EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IS THE UNITED STATES TO LOSE A DOMINANT POSITION IN STOL DEVELOPMENT AS IT DID ON SST?

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the Congress has—unwisely, in my opinion—thwarted U.S. efforts to be at least competitive, if not dominant in the realm of supersonic air transport.

I am wondering now if our country, with both the executive and the legislative branches seemingly dillydallying, is on the verge of accepting a second place—or lower—position in another critical aeronautical area; namely, in short-haul air travel via STOL—short takeoff and landing—equipment and specialized system.

This Senator has long been an advocate of acceleration of research and development of STOL equipment and systems in this country that would be fully compatible with the jet age. I have been disappointed that so little attention has been paid to this vital area of aeronautics by so few of the airlines and by the airframe equipment manufacturers—and by the several recent administrations of the Federal Government.

Now, Mr. President, as we have been reading of Canadian progress—aggressive progress—by the Canadians, I am even more disappointed with STOL progress in the United States.

Perhaps we can afford to slumber in the realm of the supersonic transport while other nations leave us in the supersonic wake. I believe, however, we would be excessively derelict if we in the United States are complacent and permit Canada or any other nation to pass us and go to the forefront of the developing STOL industry.

These are vital programs for the movement of people from place to place on this earth via air. Are we neglecting this important program of direct benefits for our own people while spending excessively of our money, time, and talent on exploration of the moon and the gathering of moon dust and moon rocks? I am afraid that the answer is in the affirmative—that we give space exploration higher priority than the people's program of supersonic travel and short-haul travel.

As mentioned, there is current published documentation to support the Canadian progress in the STOL equipment and system development—a progress that makes ours in the United States pale by comparison, so far as I have been able to determine. I call attention especially to an article, "For Quick Hops Between Big Cities—Look At Canada's Plan," in the June 7, 1971, issue of U.S. News & World Report. And there is a much more complete and thoroughly informative article in the June 1971 issue of Science Dimension, a magazine published by the National Research Council of Canada.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks the two articles mentioned.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOR QUICK HOPS BETWEEN BIG CITIES—LOOK AT CANADA'S PLAN

OTTAWA.—The Canadian Government is considering the investment of 150 million dollars in an air-travel system designed to meet Canadian and U.S. needs for inexpensive transportation over distances of 500 miles or less.

The project—known as STOL, for "short take-off and landing"—will use propeller-driven aircraft that can land on airstrips of 2,000 feet. Air service can thus be provided inside cities or adjacent to smaller towns.

The Canadian Government announced on May 13 it is moving "as quickly as possible" on the first phase of its operational plan—establishment of an experimental shuttle service between Montreal and Ottawa, a distance of about 125 miles. It will use De Havilland's Twin Otters, carrying 14 passengers.

Landing terminals would be the parking lot of Montreal's 1967 exposition and probably Rockliffe Airport in Ottawa.

Air Canada, the Government-owned airline, will operate the service.

Second phase of the program would be the introduction of De Havilland's 48-seat DHC-7. A 70-passenger STOL is on the drawing boards.

TOTAL SYSTEM

As seen here, the STOL system goes beyond the mere manufacture and sale of aircraft. The Canadians hope to offer a total system, including aircraft, navigational aids, air-traffic control, airports and other supporting services.

Use of STOL, it is expected, would overcome the disadvantages of airports far from city centers, and the high cost of air service between cities near one another. It could cut highway traffic.

The STOL system, Canadians believe, is especially tailored to produce competitive transportation service in the U.S. Northeast corridor—mainly New York to Boston and possibly Washington.

The Canadian initiative is in part inspired by the drop-off of U.S. defense orders for the Vietnam war. The aerospace industry here is suffering from unemployment.

The industry is seen to fit particularly into the needs of the Montreal area, where unemployment and unrest are highest in Canada.

AUTHENTICATED U.S. GOVERNMENT INFORMATION GPO

"MAXIMUM RETURN"

Key persons in the industry discount Canada's potential to build a major air industry. They see it as geared more to the supplying of component parts.

But the Science Council of Canada believes the STOL concept would fit into Canada's capabilities and would yield a "maximum return on investment with minimum capital outlays."

The Council predicts by 1975 a potential of 3 billion passenger miles with an outlay for operational development of 200 million dollars a year.

Canadians believe they have about a two-year head start in STOL systems. There is some confirmation for that view in the U.S., where work in the STOL field has been mostly in the study stage.

WHERE U.S. STANDS

There are several short-haul "commuter service" airlines operating in the U.S., such as one in the Los Angeles area. These carriers generally operate out of small suburban airports, flying back and forth across big metropolitan centers.

The world's largest Twin Otter fleet is operated by Golden West Airlines, serving 159 California cities from 19 major terminals. Some 13 per cent of all arrivals and departures at Los Angeles International Airport are Golden West flights.

Of 300 Twin Otters now operating around the world, 170 are in the U.S. and are valued at 86 million dollars. Engines of both the Twin Otter and the DHC–7 are Pratt & Whitney, made by United Aircraft of Canada, Ltd.

The Civil Aeronautics Board in Washington is investigating the possibilities of STOL use in the Northeast corridor. One small airline used STOL planes to shuttle between the three Washington-Baltimore airports last year—but the service did not catch on. One difficulty of the system was illustrated in New York City, where the possibility of a floating STOL airport in the Hudson River ran into strong objections from nearby residents.

Several big aerospace companies—such as Boeing—are working on technology of STOL aircraft, but no full-fledged STOL planes are on production lines—except for small conventional aircraft being used as commuter planes.

Says an aviation-industry economist:

"We're seeing the beginning of interest in STOL. The market at the moment, however, is indeterminate because we don't have enough planes and airfields to test it fully."

A foreword to a special study on aeronautics prepared for the Science Council of Canada states that it seems likely that future aeronautical research and development activities in Canada may be related more to civil aviation than to the needs of the defense sector. The results of the study indicate that the most challenging avenues open to Canadian manufacturers of complete aircraft appear to be based on their existing and potential capability to design and develop short take-off and landing (STOL) aircraft systems.

The study points out that in the densely populated industrial areas of the world ground transportation systems have become saturated or are approaching saturation with no easy solution in immediate sight. Short-haul air trips of under 250 miles are hampered by existing aircraft which require vast airport areas and by ground congestion which can cause portal-to-portal travel times of up to four hours.

Development of vertical take-off and landing (VTOL) aircraft systems promises to relieve this short-haul dilemma but only when problems of VTOL noise control and economics have been solved. It is very likely that the evolution will see short take-off and landing (STOL) aircraft as an intermediate stage of development with a gradual introduction of the VTOL concept.

It has been estimated that Canada currently has a one to two-year lead over many other industrial countries in STOL technology. To exploit this lead, the Federal Government has been asked to give the green light to a proposal creating a new transportation system based on STOL aircraft. A consortium of 16 aerospace companies has proposed that the Government become a major partner in Regionair STOL Canada—a demonstration service designed to show that STOL aircraft are the interim answer to transportation congestion problems in densely populated areas. The Regionair proposal calls for the Government and the aerospace and air transport industries to cooperate in a two-phase operation designed to produce an operating STOL system by mid-1972.

The definition of short take-off and landing is arbitrary, but the generally accepted field length is about 2,000 feet. Various means of operating from such fields have been evolved. A large wing area in relation to weight permits short take-off but gives poor ride in rough air and is inefficient. Large flaps and more direct means of boundary layer control have been used. The most promising current technique makes use of deflected propeller slipstreams to provide additional lift to an aircraft's wings.

The Twin Otter, manufactured by de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited, is in this category. It was chosen as the operating aircraft for the initial phase of Regionair because this Canadian-made STOL aircraft has been a success in commercial air transport operations around the world. This 14-passenger aircraft would be in service until a new mode of service could be inaugurated—possibly by mid-1974—using the de Havilland DHC–7, a 48-passenger, four-engine turboprop. It is the only aircraft of its size or larger that would be available in the next three to five years and meets noise criteria for city centre operation. The DHC–7 is currently undergoing final model tests and is programmed for quantity production in 1973.

Initial STOL routes under consideration call for service between two points in Vancouver and Victoria, between two points in Toronto from the Niagara peninsula, and between two points in Montreal from Ottawa with later links to the new airport at Ste. Scholastique. These are typical routes and reflect the 100-mile or less operating range dictated by choice of the Twin Otter.

The project calls for construction of three types of STOL ports within cities—high density capacity ranging from one to four million passengers per year and low density capacity ranging from one-half to two million passengers per year. There also will be STOL strips at airports capable of handling either low- or high-density traffic. These strips will be integrated into major airports. The total STOL system incorporates aircraft, STOL ports, navigational aids, air-traffic control, and other supporting services.

Based on unchanged operation over the three routes outlined, the major capital expenditures would be $8,400,000 for 14 Twin Otters at $600,000 each and $36,600,000 for seven high-density and two low-density STOL ports. Total annual operating costs for the 14 aircraft operating 3,600 hours per year is estimated at $7,500,000.

Estimating revenues at $1 per passenger per year, supporters of the project expect the system is not likely to break even with only 14 planes. Expansion of routes and introduction of the DHC–7 is expected to change this projection.

