol and accidents is complex. It involves different kinds of drinking and a variety of hazardous activities. Persons who drink range from once-a-year types through routinely social, moderate, heavy and chronic problem drinkers. And their experience, skills and attitudes are just as varied.

Alcohol is medically classified as a drug—a depressant that acts as an anesthetic on the central nervous system. It is absorbed directly into the blood vessels of the stomach and intestines and carried through the bloodstream to all parts of the body. Concentration of alcohol in the bloodstream is determined by:

- The amount of alcohol consumed;
- The length of time since drinking began;
- The length of time since the last drink; and
- The quantity and kind of food in the stomach at the time of drinking.

The system disposes of alcohol through elimination and oxidation, and the process usually requires about one hour per drink. Black coffee, cold showers and physical exercise may make the drinker more alert (sometimes, a wide-awake drunk), but they do nothing to rid his system of alcohol.

The Licensed Beverage Industries says,

"Ideally, if you are going to drive, it would be better if you didn't drink anything at all."

The American Medical Association states, "The best solution is for the driver who drinks to drink in such a manner that he will not be under the influence when he drives."

The National Safety Council says, "These are the only reasonable, or rational, alternatives. Failure to choose either of them can lead to tragedy."

The AMA-NSC educational program will urge those who choose the second alternative, drinking in such a manner that they will not be under the influence when they drive, to wait at least one hour per average drink before attempting to operate a motor vehicle. This is the minimum amount of time required by the body to rid itself of alcohol.

Last year this nation recorded 55,200 deaths on the roadway. At least half of these fatalities involved alcohol. Alcohol is also an important factor in home, work and play accidents.

While the initial phase of the alcohol education program will stress the problem of alcohol in traffic accidents, the effort will later be broadened to include the other areas.

The National Safety Council will provide radio and TV stations, daily and weekly newspapers, magazines and trade publications with program materials on a weekly basis. The Council will also work through its conferences—traffic, home, farm, motor transportation, school and college, industrial, women and labor. While the major thrust of the campaign will come from the co-sponsors, the American Medical Association and the National Safety Council, the conferences will tailor materials to their particular memberships. Through the conferences, local organizations will be brought into the program. The new advertising campaign of the Advertising Council, which will start in early spring, will also be tied into the drinking-driving program.

The American Medical Association and the National Safety Council hope this new educational program will significantly reduce the number of individuals who lose their lives in alcohol-related accidents at home, at work, at play and on the nation's highways.

THE FACTS ABOUT DRINKING AND ACCIDENTS:
BACKGROUND MATERIAL FOR USE IN ALCOHOL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Drinking is socially acceptable in the United States—eight out of ten men over 21 and two out of three women over 21 drink alcoholic beverages at least occasionally.

Five Basic Points—In any alcohol education program the following points should be stressed.

1. Beverage alcohol is a drug—a central nervous system depressant.

2. Alcohol is absorbed unchanged in the stomach and small intestines and is promptly disseminated by the blood-stream to all parts of the body, including the brain.

3. The depressant effect of alcohol on the nervous system is proportional to the amount of alcohol in the blood which, in turn, is related to the quantity imbibed, the length of time since drinking began, the time between drinks, the nature of the beverage, the body weight and the speed of absorption.

4. Absorption is delayed by

a. the presence of food in the stomach
b. the concentration and nature of the alcoholic beverage.

5. Elimination of alcohol from the body involves two processes. About 90 to 95 per cent of the alcohol is converted to carbon dioxide and water—a process that begins in the liver. The other 5 to 10 per cent is excreted through the lungs and kidneys. Elimination is not accelerated by exercise, fresh air, cold showers, coffee or other "remedies."

Stages of Influence—an individual who continues to drink more rapidly than the alcohol is eliminated from his body generally goes through the following stages of alcoholic influence: mostly sober (hardly influenced), elation, excitement, confusion, stupor, unconsciousness, death.

Blood Levels—Measurement of the concentration of alcohol in the body is usually done by either a blood test or a breath test. These tests are used by police agencies to ascertain whether consumption of alcohol can be presumed to have contributed to traffic accidents and by coroners or medical examiners to determine what role alcohol plays in causing a fatality. These tests are reliable, while visual observation of apparent drunkenness is not.

The table at the end of this article lists various kinds of drinks, the size of the drinks normally served in bars and cocktail lounges, and their alcohol content by per cent and by amount. The second section of the table shows the estimated blood-alcohol levels that individuals of various body weights could reach after one, two and three drinks. These levels are calculated on the basis that the individuals have not eaten and that drinks have been consumed at intervals of 15-20 minutes. The table is meant for educational reference only and does not imply that such precise blood-alcohol concentrations would occur in every individual. Drinks served at home parties often contain considerably more alcohol than those at bars and cocktail lounges.

BIG DIFFERENCE

The general public often uses the words alcohol, whiskey and liquor synonymously. In explaining blood-alcohol levels, it must be clearly understood that the per cent of alcohol in intoxicating beverages varies greatly, with beer usually having the lowest percentage and rum and whiskies the highest. Whiskey, for instance, usually is 45 per cent alcohol. Roughly, one-half of a 1-ounce "shot" glass of this beverage, therefore, would be alcohol. For comparative purposes, it might be well to point out that a 12-ounce bottle of beer and a 1-ounce "shot" glass of whiskey both contain ½ ounce of alcohol, but that a martini contains a full ounce of alcohol. To complicate the matter further, all alcoholic beverages are not of the same strength or "proof." The term "proof" is used most often in reference to the alcohol content of distilled spirits. The proof figure is always twice the percentage figure—90 proof whiskey being 45 per cent alcohol.