Backers of the Regionair proposal draw on the Science Council Report No. 11 to cite the benefits Canada would derive from a fully functioning STOL system. These include sales of $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 in aircraft alone; 28,000 to 56,000 man-years of employment in high technology industries from aircraft sales alone; equal travel opportunities to large and small communities; improvement in the environment in areas of pollution, congestion, noise and land use; suitability of STOL for northern development and reduction in government expenditures through delaying expansion of existing airports.

The government-industry partnership STOL operation concept has been greeted favorably by the Science Council. In its recently-released report on STOL, the Council notes that Canada has the skills to tackle the STOL system but that they are spread through a number of companies so "it will be necessary to find some means of amalgamating the design capabilities of one company with the production capabilities of another."

The Science Council urges the Government to undertake to establish a STOL system as quickly as possible as a "major program". The Science Council criteria for such a program is a large multidisciplinary, mission-oriented program having as a goal the solution of important economic and social problems in which all sectors of the scientific community must participate on an equal footing.

The program would call for a total net investment of $150,000,000. Designing and developing STOL aircraft and putting them into production could cost between $75,000,000 and $80,000,000. STOL port cost is estimated at $5,000,000 each, with supporting services for five STOL ports set at about $50,000,000. An unspecified amount would also be needed for feasibility studies and long-term developments aimed at maintaining Canada's lead in STOL technology.

A significant portion of any such long-term development work would involve the National Research Council of Canada. The NRC laboratories, whose facilities devoted to aeronautical research carry a $40,000,000 book value, over the last 25 years have been involved in support of the design, construction or operation of every significant aircraft and engine type built in Canada.

A recently completed $7,000,000 low-speed wind tunnel with a 30-foot square working section, was constructed specifically to be of assistance to industry in the V/STOL fields. The first aircraft company to utilize this facility on a time-rental basis was de Havilland with a scale model of its DHC–7. Canadair Limited of Montreal followed immediately after with a propeller component for an experimental four-engine propeller-driven tilt-wing experimental V/STOL aircraft. The 30-foot wind tunnel is a major component of the Low Speed Aerodynamics Section of NRC.

In addition to operating low-speed tunnels, the Section conducts independent research projects. A current one involves investigations into the "externally blown jet flap." Ten years ago it was found that a tremendous lift effect could be achieved at low speeds by directing the jet flow onto the flaps. However, with the engines of that time the hot gases burned the flaps. Turbofan-type engines now in use produce a cold flow. The Section is currently doing jet STOL airfoil design studies to improve on existing cold flow techniques that blow air into the wing, carry it through the wing via internal piping and direct it onto the flaps.

Another area of research currently under investigation by NRC's Low Speed Section is the problem of air turbulence. STOL Aircraft with large wings and slow speeds and flying at low levels are particularly vulnerable to turbulence. Researchers are currently analyzing data from tests measuring unsteady forces on propeller and wing configurations.

One of the characteristics to be found in STOL aircraft is sensitivity to crosswinds. De Havilland used NRC's helicopter airborne four degrees of freedom simulator, developed by NRC's Flight Research Section, to modify the lateral control design for the DHC–7. In the NRC simulator, one pilot acts as safety pilot and program manager. The second is the evaluation pilot who flies the aircraft in the ordinary manner. However, instead of directly manipulating the rotors, his controls generate electrical signals. These are fed into an inboard analogue computer in which electric models of flight and control characteristics of a STOL aircraft have been set up. In response to these input signals, the computer puts out output signals which activate hydraulic servo systems controlling the rotors, causing the helicopter to adopt the characteristics of the electric model. Special instruments measure the actual motion of the helicopter and compare it with the motion required by the electric mode. The system reduces to zero the difference between the actual and required motion. The behavior of the helicopter becomes that of the model.

In a recent month-long series of tests a proposed configuration for aileron spoilers was tested to ensure that, when the first test flight of the DHC–7 took place, residual nonlinearities would not detract from aircraft handling qualities and render precision manoeuvres and fine control beyond pilot capacity.

To stimulate forces at the control wheel, the evaluation pilot took control and flew a realistic STOL approach task. At a prescribed height he performed a sidestep manoeuvre, used whenever a pilot finds himself off to one side of a runway and needs to line up with markers on the ground. Control passed back to the safety pilot at approximately five feet above the ground at the end of the sidestep manoeuvre.

While the Flight Research and Low Speed Sections are concerned with air-frame operations, NRC's Engine Laboratory has had a role in the development of the engine that is to power the DHC–7.

Choice of de Havilland for the DHC–7 and the Twin Otter is United Aircraft of Canada's PT–6 gas turbine engine. The PT–6 has become one of Canadian industry's most significant success stories. The 4,000th PT–6 engine was delivered in December, 1970. In 1969, when the engine had accounted for more than 3,000,000 hours of flying time, it achieved recognition as the most widely used powerplant of light turboprop aircraft in the world.

The Engine Laboratory, through efforts dating back to the Second World War, has won an international reputation for its work on anti-icing problems of aircraft gas turbines. The PT–6 had an alcohol anti-icing system, when it was first tested in 1960. The alcohol was sprayed on critical engine surfaces during flights through clouds, rain, snow, etc. Working with United Aircraft, Engine Laboratory engineers helped to evolve an alternative system that was certified for commercial flight in the United States and Canada in 1964.

The new system is an inertial one. Air is sent into the engine in such a way that precipitation is left behind and the engine inhales air minus rain or ice crystals.

However, the main emphasis in the Engine Laboratory has not been on current STOL aircraft—whose propulsion technology as embodied in the DHC–7/PT–6 is virtually complete—but on the short-haul vehicle of the 1980s and beyond, the VTOL aircraft. For the last 15 years, the Laboratory has focused its effort on the fan-in-wing VTOL concept. This involves designing lifting fans to be placed in the wings of an aircraft, giving an aircraft vertical rising and hovering capability. The fans would be covered over in high-speed forward flight and would not effect the aircraft's performance in this respect since they are not used for cruising.

Initial work was devoted to developing on a model scale, a fan which would produce high-lift efficiency. Later work was devoted to the problem associated with the drive mechanism, since the system has an external jet engine or gas generator whose hot compressed gases are fed into a tip-mounted turbine, thereby driving the lifting fan.

Current efforts are focused on the much more challenging problem of how the lifting fan behaves as the aircraft starts to move forward. There is a flow over the wings as well as through the wing due to the action of the fan. The fan is subjected to an extremely distorted air inflow which tends to deteriorate its aerodynamic performance. Additionally, the airflow loads the fan mechanically in a manner that produces high vibratory forces, which must be coped with in the fan design. In co-operation with NRC's Gas Dynamics Laboratory crossflow studies on a one-foot diameter fan-in-wing model have been undertaken in the propulsion tunnel.

Designed and operated for V/STOL propulsion research by the Gas Dynamics Laboratory, the tunnel has a 10-foot wide by 20-foot high by 40-foot long working section. This facility was constructed in 1962 specifically for the investigation of problems of safety, economy, noise and performance associated with V/STOL propulsion systems. Models representing possible full-scale engine arrangements are powered by an external source of compressed air (up to 50 pounds per second) and develop up to 1,000 pounds thrust. A 26-foot diameter fan subjects the model to a mainstream flow of about 200 miles per hour.

Several VTOL propulsion systems are currently under active study by the Gas Dynamics Laboratory. These include experimental studies conducted on a single engine system used to power both lift and forward propulsion (similar to the Pegasus engine used in the British VTOL fighter, the Harrier) and on separate lift engine systems designed specifically for low operating noise levels, e.g. Rolls Royce's RB 202 lift fan.

With the Harrier type engine, the engine intakes are always facing forward and thrust direction, either vertical or horizontal, is changed by exhausting the jets through rotatable nozzles. In the separate lift engine concept, the lift engines (fans) are installed in a near vertical attitude. On completion of the lifting function these engines are shut down and separate propulsion engines are used for forward drive. As with the fan-in-wing arrangement this lift engine receives a disturbed non-uniform air flow in the transition from hovering to wingborne flight.

A great deal of the work in this area of lifting performance has been done in the propulsion tunnel, initially with simple wooden models and later with powered models limited to single isolated thrusting fans. Tunnel personnel are now into the next stage—the study of crossflow effects on a tandem installation of three one-quarter-scale models of the RB 202 lift-fan. This study is expected to contribute materially to the first actual aircraft projects employing this engine.

ADM. ELMO ZUMWALT'S CHECKERBOARD NAVY

HON. JOHN R. RARICK

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. RARICK. Mr. Speaker, the American people may soon start understanding the significance of equal employment opportunity.

Admiral Zumwalt recently announced that the incoming class at the Naval Academy for 1971–72 will "double the enrollment of blacks and other minority race midshipmen this year."

Admiral Zumwalt, who presently enjoys the prestige of being Chief of Naval Operations, has also announced naval recruitment of minority membership proportional to that in the general population. This must be interpreted as a political way of saying that people will be selected and advanced, not because of qualifications or ability, but merely because of the color of their skin.

Apparently, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who are forbidden to even talk about winning our country's wars or to mention victory—it sounds so militaristic—are being given a free hand to win the race-mixing "war" so long as the battle always ends up with the proper ratio of racial proportions.

Little wonder that military leaders of the caliber of Col. David H. Hackworth are leaving military service in disgust.

ZUMWALT SAYS ANNAPOLIS TO DOUBLE MINORITY PLEBES

ATLANTA.—Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr. says the U.S. Naval Academy will double its enrollment of blacks and other minority race midshipmen this year.

Zumwalt, chief of naval operations, listed this as one of a series of "positive administrative steps to increase recruiting among minorities." His comments came in a speech prepared for the National Newspaper Publishers Association.

In Washington, the Navy said the incoming plebe class is not yet firm but that a total of 46 blacks were at the Naval Academy during the 1970–71 school year when total Annapolis enrollment numbered about 4,300.

Zumwalt also said the Navy has set recruiting goals "which will as a minimum ultimately provide minority membership in the Navy, in officer and enlisted ranks proportional to that in the general population."

[From the Washington Post, June 24, 1971]

"WE COULD HAVE WON, IF—": ANGRY COLONEL ABOUT TO QUIT

(By Richard Pyle and Rick Merron)

SAIGON.—"We had all the assets to win this war; we had half a million troops, unlimited amounts of money and the backing of the administration. No doubt we could have won if we'd had commanders who knew how to use these assets instead of these amateurs, these ticket-punchers, who run in for six months, a year, and don't even know what the hell it's all about. . . ."

Col. David H. Hackworth, who expressed those views, is about to quit the Army.

With 25 years of service behind him at ago 40, Hackworth is in excellent position to make general. Although the Pentagon says it can't prove it, he is widely believed to be the most decorated U.S. officer now on active duty.

Wounded four times in Korea and four more times in his 5½ years in Vietnam, Hackworth holds two Distinguished Service Crosses—the nation's second highest award for valor—nine Silver Stars, nine Bronze Stars with V for valor, and eight Purple Hearts.

ENLISTED AT 15

For an officer like Hackworth to resign is a blow to an Army beset by crises. And quitting is no small decision for an orphan boy who went to sea at 13, enlisted at 15, won a battlefield commission in Korea and never has had any home town except "for somewhere." He didn't say how he managed to join the Army at 15.

The colonel suggests the United States should have placed a few crack brigades around Saigon to protect it, then undertaken a program to "train soldiers properly for this kind of war."

"The cities should have been off limits and the troops told, 'forget about rotation, forget about creature comforts, you're not going to town for a year, you're not going to have these big logistical depots behind you, so be prepared to do like your father did from '41 to '45, island after island without one goodie.'" This was a reference to the U.S. Pacific campaign in World War II.

ANSWER TO CHE

Hackworth's first major project after leaving the Army will be writing a book on counterinsurgency. "It will be the answer to Che Guevara," he says.

Hackworth expressed the view that by 1973 the situation in Vietnam will be similar to the tough days of the 1963-65 period.

"I think all of Vietnamization is a public relations man's dream, from some guy on Madison Avenue," he says. Vietnamization is the Nixon administration's plan of turning the fighting over to the South Vietnamese and allowing for the pullout of U.S. combat troops.

Hackworth is full of praise for the GIs and middle-rank American officers.

"Damn good men" The Army has never had better kids than it has today. They're smarter, stronger, far sharper than when I started out 25 years ago.

"So why has the Army gone to hell? Because the higher-level leaders couldn't recognize the problem until it was too late. These kids, all they wanted was leadership.

"Some of the captains and majors over here now, on their third tours, who could do a good job of running the Army, I'm afraid they're all going to leave. They're leaving in droves."

He criticizes officers who served Vietnam tours with little interest other than advancing their own personal careers. "The best thing a guy could have for advancement is to have a battalion or brigade and then slip over to the advisory system," says Hackworth.

In Hackworth's view the Vietnam war was always a guerrilla war, even after the North Vietnamese entered the battle in force. "We came in with a conventional army, led by conventional people and all the tactical concepts, if there were any, were conventional," he said. "We thought we would steamroll our way through this war as we have every other war, World War I, World War II, Korea. We've won by the output of the assembly line, not by any tactical skill on the ground. And you have this tremendous grouping of shallow dilettantes who were running the Army. I'm talking about battalion and up, who didn't know anything about the situation.

"They were saying, 'It'll be over in a few months, we've got the enemy on the run' . . . If we were going to get involved, and I think we never should have, we should have come over and organized the South Vietnamese army into a guerrilla posture, instead of as a direct reflection of the U.S. corps with its divisions and regiments and all the junk.

BODY COUNT

"We should have come with real professionals, absolute studs, who would stay until the thing is over, all volunteers. There are many guys who felt like me, who would have stayed over here, who didn't care about, going home in a year?"

Hackworth said the controversial "body count" has been a means for officers to advance their careers and thus is also a symptom of what ails the military in Vietnam.

"How a man is rated generally as a commander from company up is by how many enemy he killed. Great pressure was placed on this, one of the key things for advancement.

"Down below the company, at platoon and squad, the troops don't give a damn about body count. But with so much pressure passed down the line, down to the kid with a rifle, to get them off his back he'd say "the hell with it, eight dead.' And his platoon leader, young West Pointer, would tacitly pass this on, compromising himself—he knows it—but it gets them off his back, too."

A few years ago Hackworth was one of a small group of officers whose views were solicited by Gen. William C. Westmoreland after he became Army chief of staff.

"Westmoreland? . . . He was so steeped in management, if he had known what was going on, how this war should have been fought, he wouldn't have gone into this huge—what he called—battle of attrition a search and destroy mission, which I always thought was a huge waste. . . ."

MAO'S STRATEGY

Hackworth scorns the idea that the Americans' ability to fight and win has been limited by political restrictions. Rather, he contends, it was the "misuse of assets" in the big multibattalion search and destroy operations of 1965–68.

"You always came in there with such tremendous firepower, such tremendous preparation, that by the time you got located and were ready to meet the enemy he was gone. He only fights to win. It's a principle of Mao Tse-tung's strategy that when the enemy moves in, he falls back; when the enemy withdraws, he attacks, harasses.

It seems to me that Westy thought: 'Our strategy is attrition, we're going to kill more of them and wear their army out.' Well, you can't wear out a guerrilla army, not one that's working out of sanctuaries in Cambodia, Laos and North Vietnam, who's got a population base of 18 million, producing over 300,000 young studs a year. There's just no way of killing or wounding that many people.

"Take a look, at one time we had more than 550,000 people over here, I'd say not more than 40,000 at any one time out in the bush . . . If you're looking at this from the standpoint of Mr. Robert McNamara working on a systems analysis program, is this an efficient way to fight a war?"

RESOLUTION OF CITY COUNCIL OF GREENVILLE, S.C., ENDORSING PRESIDENT NIXON'S REVENUE-SHARING PLAN

HON. STROM THURMOND

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on May 25, 1971, the mayor and City Council of the city of Greenville, S.C., passed a resolution endorsing President Nixon's general revenue-sharing plan.

In view of current discussion over revenue sharing, it is pleasing to know that the elected leadership of Greenville understands that their city would benefit greatly from this proposal. These people share my belief that this bill will greatly aid State and local governments in their exercise of power and in their responsiveness to immediate needs. Because these funds have few strings attached, the States can use this money with much less Federal control and with more flexibility. The role of this plan is to restore the proper balance to our system and repose more power in State hands rather than the Federal Government.

The city of Greenville, S.C. understands the great need for a program of this type. These people have analyzed this plan with an awareness of prevailing economic conditions. These comments deserve the consideration of the Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the Extensions of Remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION

Whereas, the Congress is considering general revenue sharing proposals submitted by the Federal Administration, and

Whereas, the City of Greenville would benefit greatly from a proportionate share of general revenue sharing, and

Whereas, general revenue sharing is tied to the ever escalating income tax collection of the Federal Government on the basis of 1.3% so that the Mayor and City Council of the City of Greenville feels this source of revenue will meet increasing costs in the future,

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that the Mayor and City Council of the City of Greenville, South Carolina do hereby endorse general revenue sharing as proposed by the Federal Administration to the Congress for their proportionate share of the 1.3% for the gross income tax collections of the Federal Government in any Fiscal Year; and that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the South Carolina Senators and Representatives of the Congress.

CAPTIVE NATIONS

HON. ELLA T. GRASSO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mrs. GRASSO. Mr. Speaker, June 15 is Captive Nations Day, a sad occasion commemorating the Russian takeover of the Baltic States.

Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania once knew independence, personal freedom, and national sovereignty. Today, however, they are denied these rights and have been "assimilated" by the Soviet Union. By use of force, the U.S.S.R. has seized these lands and called them her own.

The remarkable people of the Baltic States continue to resist their Soviet captors. Though subject to deportation and resettlement, they refuse to forsake their homeland. After all these years, they still cling to the hope that their freedom will be restored.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot forget our brothers in East Europe. I strongly urge the President to implement House Concurrent Resolution 89–416, and bring the issue to the Baltic States before the United Nations.

REVENUE SHARING FOR THE AREAS OF GREATEST NEED

HON. CHARLES A. VANIK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I have today joined with Congressmen RICHARD FULTON, CORMAN, and GIBBONS in introducing legislation which will accomplish the major objectives of the President's revenue sharing program at a Treasury cost of only $2 billion instead of the administration's proposal which provides for a revenue loss of $5 billion.

Obviously, not every community will receive as much under our proposal—but this proposal will put the money where the problems are the most desperate, where the needs are the greatest.