Since a blood-alcohol level of 0.10 per cent is generally recognized as the point of intoxication, it might be helpful for purposes of comparison to think in terms of the number of commonly used drinks that will bring on that level, keeping in mind that "drinks" are not always served in precise amounts shown in the table on Page 25. A 120-pound beer drinker reaches the 0.10 per cent level with slightly more than three bottles, but the 180-pound drinker could consume five bottles to reach that limit. With whiskey, the 120-pound person again would reach 0.10 per cent with less than four "shots," but the 180-pound drinker could consume five "shots." Drinking martinis, however, the 120-pound drinker would reach the intoxicating level of 0.10 per cent with about 1½ glasses, and the 180-pound drinker with slightly more than two glasses.

More is known about alcohol and its effect on traffic accidents than about its effect on accidents generally. However, in the absence of data, it is logical to extrapolate information about drinking and driving to other activities that require equivalent or greater skill, alertness and judgment (flying a plane; boating; operation of a power mower, a power tool or farm machinery; swimming; skiing).

Combined with Other Drugs—Millions of Americans are using drugs to a greater extent than ever before. Some of these, such as tranquilizers and some of the antihistamines, can cause inattention, confusion and drowsiness. When such drugs are used in combination with alcohol, the combined effect may be extremely hazardous as far as accidents are concerned.

In Traffic—Many studies reveal drinking to be a factor in a great number of traffic accidents. Studies in Wisconsin and California of accidents causing fatalities show that drinking was involved in more than 50 per cent of those accidents. Not only was drinking involved, but these studies, as well as a recent one in Illinois, showed that most of the drivers had blood-alcohol levels of 0.10 per cent or higher. Studies of pedestrian fatalities show roughly the same picture.

There is a definite correlation between the amount of liquor in the blood and traffic accidents. Studies at Indiana University showed that a driver with a blood-alcohol level of 0.15 per cent has a 25 times greater chance of causing a traffic accident than he would if he were not drinking. Increased accident causation is noticeable at 0.04 per cent, is twice as great at 0.06 per cent, and the probability is at least six times as great at 0.10 per cent. The risk factor as far as pedestrians are concerned probably is similar.

Legal Aspects—It is unlawful in every state for a person under the influence of intoxicating liquor to operate a motor vehicle on a public highway. The definition "under the influence" is, of course, open to judgment, but chemical tests are now generally accepted as the most effective method of determining alcoholic influence. This has led to state laws setting levels at which a person may be presumed to be under the influence. These levels are based on alcohol concentration in the blood, not on the amount of liquor consumed.

The Department of Transportation, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, American Medical Association, National Safety Council and the National Committee on Uniform Traffic Laws and Ordinances all recommend that an individual with a 0.10 per cent blood-alcohol concentration may be presumed to be "under the influence" of intoxicating liquor. This does not mean that one cannot be impaired below that level.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that the administration of chemical tests to determine alcoholic influence does not violate an individual's right against self-incrimination. A practical method of overcoming a driver's unwillingness to take a chemical test is the so-called "implied consent" law which declares in effect that every motorist in exchange for the privilege of driving shall be deemed to have given his consent to a chemical test.

At Home—Alcohol is an important factor in home accidents. A Massachusetts study reported that 20 per cent of males and almost 9 per cent of the females in home accidents had been drinking. Such accidents included falling asleep with lighted cigarettes, poisonings and drownings.

In Recreation—Alcohol is known to be a factor in many forms of recreational accidents. A Federal Aviation Administration 1964 study showed that 39 per cent of the general aviation accidents involved drinking. Most of these were private planes. Since flying is a complex task involving factors such as vision, speed, orientation and altitude, alcohol can be a greater factor in the causation of aircraft accidents than automotive accidents.

The Federal Aviation Administration requires eight hours as a minimum waiting period necessary for flying after drinking. Commercial airlines require a 24-hour waiting period for personnel in the crew compartment.

These rules and recommendations are difficult to enforce for private or non-commercial pilots. Often the identified pilot is a dead one. Enforcement would require testing at many small airports, which is a difficult task. An extensive education program for private pilots, as well as for passengers in private planes, may be part of the answer.

In boating, excessive drinking is a danger to passengers, other boats and swimmers. Boating requires judgment, skill and attitude similar to those required in driving a motor vehicle. Here, too, enforcement is difficult, and an alcohol education program is a must.

Statistics are not available on the number of hunting accidents in which alcohol is a factor. But with the amount of drinking often associated with hunting parties, it is reasonable to assume that the hunter's skill and judgment are often impaired.

Excessive drinking can be hazardous in various sports, particularly swimming. One large city's coroner reported that a high percentage of adult drowning victims apparently were intoxicated when they met their deaths while swimming or after falling from a boat or a pier.

At Work—Alcoholism and heavy drinking can be serious problems in industry, although statistics are lacking as to how large a factor drinking is in the cause of industrial accidents. "Hangovers" interfere with the safe operation of machinery and result in accidents, even when the employe isn't actually "under the influence" on the job.

Studies indicate that employes who are alcoholics have more than twice as many on-the-job accidents and at least 10 times as many off-the-job accidents as nondrinkers. Company programs for identifying and rehabilitating such persons are one means of reducing these accidents.