The $2 billion proposal is fiscally responsible. The projected deficit for the fiscal year which is about to end is $18.6 billion. The planned deficit for the next fiscal year is $11.6 billion. My proposal will save the Treasury a little over $3 billion—while still meeting the most urgent needs.

The problems of urban America result from a stagnant or depreciating tax base and the increasing number of welfare supported citizens who make no contribution to the tax base of the community. Our major central cities are burdened with tens of thousands of welfare recipients. In the case of New York City there are over 1.048 million such persons. Because of low income, these people make a relatively low contribution to sales taxes—though the burden of the sales tax to them is often disproportionally high. Often living in low-income or delapidated housing they make relatively little contribution to the real estate tax collection. Yet the people on welfare require the same services as the taxpayer. In many, many cases they require extra services: special schooling to help break the cycle of poverty and welfare; special health services are needed for the disabled; transit assistance is needed to give the low-income mobility to reach jobs.

Our proposal addresses itself to the problem of the welfare recipient, generally concentrated in the large cities. It would provide a Treasury drawing right—in annual cash payments from the Treasury—equal to $150 per year per welfare recipient. The per capita cash payment would go to the unit of local government—city, village, township, or county—in which the welfare recipient lives.

There would be no strings attached to how the cash payment would be spent. The needs of the central cities and the governments where welfare recipients live are so great that there can be no doubt that the money would be spent for needed services of the highest priority.

The proposal does not include any money for State government, since the States will be receiving approximately $1.7 billion in welfare relief under the provisions of H.R. 1, which has already passed the House.

Below I have prepared some tables which would show the effect of my proposal on first, the 20 largest standard metropolitan statistical areas and second, on the 88 counties of the State of Ohio.

Let me repeat again that in most cases the amount of money a county receives is less under my proposal than under the administration's. This must be balanced against the fact that the program will cost the Treasury $3 billion less and the fact that the money which would be spent obviously goes to the areas of greatest and most urgent need. The administration's tax-sharing plan is like a blast of buckshot—it hits almost every community but few effectively. It is like dropping money from an airplane all across the country. Our proposal concentrates our scarce resources where they are most needed.

In looking at the 20 largest statistical areas several points stand out.

First, notice the almost complete irrationality of the administration's proposal, its inability to put the proper proportion of money into areas of need. For example, Boston's County receives about half the revenue sharing as Houston's County, Washington, D.C., Minneapolis-St. Paul, or the Milwaukee SMSA but it has twice the welfare load of any of these cities. There are other, similar irrational discrepancies which ignore need. And note the welfare statistics used in the table do not take the changes of H.R. 1 into account.

Our proposal, which would concentrate money where the welfare cases are, would place the money in the central cities rather than the more affluent suburbs. The fact that welfare cases are centered in the core of the SMSA's has been well documented by HEW. One administration report released in 1970 noted that:

> Relatively large numbers of the [welfare] recipients live in the Nation's largest cities. Over one-third of the total, or 4.3 million, are in the 20 largest Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas, and 3.7 million live in the central counties or cities of these areas.
> Nationally, 5.7 percent of the population received public assistance payments in February 1970. The rate in the 20 largest SMSA's was 6.7 percent. The rate was 8.6 percent, more than half again as large as the national rate, in the central cities or counties in which the central cities are located.

Our proposal reaches into the SMSA's to the core cities where the problems are the greatest. This is particularly evident in cases like Los Angeles, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Cleveland, and Newark.

Also following is a list of 88 Ohio counties which shows the amount each county will get under the administration plan, the percent of poverty residents in the county by the 1960 census—latest figures available—the number of persons receiving public assistance, the county's population, the percent of the county's population receiving welfare assistance, the amount the county would get under my proposal for a $150 cash payment per public assistance resident.

Of 16 counties which have over 5 percent of their population on some form of public assistance, 13 gain under our proposal. The three counties which lose are the large urban counties in which Cincinnati, Columbus, and Cleveland are located. But by the nature of the bill, the money going into these counties would generally go to the central city rather than to the suburbs thus, again, putting the money where the problem is. I do not have statistics breaking out welfare recipients by cities within counties, but I think that everyone would agree that welfare cases tend to concentrate in certain areas—areas which would be reached under this bill.

Of the 10 counties which have, according to 1960 statistics, over 30 percent of their population living below the poverty level, nine gain under my proposal while only one losses. Conversely, of 44 counties with less than 2.5 percent of their population on relief or assistance, 43 lose under this proposal and only one gains.

Clearly, the bill which we have introduced directs our scarce resources to the area of true need. We invite our colleagues to join in cosponsoring this legislation.

The tables follow with a copy of a press release of today announcing the introduction of the bill as well as a copy of the bill:

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN CHARLES A. VANIK, CONGRESSMAN SAM GIBBONS, CONGRESSMAN JAMES C. CORMAN, AND CONGRESSMAN RICHARD FULTON, JUNE 24, 1971

It is our intention as members of the Ways and Means Committee to urge support of a proposal we are introducing today to provide tax supplement payments to local governments on behalf of residents who cannot assume tax burdens for local government services which they require.

This proposal would provide local governments with a $150 payment for each resident who has already been defined by the Federal government as incapable of tax contribution. This will include recipients of Aid for the Aged, Aid for the Blind and Disabled, and those receiving public assistance. These citizens require extensive public service for which they cannot contribute.

These funds would be provided to local governments, cities, villages, townships, or counties with no strings attached. It has been estimated that this program would generate $2 billion in tax supplement payments to local communities. It would bring about more constructive help to financially overburdened communities of America than President Nixon's $5 billion Revenue Sharing program.

It would provide assistance to the most needy communities of America on an unassailable principle related to local government services provided to those who cannot pay.

The tragic financial incapacity of local governments to provide essential services to those who most need them has accelerated the deterioration of our cities and serves to destroy community life. This kind of an approach provides a permanent solution to America's most pressing domestic problem.

A bill to provide localities with financial assistance to meet their responsibilities and increasing fiscal problems by providing for a general grant of Federal revenue which shall be allocated on the basis of need.

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the Local Government Assistance Act.

GENERAL GRANT

SEC. 2. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1971, and for each year thereafter, pay out to each local government, for use by such government as it may deem necessary, a total amount equal to the entitlement of such government for such year (determined under section 3).

AMOUNT OF ENTITLEMENT OF EACH LOCAL GOVERNMENT

SEC. 3. (a) Local Government Entitlements.—The amount appropriated (determined under section 4) to the local governments for any fiscal year shall be allocated among such governments on the basis of their respective numbers of residents who are public assistance recipients. The amount so allocated to any such government for a fiscal year shall constitute its entitlement for such year.

(b) Definitions and Special Rules.—For purposes of this Act—

(1) Public assistance recipients.—The number of public assistance recipients for any local government means the total number of residents of such government who, as of the entitlement determination date, were receiving aid or assistance under State plans approved under titles I, X, XIV and XVI and part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, or benefits under titles XX and XXI of such Act, as reported by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(2) Entitlement determination date.—The entitlement determination date for any fiscal year shall be that date designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as being the most recent date for which sufficient data are available for local governments to make equitable allocations under this section for such fiscal year.

(3) Local governments.—

(A) Except as provided in paragraph (B), the term "local government" means—

(i) a county, or

(ii) a city, municipality, or township, with a resident population of two thousand five hundred or more as reported by the Bureau of the Census.

(B) A county which contains one or more cities, municipalities, or townships which are local governments as provided in paragraph (A) shall not be considered a local government for purposes of the area incorporated in such cities, municipalities, or townships.

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 4. There is hereby appropriated out of any amounts in the general fund of the Treasury attributable to the collections of the Federal individual income tax, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1971, and for each year thereafter, a sum in an amount determined by multiplying the total number of public assistance recipients in the United States by $150.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act including rules relating to auditing, record-keeping, and reporting procedures. Section 553 of Title V of the United States Code (relating to notice, opportunity to participate in rule making, etc.) shall apply to any such regulations.

NONDISCRIMINATION PROVISION

SEC. 6. (a) Nondiscrimination Under Any Program.—No person in the United States of America shall on the ground of race, color, or national origin be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity funded in whole or in part with funds made available under this Act.

(b) Action by Secretary in Case of Discrimination.—Whenever the Secretary determines that a local government has failed to comply with subsection (a) or an applicable regulation, he shall notify the Governor of the State in which the local government is located of the noncompliance and shall request the Governor to secure compliance. If within a reasonable period of time the State fails or refuses to secure compliance, the Secretary shall have the authority to (1) refer the matter to the Attorney General with a recommendation that an appropriate civil action be instituted; (2) exercise the powers and functions provided by title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d); or (3) take such other action as may be provided by law.

(c) Civil Action in Case of Discrimination.—When a matter is referred to the Attorney General pursuant to subsection (b), or whenever he has reason to believe that a local government is engaged in a pattern or practice in violation of the provisions of this section, the Attorney General may bring a civil action in any appropriate United States district court for such relief as may be appropriate, including injunctive relief.

LOUIE WADSWORTH'S 25TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. DON FUQUA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, a man who does not realize how much true friends mean in life is doomed to an empty existence.

I am one of those who realize how much friends mean and that all that I have been able to attain has been due to friends.

One who is a particular friend for me has been Louie C. Wadsworth, a fighting newpaperman of Live Oak, Fla. Recently he celebrated his 25th year as the publisher of the Suwannee Democrat, a prize winning weekly.