Possible Solutions—Obviously, there isn't any ready-made, single, easy solution to the problem of drinking and accidents. Public education has been proposed as the best means of attacking the problem of accidents in which alcohol may play a major role. However, it is believed that there are additional means that are particularly applicable to the problem of drinking and driving.

Abstinence from drinking before driving is an obvious solution, but drinking is so widespread and socially acceptable in our society that many drivers will not follow this course. Another course is for the drinking individual to arrange for an unimpaired person to do the driving, or to use other means of transportation.

Without these alternatives, the best solution is for the driver who drinks to drink in such a manner that he will not be under the influence when he drives. This means that most individuals should not drink more than one bottle of beer or one highball an hour. One means of accomplishing this is for the person who intends to drive to decide in advance the maximum he will drink. It is important to make such a firm resolution in advance because one of the first effects of alcohol is that it impairs judgment. Hosts have a responsibility to encourage guests who drink to do so at the suggested leisurely rate.

In addition to diagnosis and treatment, the control of drunken drivers requires enforcement, prosecution, adjudication, sentencing and surveillance. The latter is especially important since many drivers ignore driving restrictions. A California study showed that almost half of the drivers whose licenses were revoked, continued to drive. This accentuates the need for effective educational programs as well as legal approaches. Law enforcement agencies, from police officers through the courts are charged with the restraint of antisocial behavior resulting from intoxication. They need public support for firm enforcement of adequate laws, whether the public is serving as jurors or as citizens interested in the general welfare.

Since heavy drinkers and alcoholics seem to cause many of the accidents, they can serve as a focus for one preventive program. Public education must be directed at those who can influence them to accept treatment—physicians, the courts, treatment centers, friends, families, fellow employes must all help to educate and rehabilitate such persons to the point where they can again drive safely and can engage in home, recreational and work activities with safety to themselves and others.

THE 18-YEAR-OLD VOTING PROVISIONS OF THE VOTING RIGHTS BILL

(Mr. McCORMACK (at the request of Mr. ALBERT) was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I include a letter appearing in the New York Times of April 12, written by Prof. Paul A. Freund and Archibald Cox—former U.S. Solicitor General, 1961-65—both of whom are members of the faculty of the Harvard Law School, in which their opinions are that the 18-year-old voting provisions of the voting rights bill, as it passed the Senate, are constitutional. Professors Freund and Cox are outstanding constitutional lawyers, whose opinions are worthy of most profound consideration.

The letter follows:

POWER OF CONGRESS TO LOWER VOTING AGE UPHELD
CAMBRIDGE, MASS.,
April 6, 1970.

TO THE EDITOR:

Congress has ample constitutional authority to enact pending legislation reducing the voting age to eighteen without a constitutional amendment. The contrary view expressed in these columns [letter April 5] and held by the Department of Justice appears to rest upon several misconceptions.

(1) Although the Constitution leaves the states a measure of authority to set voting qualifications, equal protection clauses circumscribe the state's discretion. The importance of this limitation is attested by decisions that a state may not deny the vote because of nonpayment of a poll tax, membership in the armed forces during the period of residency, or lack of property qualifications.

(2) Katzenbach v. Morgan recognizes that under Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress has the power—and we think the responsibility—to make its own investigation and findings on the constitutionality of state voting classifications, which is conclusive if the Court can "perceive a basis upon which the Congress might resolve the conflict as it did."

To limit Katzenbach v. Morgan to "policing state restrictions on ethnic minorities" is to ignore the fact that the equal protection clause, which Section 5 gives Congress power to enforce, condemns, in the words of the Supreme Court, "any unjustified discrimination in determining who may participate in political affairs or the selection of public officials." Indeed, Section 5 is the primary, if not only, source of authority for eliminating all literacy tests and reducing residency requirements as proposed by the Department of Justice.

(3)—Section 2 of the Fourteenth Amendment (invoked by your correspondents as "conclusive") provides for a reduction of Congressional representation whenever a state denies the franchise to any male citizen "being 21 years of age." The sanction was directed at restriction of the franchise; it has nothing to do with enlargement, as is apparent from state laws reducing the voting age below 21. The most that can be inferred is that in 1866-68, Congress and the state legislatures were willing to accept 21 years as a reasonable measure of the maturity and responsibility necessary to vote at that time. It is nowise inconsistent to conclude that in our time a 21-year requirement unreasonably discriminates against eighteen, nineteen, and twenty-year-olds because of changed conditions—the spread and improvement of education, the age at which young people take jobs, pay taxes, marry and have children, and their interest in public affairs. Since Section 2 did not set an age limit and conditions do change—as all must agree—it did not bind all future Congresses in discharging their responsibilities under Section 5.

There is urgent need to restore the confidence of millions of young Americans in the processes of self-government from which too many have been alienated. Congress, as the representative branch of government, should exercise its responsibility for the fairness of electoral processes under contemporary constitutional decisions.

PAUL A. FREUND.
ARCHIBALD COX.

THE PRESIDENT WAS RIGHT

(Mr. KING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD, and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I believe the President acted wisely last week in announcing that he will seek a strict constitutionalist from outside the South as his next appointee to the Supreme Court.

It is obvious that among the few Senators there is an anti-South bias that is enough to keep any southern judge off of the High Tribunal. It remains to be seen whether this bias also extends to any judge who insists on a strict interpretation of the Constitution.

I hope it does not. It is disheartening to know that any Senator would harbor a grudge against any section of the country. But it would be even more disheartening to learn that some Senators do not believe the President should be able to appoint a man of his philosophy to the Supreme Court.

After all, the people who vote for the President do so on the premise and in the expectation that he govern and appoint according to his philosophy not to that of a small cabal within the Congress.

Much has been written over the week-end attempting to give all sides of the controversy over the appointment to the Supreme Court its fullest coverage. One of the best articles I read and which I feel best covers the subject is an article which appeared in the Sunday, April 12, edition of the Evening Star. The article was written by Gould Lincoln and under leave to extend my remarks I include his personal reaction:

LIBERALS FIGHT TO CONTROL COURT (By Gould Lincoln)

President Nixon, in his statement he would go outside of the South for his next appointee to the Supreme Court, re-emphasized the desperate struggle by liberals in the Senate and outside to retain control of the high court.

Nixon said in bitter terms that the rejection of his nominations of Judge G. Harrold Carswell of Florida and of Judge Clement F. Haynsworth of South Carolina had convinced him no Southerner who believed, as he does, in the strict construction of the Constitution would be confirmed by the Senate as it is now composed. In that he is correct.

Having lost the White House to Nixon the liberals are more than ever determined to hold on to the Supreme Court. What they will do when the President names a judge outside of the South, a Northerner or a Westerner, who is a conservative, remains to be seen.

The defeat of Carswell was engineered by pressure groups, groups which have great influence on many members of the Senate. These pressure groups, as the President well understands, would fight any Southerner appointed to the court. They include civil rights leaders, organized labor, Americans for Democratic Action and anti-war blocks of every description.

Much has been said by the liberals in the Senate about the speedy and favorable action taken by the Senate on the appointment of Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, a native of Minnesota, as an indication of their willingness to confirm a widely known and qualified judge.

Burger was an excellent choice, as he has already proved. But when his name was first presented to the Senate, it is doubtful that more than a half-dozen members had ever heard of him, certainly no more than had heard of Haynsworth, or that Burger's name was widely known, as a jurist, to the American people.

Nixon has been criticized as playing politics in his announced decision not to appoint another Southerner and subject him to the character assassination dealt out to Haynsworth and Carswell by the Senate's liberals. He was merely striking back, and hard, at the Democrats and liberals on the Republican side, who had hit him and his appointees below the belt.

In the Carswell vote, 13 Republican senators deserted the Republican president.

Had only three of these been willing to support the President and vote for Carswell, the judge would have been confirmed by a vote of 49 to 48. So it was the Republican desertions which made it possible for the Democrats to strike a blow against Nixon, a blow they dearly wanted.

The congressional and senatorial elections come up in November. Only three of the Republican senators who voted against Carswell will be on the firing line, Charles E. Goodell of New York, Winston Prouty of Vermont and Hiram L. Fong of Hawaii. Will the "silent majority," which does not relish the crime that has been going on in the streets and homes of America, vote against them?

Also, there is a list of Democrats who voted against Carswell who must face the voters in November. They too, may find they have lost some ground. It would be a real blow to the liberals if the conservatives should gain control of the Senate. And to the Democrats, it would be devastating if the GOP should win the Senate—as they may do.

Among the Democrats who voted against Carswell who will be up for re-election are Thomas Dodd of Connecticut, Quentin Burdick of North Dakota, Howard Cannon of Nevada, Philip Hart of Michigan, Vance Hartke of Indiana, Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, Gale McGee of Wyoming, William Proxmire of Wisconsin, Albert Gore of Tennessee, Joseph Tydings of Maryland, and Harrison Williams of New Jersey. A considerable number of these Democrats face hard fights at the polls and may be upset.

Nixon's decision to appoint a new nominee to the Supreme Court quickly may give some of the Carswell opponents a chance to get off the hook so far as the coming elections are concerned. If, on the other hand, they should vote against the new nominee they may be in for a hard time.

PRESIDENT NIXON WAS RIGHT

(Mr. HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, the extremists have won again. Twice, in little more than a year, the coalition of the ultra left, the vociferous minority, and the over-indulgent liberals, have used the age-old weapon of character assassination one-sidedly tried in the court of public opinion, to cut down the Presidential nominations of Judges Haynsworth and Carswell to be Associate Justices of the Supreme Court.

The rejection of Judge Carswell by the other body can be attributed to nothing more than distortion and smear, brought about by the fear that if he were confirmed, his philosophy as a strict constructionist of the Constitution would return a much-needed balance to the Supreme Court. A balance, I might add, that is vital, in view of the fact that the Court has taken upon itself the power to legislate, rather than interpret the law.

Mr. Speaker, I want to go on record as supporting the statement issued by the President on April 9, when he said that Judge Carswell was not confirmed because he is a southerner and a conservative. I believe what he said to be true.

Judge Carswell was rejected by the U.S. Senate. I do not believe that he was rejected by the majority of the American people. Their vote will not be in until November.

TAKE PRIDE IN AMERICA

(Mr. MILLER of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today we should take note of America's great accomplishments and in so doing renew our faith and confidence in ourselves as individuals and as a Nation.