Another friend, Curry Merchant, editor of the Madison Enterprise-Recorder of Madison, Fla., had a tribute in his paper recently about Louie and I felt in reprinting those remarks, I might also pay my respects and tribute to a great and good friend:

TRIBUTE TO LOUIE ON 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Our fellow publisher, Louie Wadsworth of the Suwannee Democrat in Live Oak, is celebrating his twenty-fifth anniversary as editor of that distinguished publication which has been recognized many times by Florida Press Association as one of the state's leading weekly newspapers. This is also the 87th anniversary of the Democrat although our memory may be a bit hazy on this particular item.

Normally editors don't take much time or space talking about their contemporaries, but we thought these were a couple of milestones which should be noted briefly as the Passing Parade glides by.

So far as we know, nobody ever called Louie Wadsworth mealy-mouthed. Until his serious illness several months ago forced him to hold up his thinking out loud page one column, he was always forthright, penetratingly frank, sometimes blunt, frequently controversial, and determined to the point of stubbornness in fighting for ideas and principles in which he believed.

There has been no stronger supporter of Live Oak and Suwannee County and its people. For instance, in a district or statewide political race, if the candidate was from Live Oak you could bet your last Confederate shekel that the Democrat was for him.

Along with the Democrat the National Guard has ranked as an equal in Louie's interests. Like the newspaper, it has been his life. It was our privilege to attend with hundreds of his friends the parade in his honor upon retirement as a major general.

We won't go into further detail for fear of embarassing our good fellow publisher, but on the occasion of his 25th anniversary as editor it appeared appropriate to us—as we glanced up from our rocking chair at the Passing Parade—to extend congratulations on the event and to express best wishes for a hopefully soon restoration of health.

SST—DASSAULT OUGHT TO KNOW

HON. WM. JENNINGS BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, Col. Ansel E. Talbert, executive editor of Air Transport World, recently attended the International Air Show at Le Bourget Field in Paris.

Colonel Talbert has been concerned about American air power and our technological superiority in the air and in space. He had a very splendid and timely editorial in the May issue of Air Transport World magazine, which I commend to the attention of my colleagues and the people of our country:

DASSAULT OUGHT TO KNOW!

Marcel Dassault, France's great aerospace builder and industrialist, who began his long career mass producing wooden airplane propellers during World War I, has some prophetic words today about supersonic transports.

These ought to be pondered by politicians on both sides of the Atlantic.

Although his company is not the French prime contractor in building the Concorde SST, Dassault says he will "guarantee" that in 10 years, all long range commercial aircraft will be supersonic "and certain medium range airliners too." Further, he is willing to stake his distinguished reputation on his view that today's Concorde is a technological success, despite some of the political brickbats thrown in its direction.

Dassault feels that it will take two to three years to develop a final Concorde version, which will be "an honor to European industry" and offer invaluable technical fallout to other key industries.

For over half a century, Dassault has been almost uncannily right about future developments. And this does not apply only to his business of building outstanding commercial and military aircraft.

Additionally, Dassault has been successful in subsidiary careers in banking, publishing of mass circulation newspapers and magazines, and in French politics. (He was a member of the post World War II French Senate, and currently is a member of the French National Assembly).

His conservatively optimistic views on SST development certainly tie in with the remarkable increase in the "roofed in" area being used at this year's Paris Air Show (670,000 square feet compared with 400,000 two years ago).

Coming at a time when there is recession and red ink in certain sections of both aerospace manufacturing and air transportation, combined with stunning set-backs such as the U.S. SST cancellation, they should serve to remind the aviation world that its base is sound, and solid.

Actually, the surface has only been scratched in the fields of supersonic and hypersonic flight, and in the rapidly developing field of short takeoff and landing city-center to city-center passenger travel. Here's to the future!

POLITICS AND MORALITY: WHERE LEADERS FAIL

HON. OTIS G. PIKE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Speaker, recently I had the opportunity to read a speech delivered by our esteemed colleague, the gentleman from Arizona, the Honorable MORRIS K. UDALL. It was delivered on May 26 as the annual Felix Adler lecture to the New York Society for Ethical Culture. Since it goes far beyond the superficiality of most of what we see and what we hear and is in my judgment a balanced presentation of the weaknesses, strengths, challenges and hopes of the American democratic system, I am happy to present it to the wider audience which should have the opportunity to see it:

POLITICS AND MORALITY: WHERE LEADERS FAIL

Charles Dickens begins his "Tale of Two Cities" with a paradoxical statement that "it was the best of times, it was the worst of times." Dickens wrote of the 1770's and the French Revolution, but his description might well be applied to our own time and to our collective experience in the 1960's. For in many ways, this last decade was both the best and the worst of times. It was a time when we put a man on the moon, an event as much a symbol of our astounding technological progress as it was a result of that progress. It was the best of times in other ways, too, for the 1960's saw the culmination of social reform efforts begun more than 30 years earlier.

But it was also a decade when mobs put the torch to some of America's sick and deteriorating cities; when three of our most promising leaders fell in senseless assassinations; when we became embroiled in a hopeless war that has done incalculable damage to us and to the people of a far off land.

As a result of the worst aspects of the times, it seems to me we are on the verge of losing a typical American quality—optimism. One of America's unique strengths and most obvious national characteristics has always been optimism. We have believed—and our history has tended to support this view—that America would be bigger and better and more prosperous for each generation. A man could hope and dream that his children would surpass his own achievements. We believed that when crises arose, leaders, somehow, would appear to match the times.

Yet in recent years this faith in ourselves and our leaders has been eroded. In fact, one of the most alarming things to me is the discovery that youth, to a large degree, no longer believes in the nation's leaders. Our young have no heroes. In nearly every other time in our history, there were politicians, adventurers like Lindbergh and Admiral Byrd, great men of medicine and law, who served as models for the next generation. Contrast this with the results of a survey of college campuses a few years ago that revealed the majority of young men could think of no public men they admired and would want to emulate.

WHAT HAS GONE WRONG?

So we might stop and ask ourselves tonight what has gone wrong and how are we going to recapture our faith in our leaders and in ourselves. Have our leaders failed us or did we fail them? Or have we failed each other?

The questions go to the heart of the issues of ethics and morality in politics. Politics, after all, is concerned with relations among men, with our obligations to ourselves and to each other. And this, of course, is what Felix Adler was concerned with and why the first Ethical Culture Society was formed in this city 95 years ago. Adler knew that men must be concerned with each other and that, united, men could build a better world. His life tells us that man is more than an animal, that he is his brother's keeper and his brother's brother, and he has an obligation to his fellow man and to future generations, and that he rejects himself when he rejects these obligations. Adler's creed has been echoed through more than 30 years of this lecture series. It is a tradition in which I am both pleased and flattered to participate.

It may seem presumptuous for a Congressman to stand up here tonight and talk about politics and morality. There are a lot of people who think the two concepts are mutually exclusive. But I suppose most people, when they hear the two terms linked, are inclined to think in terms of monetary morality, of kickbacks and money passed under the table, of fat contracts negotiated under a kind of most favored brother-in-law agreement. This is a traditional American attitude and there is enough evidence both in the history books and the daily newspapers to support it.

But there are other aspects of morality as it relates to politics and these are what I want to discuss tonight. In fact, one of our fundamental mistakes, I think, has been to confine our concern for morality in politics to narrow pecuniary terms. Too often we have been satisfied if our leaders just didn't steal from us, or at least didn't get caught at it. And too often we've gotten just what we demanded: conventionally honest men who were content to devote their public lives to the maintenance of their comfortable positions. There may have been times in our history when this was enough. But I want to suggest that this is not one of those times, and that the narrower definitions of political morality no longer are adequate.

FROM CONFIDENCE TO DESPAIR

We might begin by looking at what happened to us in the 1960's and where we stand today. We began the last decade with the highest of aspirations and the confidence we could attain them. We ended it in disillusionment and despair. In January, 1961, young John F. Kennedy watched a traditional American parade march proudly through the streets of the nation's capital. A few weeks ago, thousands of young people who were in elementary school on that day threw garbage in those same streets. We have become so accustomed to social upheaval that I don't think anyone was really shocked by the sight of federal troops occupying the bridges leading to Washington, or of military helicopters disgorging soldiers on the Mall. To acknowledge that these are signs of the times is to come a long way from the idealism of the early '60's.

Every society has had its dropouts, its hippies if you will, but ours has had to learn a new lesson. We have learned, to our bitter dismay, that the technological wonders upon which we depend for our comfort make us pitifully vulnerable at the same time. This is an age of power, but it is the kind of power that is nearly impotent in the face of fanatical minorities. Examples abound, from the hijacking of airliners to threats of urban guerrilla warfare. They all point to the same lesson: that the more complex and advanced a society is, the more vulnerable it is to the onslaughts of small groups of militant, determined men. Here is a modern-day version of Dickens' paradox: the greater our power the less our security.

What is frightening is that the number of desperate, alienated people who are willing to exploit this vulnerability seems to be growing so rapidly. John Kennedy once said that sometimes it is better to rock the boat than to sail under false colors. But today we are confronted with large numbers of Americans who no longer are satisfied with rocking the boat. They want to sink it.