If the gross national product of the United States in 1967 had been apportioned out on a per capita basis, Mr. average American would have received $4,040. For comparison, here is what he would have received if he lived in the following countries: Sweden, $3,040; Canada, $2,810; Iceland, $2,760; Switzerland, $2,620; Denmark, $2,520; Norway, $2,200; France, $2,190; Belgium, $2,050; Germany, $2,030; the United Kingdom, $1,980; the Netherlands, $1,810; Austria, $1,460; Italy, $1,280; Japan, $1,150; Ireland, $1,060; Spain, $830; Greece, $820; Portugal, $490; and Turkey, $320.

BILINGUAL EDUCATION

(Mr. RYAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, this past September the first bilingual programs funded under the Bilingual Education Act began operation. This was a greatly welcomed beginning to a program which, if adequately funded, will eventually fill the educational needs of the more than 3,000,000 non-English-speaking students who live in all sections of this country.

But the bilingual education program in its present form succeeds in filling the language-education void only minimally. Although $7,500,000 was appropriated for fiscal year 1969, this amount provided schooling for only 1 percent of the students needing this training.

The fiscal year 1970 appropriation for the bilingual education program was increased to $25,000,000. But even this amount would only benefit less than 5 percent of the students who desperately need this service. What is more, the President has used the power granted under section 410 of the Labor-HEW-OEO Appropriation Act, Public Law 91-204, to trim the appropriation to the maximum extent, leaving only $21,250,000. This actual funding falls far short of the full authorization level.

I have introduced H.R. 16553, a supplemental appropriation bill which would bring the appropriation for the Bilingual Education Act to the fully authorized level of $40,000,000 for fiscal year 1970.

With the increased immigration of Puerto Rican and other Spanish-speaking children, the need for bilingual education became more apparent in this last decade. By this year, non-English-speaking students comprise almost 6 percent of the school-age population, ages 5 to 17.

It is obvious that a lack of language skills is a serious learning problem. The educational disadvantages that non-English-speaking students face is appalling. In New York City, the board of education found that fewer than 10 percent of Puerto Rican third graders were reading up to their grade levels in 1966. By the eighth grade, reading disability had increased to such a degree that as many as two-thirds of the Puerto Rican children in that grade were more than 3 years behind.

It is estimated that more than 100,000 Puerto Rican students in New York City require special help with the English language. This figure suggests that almost half of all Puerto Rican students enrolled in New York City schools can hardly hope to progress at a normal rate.

This problem is at least as grave in the Southwest, where many Mexican Americans have settled. In June 1967, Monroe Sweetland, of the National Education Association, testifying before the House Education and Labor Committee:

Spanish-surnamed children lag almost 2 years behind the educationally-disadvantaged Negro child, and from 4 to 5 years behind the average Anglo-American child.

He further stated:

Most of these young people experience academic failure in school. At best, they have limited success. A large percentage become school drop-outs, and little headway is being made against the problem.

Although the language barrier may not be the entire reason for the difficulties encountered by non-English-speaking students, the classroom is probably the best and the easiest place to attack this problem. It is there that we can prevent a tragic loss of talent by helping these students attain competency in English.

Because the need for this program is clearly evident, and because pilot programs have proven to be successful remedies for this language handicap, there is no justification for not fully funding the Bilingual Education Act. This, the Congress has thus far failed to do. In fiscal year 1969 the $7,500,000 appropriation was only 25 percent of the authorized funds. These limited funds made necessary the rejection of almost 300 proposals for bilingual schools submitted to the U.S. Office of Education. Only 20 percent of the proposed plans were approved in fiscal year 1969.

This year the Congress appropriated barely 50 percent of the authorized funds, and the Office of Education estimates that only one-third of the $21,250,000 actually to be spent will be utilized to fund additional new programs.

I want to stress that the purpose of bilingual education is not to destroy an old language, but to create a new one. Mr. Sweetland of the National Education Association stated:

Instead of treating the native language as a blight to be exterminated as we superimpose English, we now know many techniques of teaching which will conserve the mother tongue and parallel it with effectiveness in English. The modern teacher views a native language as a great national resource to be conserved and developed, to be a great strength to our nation in its role of world leadership, not as a negative influence to be suppressed and eradicated.

Most bilingual programs now in operation—76 in 21 States—conduct two half-day sessions, one in English and one in the mother tongue. By giving students an exposure to their first language, they learn to appreciate it, as well as their cultural heritage, instead of rejecting both.

I would like to insert at this point in the RECORD an article from the Gallup, N. Mex., Independent of January 27, 1970, reporting on a TESOL—teachers of English to speakers of other languages—conference which discussed the need for bilingual education; and an article from the September 1969, issue of Center Forum by Rosa Inclan, describing a bilingual school in operation in Miami, Fla.:

TESOL AND BILINGUAL EDUCATION URGED

GALLUP.—The urgency of teaching non-English children in their own language while they are learning English was stressed at a TESOL meeting in Gallup last Friday.

Dr. Bernard Spolsky, a University of New Mexico education professor delivered the main speech to the New Mexico Association for TESOL (Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages) and Bilingual Education.

New Mexico was the first state to organize TESOL teachers on a state level, and according to Dr. James Alatis, Executive Secretary of the National TESOL Association, this state is the most active affiliate in the nation. Dr. Spolsky is President of the State TESOL Association.

"It's a safe bet that the average first grade teacher in New Mexico faces a class one quarter of whom don't speak English," Dr. Spolsky said. "If we are not to waste a child's first six years of language learning, we must proceed with his own language all the time that we are teaching him English."

"Evidence suggests a child taught to read in his own language will learn to read English better and more quickly," Dr. Spolsky said.

Dr. Spolsky also challenged the "melting pot" hypothesis and said it should be replaced by "an acceptance of cultural pluralism—a recognition that one of America's greatest strengths lies in the many kinds of people who live here, each with his own contribution to America."

Approximately 150 educators from throughout New Mexico and Arizona attended the annual meeting which was held at the Golden Lion Cafeteria in Gallup. Those attending represented local public schools, Bureau of Indian Affairs and parochial schools in both states.

Four other experts in the field of language learning who also attended this meeting are Dr. David Harris, President of the National TESOL Association; Dr. James Alatis; Dr. Russell Campbell, Professor in the Department of English at the University of California, Los Angeles, and Dr. Frederick Bosco, Professor in the Department of Languages and Linguistics at Georgetown University.

After Dr. Spolsky's speech, the remainder of the evening consisted of small group discussions which gave everyone an opportunity to meet informally with the guest speakers.

The following is the text of Dr. Spolsky's remarks at the TESOL meeting in Gallup:

"By the time a child comes to school, he and his parents have already six years in language acquisition.

"These first years are critical for language learning; it is the time at which it can be done best and most cheaply. School then builds on the work. If the school ignores what has been done at home, the six-years are wasted. And if a child's linguistic wealth is ignored, the chance that he will be able to get a good education is vastly reduced.

"For, as is obvious to all of us who teach, the first necessity for education is communication between teacher and pupil: if a child can't understand what his teacher says, he can not learn.

"In New Mexico, at the present time, one might safely guess that teachers can't talk to one quarter of their beginning pupils. Failure to recognize this language situation in the State has meant that our schools have been working at greatly reduced efficiency, and that the potential intelligence of a quarter of the children is being needlessly squandered.

"Let me give you some figures.

"The New Mexico State Department of Education estimates that in 1969, half of the grade classrooms in the State had more than 45 per cent Spanish surnamed children.

"For Title I ESEA Schools, the Department estimated that 38 per cent of the enrollment in 1969 were Spanish surnamed, and over 6 per cent Indian. What does this mean in terms of language?

"Take the case of Navajo children. In the Gallup-McKinley urban schools, we find that 40 per cent of the six-year-old Navajo children speak Navajo, 40 per cent speak only English, and 20 per cent speak both.

"In Gallup-McKinley rural schools, 62 per cent speak Navajo, only 9 per cent speak English, and 29 per cent speak both.

"Conservatively, one might estimate that half of the Spanish surnamed children in the State come to school speaking Spanish rather than English, and more than half of the Indian children speak their language rather than English. So, it is a safe bet that the average first grade teacher in New Mexico faces a class one quarter of whom don't speak English.

"American schools, like all of American society, assume that their pupils will speak the standard language, and punish in various ways those that do not.

"Education is not doing its job until it can help children overcome the disadvantage of not speaking English. The first job of the school then must be to find out the language or dialect background of each individual child; then, in the best and most efficient way, to make it possible for that child to acquire the standard language.

"Our task, as teachers of English to speakers of other languages, is to join with our fellow professionals and learn what is the best and most efficient way; as teachers within the schools, it is to make sure that our school systems put this into operation and as citizens of New Mexico, it is to ensure that the financial resources are available to save the human resources.

"It is imperative at the moment, to be specific, that the current legislators do not sacrifice their children's future for votes in the next election. Better education must come before tax cuts.

"There is a second and equally important job, that we must do at the same time. If we are not to waste the child's first six years of language learning, we must proceed with his education in his own language all the time that we are teaching him English.

"Even when we have looked after the E in TESOL, remember what we are left as: Teachers of Speakers of Other Languages.

"The most efficient way to teach a child is to teach him in his own language. There is good reason to believe that not only will this be more efficient and satisfying, but it will improve his English learning.

"Such evidence as we have suggests strongly that a child taught to read in his own language will learn to read English better and more quickly.

"I've been talking here only in economic terms, of tangible results and of avoiding waste, but there is another factor which cannot be quantified.

"Can we measure in dollars the loss to a community of its language, its way of life, its distinctive history?

"For a long time, Americans have believed that the United States was a melting pot; that its citizens should wish to belong to a single, English-speaking culture.

"It is time perhaps for the melting pot hypothesis to be replaced by an acceptance of cultural pluralism, a recognition that one of America's greatest strengths lies in the many kinds of people who live here, each with his own contribution to America.

"If we accept this view, we then must talk of more than just the transitional bilingual schooling that I have been calling for, and consider the strategies to be followed in permanently maintaining more than one language in our society. But I must leave that for now, for I am concerned tonight with the more urgent and more apparent waste of the State's human resources.

"The language situation in New Mexico demands a combination of teaching English as a second language and bilingual education. To leave either out is wasteful, and criminally so when we have so much need of educational efficiency.

"Every child coming to school must be taught the standard language if he is to have access to the general culture and economy. At the same time he has a right to be taught in his own language while he is learning enough English to handle the rest of the curriculum, and to continue to be taught in his own language if his community wishes to maintain its own culture and language.

"To help see that this is done is the reason for our Association's existence, the meaning of our name, and the task ahead of us all."

CORAL WAY ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

(Dade County Public Schools, Miami, Fla., for Spanish-speaking and English-speaking children, grades 1-6, Rosa Inclan, supervisor, Bilingual Education)

First two-way bilingual education program in public elementary school in U.S.; student body mainly middle-income, 50 per cent English-speaking, 50 per cent Spanish-speaking, Cuban refugees; divided by language background into separate classes with daily instruction for both groups in native language, and second language; team teaching used, one English-speaking, one Spanish-speaking teacher. Staff recruitment facilitated through large available number of experienced Cuban teachers. Goal: literate, educated bilinguals.