The danger in this phenomenon is that the American system, with all its strengths, is a fragile thing which depends on civility, faith, trust, and the acceptance of democratic procedures by the overwhelming majority of the people. Indeed, our system has survived only because of a fragile, unwritten social compact which until now has bound most of us together with common principles and aspirations. It is a compact of rational men in which the majority—the "haves" of the times—agree to listen to the grievances of the minority and to act within a reasonable length of time on legitimate complaints. In return, the dissenters agree that while they may shout and become unpleasant, they will refrain from violence and grant sufficient time for the system to work out the necessary changes. With the tragic exception of the War Between the States, our differences and divisions have never seriously threatened to destroy the social compact itself.

I do not want to suggest that we are on the verge of another Civil War, but I do want to emphasize that we live in an age of increasing instability and polarization. And confronted with these conditions, we ought to address certain basic questions to those who occupy or aspire to occupy positions of leadership in this country. Where have our leaders failed us? What do they owe us that they have not been giving? And what do citizens owe their society and their leaders?

THE MORAL FAILURES OF LEADERS

I want to suggest tonight that our leaders have failed us in three or four major areas: most notably, in challenge, in faithfulness, and in candor. Moreover, I want to emphasize that those failures have been fundamentally moral because they involve obligations that have not been fulfilled. The obligations are implicit, if not generally acknowledged, in the assumption of positions of leadership.

First is the failure to challenge people and to arouse a sense of participation. We have accepted such challenges in the past and shared with each other the spirit of participation. But more often than not these challenges have been imposed on us from the outside—World II is a good example. In the absence of a Pearl Harbor or a Hitler, leaders have been loath to ask of us more than a minimum.

I believe the American people are capable of great accomplishments if they are determined, inspired and challenged enough. The catalog of America's problems is by now an old and familiar one, and it is a list of shortcomings which ought to challenge and inspire us. Yet our national leaders do not give us the goals and the programs that might restore our spirit and give us purpose. I believe that sensible, attainable programs to rebuild our cities, clean up the rivers, end the pollution of the air and landscape and reduce racial divisions can be designed and carried forth. But such programs are not presented to us, perhaps because they would involve such a radical change in our priorities and life styles.

I believe those elected to positions of leadership have a moral obligation to exercise leadership. Timidity may at times be a virtue; if found in a leader in these times it may be a deadly sin. It is simply not enough to accept a position and then refuse to do little more than occupy it. In its starkest terms, this is an abdication of responsibility.

I might also note that it is impossible to challenge and inspire the people of a nation at the same time you are attempting to divide them. To divide is easy, for it requires only that leaders appeal to our baser instincts and exploit whatever divisions already exist. We have seen a good deal of this in recent years, and there are some people in both parties prepared to gamble this kind of politics will be rewarded in a period of tension and confusion. Perhaps it will—although I doubt it—but, whatever the outcome, such men do not deserve the description leaders. Rather, they merely occupy positions of power and willingly sacrifice the moral obligations of those positions in order to retain them.

PROMISES NOT KEPT

Of course I know that it might be argued that one of the major causes of disillusionment in modern America is too much talk, too many grand programs and ringing rhetoric, followed by too little action. Well, that's true, too, for a second failure of our leaders has been the tendency to overpromise and underdeliver. Since I entered Congress in 1961 we have enacted into law a remarkable number of progressive and noble measures, with great goals and promises for the future. Yet these acts of Congress have had relatively little impact in practice and in some cases, such as the Economic Opportunity Act, have been all but dismantled.

A mark of the 1960's was the rise in Congress of what I call "Titlemanship"—the grand art of packaging noble new laws with noble new labels that promise all. We passed the 1968 "Safe Streets and Crime Control Act," but we refuse to fund it while crime rises every year. Meantime, we are assured that more wiretapping "no knock" raids and preventive detention will stop street crime. We had "Model Cities" legislation, an "Open Housing" law, a "War on Poverty" and all the rest. In exasperation with this game we play, I once threatened to introduce a bill labeled the "Veterans, Farmers, Widows and Orphans National Defense, Anti-Communist Right-to-Work Act of 1966."

Public men have an obligation to deliver on their promises. When they don't, they can expect disillusionment and finally cynicism among the followers. You would think we would have learned this lesson, yet, I am afraid, there persist in public life some men who when they have coined a slogan believe they have solved a problem.

A sense of perspective ought also to remind us that the failure to deliver on one's promises is not confined to the political sphere. A record of promises not kept pervades much of our national life and has, I suspect, a great deal to do with the disaffection and disillusionment of the younger generation. To cite only one example: last month the Senate Labor Committee reported that only a relative handful of American workers will ever get a penny from the $130 billion now ostensibly set aside for them in private pension plans. Since 1950, fewer than 500,000 of the 9.8 million workers covered by pension plans received any kind of benefit, according to estimates.

THE INDISPENSABLE LINK

Linking the first two failures is perhaps the biggest failure of all—the failure of our leaders to be candid. There is something sad and dangerous in the fact that the most prominent, the most widely used new expression in the lexicon of the 1960's was "credibility gap," which, put more bluntly, is a widespread public belief that government lies to its own people.

If the news is bad the American people ought to be told. More importantly, if the task ahead is difficult and involves sacrifice, the American people deserve to know it. This is the indispensable link between the obligation to challenge our people and the obligation to deliver on our promises. Too often we have been satisfied to proclaim great goals without honestly outlining the sacrifices necessary to attain them. Those goals I mentioned earlier—rebuilding our cities, cleaning the environment, reducing racial divisions—they can be reached, but to do so will involve changes and sacrifices which both the leaders and the people shrink from. The fundamental failure is on the part of leaders, for they are satisfied to allow the people to live with the illusion that sacrifice is not part of the goal.

We need, perhaps more than ever before, the spirit of Adlai Stevenson, who said in 1952: "Let's tell (the American people) the truth, that there are no gains without pains, that this is the eve of great decisions, not easy decisions, like resistance when you're attacked, but a long, patient, costly struggle which alone can assure triumph over the great enemies of men: war and poverty and tyranny—and the assaults upon human dignity which are the most grievous consequences of each." Stevenson knew that in the long run everyone lost if we put the requirements of the next election ahead of the needs of the next generation.

There is another aspect of this failure of candor—the failure of us politicians to tell the people the truth about our own business. There is a general assumption in this country that much in politics is dishonest but I think few people truly realize the extent to which money has corrupted the political process. This is not the same thing as the monetary morality I spoke of earlier, for much of this corruption is conventionally honest according to the rules we now follow, which makes it all the more dangerous. The failure is with those of us who have mastered the existing system and learned to live with it.

The subject of campaign money—who gives it, who gets it and the preposterous bundle of laws that "control" it—is approaching a national outrage. These laws and practices, in the judgment of one who has to live with them, are shot full of hypocrisy, threatening to corrupt many good men in public life, giving unnecessary influence and power to special interest groups and lobbies and posing a serious threat to the integrity of American political institutions. Consider, for instance, the threat to the integrity of the political process implicit in these facts: We are just now beginning the process of picking a President for 1973–77. Based on past experience, in the next year or so the candidates will spend close to $75 million just to get the nominations. Then the nominees and their supporters will throw in another $75 million in the finals.

In politics—like war—one of the hardest things to do is to change voluntarily the rules of the game. The great barrier to campaign reform has always been this: present laws are a jungle of hypocrisy, unfairness and confusion, but it is our jungle. Incumbents as a rule have hacked their way through the foliage with some success. We know, in general, how to evade the traps, where the gold is to be found and how it must be spent. So we have a real advantage over our tenderfoot opponents who have never tried this path before.

Yet we owe the country something better than the non-law which supposedly regulates campaign spending. The present system is nothing less than a loaded gun pointed at the head of our political process. Those of us already established in politics must lead the way, will have to change to a degree the comfortable ways in which we have always done things, and some of those adjustments won't be easy. But those who had the wit to master the old system can master a new, honest system the country has long demanded and always deserved.

THINKING NEW THOUGHTS

Our leaders have failed us again when they failed to think anew, to challenge old dogmas. James Reston remarked in 1965: "The history of mankind is strewn with habits and creeds and dogmas that were essential in one age and disastrous in another."

One of the ironies of today is the performance of President Nixon. To Democrats, he has always projected an image of sharp partisanship, cunning opportunism, little adherence to principle. Yet a case can be made that Mr. Nixon's finest hours as President have been precisely those times when he was flexible and pragmatic. For example: The Family Assistance Plan sponsored by a man who has made more speeches against welfare cheats than anyone this side of Ronald Reagan. Or a China policy from a man whose political success was based in large part on an inflexible anti-Communism. Or the acceptance of modern economics and deficit spending from a man who extolled the balanced budget as being next only to the flag and motherhood.

The other side of the irony is that, in my view, the President's worst performances have come when he has stubbornly clung to old dogmas—for instance, a Vietnam policy firmly grounded in outdated principles, or a defense spending policy which seems to be rooted in the thinking of John Foster Dulles.

It seems to me, finally, that our leaders owe us a timely departure. More of our public men ought to keep in mind the quotation from Ecclesiastes: "A time to weep, a time to laugh, a time to mourn, and a time to dance. A time to keep silent and a time to speak." And they ought to add their own postscript: A time to run and a time to step aside.