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Dade County, Miami, Florida, covers a metropolitan area with a population of over 1,000,000, and a high concentration of Cuban refugees. Of the 220,000 student body in the more than 150 elementary schools of Dade County, about one-tenth or 20,000 are Cuban refugee children.

In an effort to cope with the problem of educating these Spanish-speaking children, a bilingual program was started in the Coral Way Elementary School in Dade County in September 1963. The Coral Way School was selected for the bilingual experiment because it had a student body evenly divided into English-speaking and Spanish-speaking backgrounds; it was in a reasonably stable middle-class community; and, further, the staff, administration and school parents had shown an interest in a bilingual education program.

The program began in the fall of 1963 with twelve experimental bilingual classes, four in first grade, four in second grade and four in third grade; at each grade level two of the classes consisted of English-speaking children and two of Spanish-speaking children. The intention was that these pupils continue in the experimental program for the remainder of their elementary education; a new grade was added to the program each school year so that by 1966 the program ran from first through sixth grade. All children in the first through third grades were eligible for the program when it began; admission was voluntary, parents were given the option of putting their children in the bilingual program or in a traditional English-only program, and could withdraw child from bilingual program at any time.

In the early grades approximately half the day is spent in each language, with the concepts learned in the morning in the native language and in the afternoon in the second language. Thus, the Spanish-speaking classes receive instruction in Spanish language arts, science and social studies in the morning and this instruction is reinforced for the same subjects in the afternoon. For the English-speaking children, the process is reversed. Each class is taught by a team of two teachers, one native English-speaking, one native Spanish-speaking. The children are brought together in mixed classes for music, art and physical education. Mixed play periods are supervised by teacher aides who are free to use either Spanish or English, thereby giving all pupils a chance to hear a second language in a normal, everyday activity. Beginning with third grade, classes have become increasingly mixed with instruction, for the major subjects, depending on language best fitting the content, i.e., a Latin American history class in Spanish; Colonial New England history in English; or either language used for a math lesson. By the sixth grade many of the classes are mixed and taught in either language.

In first and second grade in Dade County the school day runs from 8:30 A.M. to 2:00 P.M. In the bilingual program the school day has been lengthened for one hour for the last twelve weeks of first grade and for second grade. This provides extra time mainly for teaching reading in the second language, which instruction begins after the foundation for vernacular reading has been established. For many pupils this means that reading instruction in second language begins as early as the thirteenth week of first grade.

PERSONNEL AND TEACHER TRAINING

In September 1963 when the program began, there were twelve teachers for the twelve experimental classes: six teachers were native English-speaking monolinguals and six were native Spanish-speaking bilingual Cuban teachers. Three teachers aides also assisted in music, art and physical education, supervised play periods, and helped with clerical work.

The native English-speaking teachers were selected from the Coral Way faculty and most were ESL-trained. The native Spanish-speakers were experienced Cuban teachers who had completed a special course at the University of Miami certifying them to teach in Florida. The teachers work in teams with one English-speaking teacher handling instruction in English for one English-speaking and one Spanish-speaking class and one Spanish-speaking teacher working with the same two classes.

Before the bilingual program officially began, in the summer of 1963, a six week curriculum workshop was organized for all teachers and aides in the program. In the morning, courses were given in "Basic Linguistics" and "Structures of the English Language"; the afternoons were devoted to developing plans and materials for use in all phases of the curriculum. A similar workshop was held in the summer of 1964.

A mandatory planning hour for teachers of each grade group was included in the school day, during which time the teachers went over weekly and long-range plans and discussed class problems.

CURRICULUM AND MATERIALS

The curriculum follows that used in all Dade County Schools. Special attention has been given to developing seven curriculum areas: ESL, SSL, Spanish and vernacular, science, music, art and physical education.

In first and second grade, the tests used for teaching English to the non-English-speaking children is the Miami Linguistic Readers Series, the reading program developed in Dade County.

For instruction in Spanish, four series of tests are used: Spanish basal readers; a parallel translation of an English Science series; a Spanish health series and a Spanish modern math series.

TESTING AND EVALUATION

A three year evaluative study (1964-66) has been made of the Coral Way program with traditional English-only classes in another school in the county used as control. Tests used included: Stanford Achievement, Otis Alpha and California Test of Mental Maturity. For measuring proficiency in second language, pupils in the bilingual program were given parallel English and Spanish editions of the Cooperative Inter-American Reading Tests. Results of the evaluative study showed that the bilingual program is as effective as the regular, traditional curriculum in achieving progress in paragraph meaning, word meaning, spelling, arithmetic reasoning, and arithmetic computation for English and Spanish-speaking pupils. Although, at the end of the third year, the students were not yet as proficient in their second language as in their native language, they had made impressive gains in learning their second language.

PARENT AND COMMUNITY ROLE

In the late spring of 1963, before the program began, a series of meetings were held with the parents during which the goals of the bilingual program were explained and discussed, including the voluntary nature of the bilingual classes. Paul W. Bell, Supervisor of Bilingual Education in Dade County reports that while a number of parents did not enroll their children in the program when it first started, after one year, these parents requested that their children be transferred to the program, with the result that the school gave up its regular English-only program and has only a bilingual program now. Parents have reported that their third grade students are helping their high school siblings with Spanish lessons.