Some of our leaders have known when, gracefully, to leave. Senators Saltonstall of Massachusetts and Williams of Delaware are two examples that come to mind immediately. But perhaps the best example is Lyndon Johnson. Here was a man who relished power as few have; a master of the political process. Yet he saw in March 1968 that he had, rightly or wrongly, become a symbol of division. No matter what one thinks of the Johnson Presidency, his renunciation of another term must be viewed as an act of courage, motivated by the knowledge that it was a time to leave. I do not accept the cynical view that Johnson gave up the Presidency because he knew he could not be reelected, for that was by no means certain.

The average age of the American people is twenty-eight. The burdens of society and the burdens of change are borne largely by the younger generation. Whether we solve our problems or fail will be decided in large part by the young. Yet the Congress is run by men in their 60's and 70's and 80's. Perhaps this is what comes of a career devoted primarily to its own perpetuation.

THE OTHER HALF

The obligations and failures of leaders I have spoken of are only half the equation, for citizens—followers—owe their country and their fellow man some things that they too have failed to give. It seems to me that what people often look for in their leaders are men who will not exercise leadership—men who will give us oversimplified answers, who will justify existing ways, who will castigate our enemies, vindicate selfishness and make us comfortable with our prejudices. Some people, in the words of Sidney Harris, seek leadership which will "reconcile the irreconcilable, moralize the immoral, rationalize the irrational and promise us a society where we can continue to be as narrow and envious and shortsighted as we like without suffering the consequences."

We cannot escape individual responsibility, for we owe our fellow men something we haven't been giving them these days—ourselves. We owe ourselves some things too, the first of which is an honest assessment of where we are heading.

More of us need to admit that we only cheat ourselves and our children when we allow—or even demand—that our leaders engage in the politics of illusion. The good, decent things we desire for ourselves and future generations simply are not attainable without considerable sacrifice and hard work. To pretend that this is not true, to year after year support those who tell us it is not true, or do not even mention it, is to soothe ourselves with the drug of fantasy.

This is a fact that is only now becoming painfully clear to most of us. For the blunt truth is that we have been able to live in the style we are so accustomed to only by robbing ourselves through neglect and by using up our reserves of several vital commodities. Now the bills are coming due and we are going to have to pay them.

SURVIVAL THROUGH NEGLECT

New York City—or almost any big city in this country—is a good example of survival through neglect. Somehow the place hangs together and functions, however badly, day to day. But the cost has been frightful in terms of the quality of life. The fact that most of us, until now, have been able to escape personal experience with that cost makes it no less frightful.

No place could call itself a city—a center of civilization—if it did not provide for the education of its young people and the care of its sick and elderly. Our cities do these things, but most do them very badly. The price of doing them adequately is high indeed, and so far we have not been willing to pay it. Those of us who are members of the affluent society seek our own solutions—perhaps in a suburb or through private institutions—while living comfortably with the illusion that our cities really perform their functions. We will pay enough to avert the utter chaos and collapse of our urban centers, for we need them for our work and entertainment, but we will pay no more. The poor, huddled within the cities, pay the price of our neglect. The ultimate cost of a system or institution that survives through neglect may be more than we are able to afford with even the best of intentions.

The environmental crisis is a clear case of past bills coming due. The fouled air and filthy waters of this nation are graphic evidence of both our neglect of the environment and our willingness to live high off nature's reserves rather than pay the price of our affluence. We have worshipped so long at the shrine of growth and "progress" that we have been blind to the results of our demands for more automobiles, more gadgets, more power, more comfort. We have been blessed with so much in natural resources that we have been able to get away with it. But now, just as the Great Lakes threaten to die one by one, the illusion that we can have this kind of "progress" free of charge also is dying.

This is what the debate over national priorities is all about, but I am not convinced that we have really come to terms with the implications of that debate. A few weeks ago The Washington Post reported that the administration is considering recommending a tax cut in order to revive the economy. I have no argument with the economic theory that holds tax cuts are an effective tool for this purpose, and certainly the extent of unemployment demands bold economic leadership.

What was interesting was that on the same page the Post reported the results of an extensive study of national needs and economic resources by The Brookings Institution. The study concluded that, if we really want to do those things we say, higher taxes will be necessary. No magic "peace dividend" from an end to the war, no flood of tax receipts from an ever expanding gross national product, will pay our bills—past, present or future. It is we who must pay them, and that means higher taxes and changes in our life style.

WHOSE PRIORITIES?

In all the talk about national priorities, I hear very little about this prospect. The thrust now is to cut costs in one area and divert the savings to more pressing programs. This is a noble effort which has my full support. But I think we are still fooling ourselves if we think this will be enough.

Paying higher taxes would represent a genuine sacrifice on the part of the American people, but it is one of those sacrifices with singularly little appeal. It is not, after all, glamorous or romantic, like marching off to war or braving the wrath of your neighbors to picket for racial equality. In fact, it's downright dull and anonymous, which makes the sacrifice all the more irritating.

Nor is it very exciting to contemplate the prospect of one less car, with less horsepower, or of ridding ourselves of subservience to more and more power-hungry gadgets. Yet, like higher taxes, these are some of the things we may have to face if we mean what we say.

It is the task of leadership to end our illusions and to begin to talk about these prospects. And it is our task to accept these hard truths and to reward—not punish—those leaders willing to speak them. On both these accounts, I am afraid our record to date is not encouraging.

In 1969, the Congress attempted to tighten up some of the more scandalous loopholes in our tax laws. The result of that effort was the Tax Reform Act of 1969, which included a number of worthwhile provisions closing tax loopholes and increasing federal revenues. But much of the additional revenue the government might have received from these reforms was lost because of other provisions designed to sweeten the law enough to gain passage. We have all happily benefited from those additional benefits—for instance, the increase in personal tax exemptions—but that has not helped to reorder our priorities. Charles L. Schultze, who directed the new Brookings study of needs and priorities, remarked about the 1969 act:

"There is much brave talk about 'new priorities.' But with large tax cuts enacted, there simply will not be the revenues available to pay for these new priorities. When the chips were down on tax cuts, those who talked about priorities for pollution control and education and an end to hunger voted for a different set of priorities—for beer and cosmetics and white wall tires . . ."

Nor is it very encouraging to contemplate recent events on Capitol Hill, which demonstrate once again that the strongest asset of the defenders of the status quo is their persistence. A few weeks ago my colleagues in the House, by a four-vote margin, resurrected the SST from what we thought was its final resting place. Despite the Senate's rejection of the project, the vote in the House ought to be a vivid lesson to anyone who thinks significant political and economic victories can be won easily or cheaply. The whole fiasco reminded me of the words of a real estate speculator who had just suffered a temporary setback in a rezoning case. "Money can always wait," he said.

LESSONS OF THE 60'S

I have spoken tonight about politics and morality and illusion, and I want to close by suggesting that there is much to be learned from our experiences in the 1960's. Reflecting on those turbulent years brings to mind Professor C. Vann Woodward's collection of essays, The Burden of Southern History.

It is Woodward's contention that the unbroken string of successes which marks American history has produced in us two myths: the myth of American invincibility and the myth of American innocence. Only the South escaped enrapture in these myths, Woodward argued, for the South had experienced war on its own soil and known the bitter taste of defeat, occupation, humiliation, poverty and the legacy of slavery. Such a historical experience is not conducive to visions of either invincibility or innocence.

The addition of the last ten years to American history has done much to shatter those two myths and extend the geography of Woodward's burden. Surely the myth of invincibility died somewhere in the jungles of Vietnam. And surely the discovery of blatant racism outside the South, or the awakening of more Americans to the real story of the white man's relationship to the Indians, has all but ended our illusion of innocence. The question as we enter the '70's is how will we react to the loss of these cherished myths.

One recourse is to retreat into despair and angry frustration. I mentioned at the outset that we are losing our traditional optimism. This is, perhaps, the price we pay for the sudden realization that we are not, after all, either invincible or totally innocent. The real tragedy will occur if this loss of unbridled optimism is followed by despair and anger, in a kind of universal dropping out by a whole society.

It will be the moral challenge of political leadership in the years ahead to prevent this from happening. As I have tried to indicate tonight, that task will not be an easy one, for either our leaders or ourselves. We can make the task both possible and rewarding if we will accept the costs and demand true leadership from our public men and institutions. We can begin by recognizing, as Adler recognized, that in the final analysis we are responsible ourselves. Mark Twain gave leaders of all generations some sound counsel: "Do what is right. You'll please some people and astonish the rest." And Edward Everett Hale uttered a philosophy which all Americans of the 1970's ought to adopt:

"I am only one . . . but I am one . . . I cannot do everything, but I can do something . . . what I can do I ought to do . . . and what I ought to do by the grace of God I will do."

WHO RELEASED THE PENTAGON PAPERS?

HON. EARL F. LANDGREBE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. LANDGREBE. Mr. Speaker, in all the furor which has been generated about the disclosure of the top secret "Pentagon Papers" to a growing number of newspapers across the country, one point apparently has been overlooked. The person or persons responsible for taking these classified documents out of the vaults and turning them over to the press have probably committed a crime—either of espionage or at least of common thievery.