Another bilingual program was started in another elementary school in Dade County in 1966. The school, the Leroy D. Fienberg Elementary School is located at 1420 Washington Avenue, Miami Beach, Florida.

FINANCING

Originally the Coral Way bilingual program was financed for three years by a Ford Foundation grant received by the Dade County School Board. The grant was given to the Board to develop bilingual education projects including the establishment of a bilingual school program for three years.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows to:

Mr. BRADEMAS (at the request of Mr. GRAY), for today, on account of official business.

Mr. REES (at the request of Mr. SISK), for today, on account of official business.

Mr. STUCKEY (at the request of Mr. BRINKLEY), for today, on account of official business.

Mr. PEPPER (at the request of Mr. FOUNTAIN), for today, on account of official business.

Mr. LENNON (at the request of Mr. FOUNTAIN), for today and remainder of week, on account of official business.

Mr. ROONEY of New York (at the request of Mr. ALBERT), for Monday, April 13, 1970, on account of illness.

Mr. BARING (at the request of Mr. ANDERSON of California), for today, on account of illness in family.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 3430. An act to amend the Peace Corps Act to authorize additional appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. FRIEDEL, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 8654. An act to provide that, for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, individuals who were illegally detained during 1968 by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea shall be treated as serving in a combat zone; and

H.R. 15349. An act to amend the Railway Labor Act in order to change the number of carrier representatives and labor organization representatives on the National Railroad Adjustment Board, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 14, 1970, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1907. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations, Department of State, transmitting copies of a Presidential determination and related memoranda authorizing military grant assistance to an economically developed country; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1908. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting proposed supplemental appropriations and other provisions for the fiscal year 1970 (H. Doc. No. 91-306); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1909. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting amendments to the requests for appropriations transmitted in the budget for the fiscal year 1971 (H. Doc. No. 91-305); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1910. A letter from the Director, Bureau of the Budget, Executive Office of the President, transmitting a report that the appropriation to the Department of Justice for "Fees and expenses of witnesses" for the fiscal year 1970, has been reapportioned on a basis which indicates the need for a supplemental estimate of appropriation, pursuant to section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U.S.C. 665); to the Committee on Appropriations.

QUARTERLY REPORTS

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the fourth calendar quarter 1969:

(NOTE.—The form used for registration is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective letter and number.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

- NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
- (i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
 - (ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
- (b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
- (i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
 - (ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

- A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.
 2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.
2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.
3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out item "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the fourth calendar quarter 1969:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective letter and number.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

Year: 19_____

P	QUARTER

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

- (i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
- (ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
- (b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
 - (i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
 - (ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

- 1. State name, address, and nature of business.
- 2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) if a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

- 1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.
- 2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.
- 3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out item "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

SENATE—Monday, April 13, 1970

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian and was called to order by the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. METCALF).

Eternal Father of Life, fountain of our being and light of all our days, giver of every good and perfect gift, we pause for cleansing, for renewal, for dedication, and for direction in daily duties. Make our hearts and the hearts of all the people a temple wherein Thy spirit dwells.

Lift this Nation to holier living and higher purposes. Make it a land where all who toil shall be honored and rewarded; where a man's worth is reckoned higher than the things he makes or uses; where property is valued as the extension of the person; where science serves not destruction but preservation of the common good; where all men have freedom under the law; and where by Thy pervading presence we live in the unity of spirit and the bonds of peace.

O God, we beseech Thee to guide this Nation and its leaders through the perils and conflicts of the present into the glorious light of the new day when Thy kingdom comes and Thy will is done on earth.

In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Geisler, one of his secretaries.

MARINE SCIENCE AFFAIRS—SELECTING PRIORITY PROGRAMS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—(H. DOC NO. 91-304)

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

The fact that the United States is first in space is well known; it is less well known that we are also first in oceanic science and technology. And while most of our citizens recognize the opportunities which lie before us in space, fewer understand the enormous benefits which can flow from our national maritime activities.

During 1969, the National Council on Marine Resources and Engineering Development, chaired by the Vice President, identified a number of policies and programs concerning the sea which, in their judgment, deserve Federal support. I am today transmitting to the Congress the Council's annual report, "Marine Science Affairs—Selecting Priority Programs." The marine science programs which I have approved for Fiscal Year 1971 are based in part on the Council's recommendations.

My budget request for Fiscal Year 1971 provides $533.1 million for marine science and technology activities. These funds would help us to improve the management of our coastal zone, expand Arctic research, develop a program for restoring damaged lakes, expand the collection of data concerning ocean and weather conditions, reduce merchant ship operating costs, and undertake other important projects. The funds would also support U.S. participation in the International Decade of Ocean Exploration, a program which can contribute much to the quality of the marine environment and to the pursuit of world peace.

In November of 1969, this Administration sent to the Congress a comprehensive proposal for protecting and developing the land and water resources of the nation's estuarine and coastal zone. I hope that the Congress will give this program early and careful attention.

The Federal government will continue to provide leadership in the nation's marine science program. But it is also important that private industry, State and local governments, academic, scientific and other institutions increase their own involvement in this important field. The public and private sectors of our society must work closely together if we are to meet the great challenges which are presented to us by the oceans of our planet.

RICHARD NIXON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1970.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. METCALF) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.