One wonders, among other things, how much the thieves were paid for this "service," and who paid the tab. In addition, one could ask what the Justice Department or the Defense Department is doing to prepare criminal charges. Obviously, the Government might prejudice its case by premature disclosure of its intentions, but I would hope that someone in the administration is considering this move carefully.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from a news executive in my district, Mr. Loyd Long of the Monticello, Ind., Herald-Journal, concerning this very matter. No one has greater regard for freedom of the press than a man in the business of presenting the news. His letter, under the circumstances, is most enlightening, and I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

The letter follows:

DEAR SIR: The Pentagon Papers thing looks just this simple to me . . . the papers were stolen and the newspapers involved are guilty of receiving stolen property.

Now, the reason for those papers being classified material should be explained by those who were in power at that time.

I think Mr. Nixon is correct in trying to stop publication. That is his duty. The newspapers should have at least consulted with him before they printed the papers. They have no right to sit in judgment of a country so great as ours in this manner. Editorially, yes.

Thank you, and Yours truly,

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS BILL

HON. ROBERT T. STAFFORD

OF VERMONT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, during consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill, I voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS) providing for a 1-year moratorium on channelization projects by the Soil Conservation Service. The amendment was defeated on a recorded teller vote, 129 to 278.

Due to the fact that I was attending an important meeting off the floor of the House during presentation and discussion of the amendment, I was not aware that the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin was ruled out of order. That amendment would have provided that—

The Governor of the State in which the channelization is to be located certifies to the Secretary of Agriculture, after consideration of the environmental effects of such channelization, that such channelization is in the public interest.

Such a provision would have been entirely consistent with practice in the State of Vermont where Soil Conservation Service channelization projects now pending have full support of our State agency of environmental conservation as well as other public and private conservation and wildlife groups. The planning by the Soil Conservation Service on two Vermont channelization projects which are now pending has been in concert with all interested local and State officials and would have, I am sure, been certified by our Governor as being in the public interest.

Had I realized that the gubernatorial certification was not included in the amendment upon which the actual vote was taken, I would have strongly opposed it and voted against it.

GOVERNOR SHAPP OF PENNSYLVANIA OFFERS ALTERNATIVE TO REVENUE SHARING

HON. WILLIAM A. BARRETT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, Gov. Milton J. Shapp of Pennsylvania, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee yesterday, called upon us to examine our policies at the national, State, and local levels of government in view of the ever-increasing demand for government services—a demand which continues to grow despite inflation and high unemployment and our reaching the limits of public tolerance toward ever-increasing taxes. The Governor said he would not refuse Federal funds handed out as general revenue sharing; but, he also said that the distribution of funds without controls would be wrong.

The Governor presented, for the committee's consideration, some innovations in the fiscal relationship between the Federal Government and the State and local governments. I believe that these proposals should be brought to the attention of every Member of Congress and I insert his statement at this point in the RECORD:

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I am Milton J. Shapp, Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. I am grateful for this opportunity to appear before this distinguished committee and share some of my thoughts on the fiscal problems of our states and their subdivisions and their relationship to the federal government.

First, I want to commend this committee for its careful examination of this issue. This country is, I believe, at a crossroads in its relatively brief but highly successful history as a federation of many states. Now, due to the increased demand for governmental services, the twin evils of inflation and high unemployment, and our reaching the limits of public tolerance toward ever increasing taxes, we are being forced to examine our policies at the national, state and local levels of government. Some observers have suggested we are sinking under the weight of our own ineptitude to keep government functioning in a manner consistent with the demands of the times, and we are indeed coming apart at the seams.

What we find as we look around is a confusing array of programs and policies that would quickly bring to its knees any industry in the private sector. And, in fact, we even find instances of the federal government maintaining more lenient fiscal policies in relation to the problems of large industries like Penn Central and Lockheed than is shown to the fiscal problems of Philadelphia, Newark or Cleveland.

But I am not here to detail the shortcomings of current federal policies or even of those being proposed by certain leaders of the current administration in Washington. I am certain you are fully aware of the details of those proposals.

I am here today to suggest that this committee consider some innovations in the fiscal relationship between the federal government and the states and local governments.

WELFARE

This first point is neither new nor novel, but it is extremely important to the future financial stability of many of our states.

I won't belabor this issue. You have debated it thoroughly in this committee.

For the record, however, I want to reiterate the need for the federal government to assume 100 per cent funding of all welfare and public assistance programs throughout the nation within the next five years.

This is necessary, I believe, for the following reasons: (1) the welfare caseload continues to rise, representing the single most rapidly rising cost to state government, an increase of nearly 15 per cent is projected for Pennsylvania in fiscal '72; (2) this expense is uncontrollable by the states since the standards are federal and backed by the courts; (3) the current lack of uniformity in public assistance programs among the states tends to encourage migration and the uprooting of families among the poor, as well as penalizing the more progressive states with a larger caseload.

Public welfare is a national problem, not a local, state or regional one. And it must be uniformly controlled by the national Congress.

DRAWING RIGHTS ON FEDERAL FUNDS FOR STATES AND CITIES

There is a great need for proper financial planning at all levels of government. The current fiscal relationship between the federal government and state and local governments makes this virtually impossible.

States and cities need greater flexibility in the distribution of federal funds, whether as revenue sharing or as categorical grants. If required, we need to be able to obtain in advance from the Federal Treasury or the Federal Reserve under a program of special federal drawing rights, monies that are due us under Federal Grant Formulas in any given fiscal year. This, in effect, will provide a "fiscal shock absorber" for state and local governments to permit better fiscal planning of their finances, and to prevent chaos when they run out of money. Most cities and states have no shock absorber at present because, unlike the federal government, even in cases of dire emergency they cannot resort to deficit financing.

This special drawing rights plan would be patterned after international monetary agreements and quite similar to federal reserve arrangements to rescue hard pressed banks.

The importance of a federal-state program for drawing rights is brought about by two factors: first, many states and local governments have limitations upon borrowing, even in crisis periods; and second, many federally-aided programs provide for reimbursement only after actual expenditures.

The need for drawing rights is accentuated by increasing programs of federal-state cooperation. The use of state or local funds advanced as matching money for federally-aided projects diminishes the funds available for other necessary operations. This often adds to the crisis.

Reimbursement by the federal government for expenditures already made by a state or local subdivision frequently gets snarled in administrative details and bureaucratic red tape. The longer the delay, the worse the financial plight becomes.

From time to time the federal government has departed from the reimbursement theory. Many examples appear in various federal statutes, either on the basis of actual advance payments or by way of advances to make available working capital, (Air Pollution Prevention, Black Lung Disease, Unemployment Compensation, Health Insurance for the Aged, and Natural Gas Pipeline Safety).

The difficulty with such hit and miss arrangements is that it deters proper financial planning. There should be a general federal statute which would provide that in any federally-aided situation, the state or local subdivision shall have the right to draw in advance such amount or amounts as is deemed necessary in order to have the available funds to meet future needs for the federally-aided programs. This would mean that the states or local subdivisions could diminish a crisis brought about by the use of general operating funds in order to go forward with federally-aided programs.

FEDERALLY GUARANTEED LOANS

The federal government can help our cities and states in still another way and save enormous sums of operating funds for them.

Our states and cities today pay ever higher interest rates because of inflation and because the lenders look upon states and cities as increasingly poorer risks. Our states and cities must borrow billions upon billions over the next decade.

Congress recently agreed to guarantee loans made by banks to private corporations such as Penn Central and Lockheed. Why not for Pennsylvania or Lock Haven? I suggest they can do at least as much for our own states and cities.

I propose that a federal agency shall be established to fully guarantee loans made by our cities and states. This would lower the interest rates and save millions of dollars for state and local taxpayers. We have such a guarantee plan now in operation for our steamship lines under the Federal Maritime Act.

It is my understanding that the strongest argument used against such a worthwhile and necessary program is that such guarantees are presently considered as part of budget funds. This practice is wrong and should be changed for certainly, guarantees, if mentioned in the budget, should not be considered as operating costs but merely footnoted as contingent liabilities.

NATIONAL EDUCATION TRUST FUND

The ever mounting cost of education is a principal factor in the fiscal crises which face government on every level. Colleges in Pennsylvania are being forced to cut back enrollment next year. Philadelphia schools are considering dropping kindergarten, special classes and/or varsity athletics. Most school districts in Pennsylvania have already discontinued summer classes, night school and special adult classes due to lack of funds. Yet, Pennsylvania's current operating budget commits over half our tax revenue to education.

Education is essential for the future of this country.

Rising costs due to crime and welfare are direct outgrowths of our inability to meet the human needs of our population. For every dollar we fail to put into education, we pay many times over in increased funds for protection and public assistance.

I am proposing, therefore, a new concept and a new method of financing the educational needs of our people—the creation of a National Education Trust Fund.

Education should not be considered a cost item of government but an investment in the future growth of this nation. We should treat it as such. It takes 13 to 20 years of such investment before a young person has acquired the basic skills and knowledge to become a wage earner and thus a taxpayer in our society. The basic reason why our cities and states are going broke today is that we are trying to finance these long term investments in our people out of current operating revenues.

This practice violates a cardinal rule of business economics. Even such giants as AT&T and General Motors would go broke if they followed such improper practices.

The concept of treating education as an investment is extremely sound for there is no other investment that can be made in the public sector of our economy that will yield a direct and measurably higher yield. More and higher quality education leads to greater productivity of our people. Greater productivity leads to higher personal and corporate earning power. Higher earning power, in turn, produces more tax revenues. As a result, the initial investment in education pays off handsomely in future yield to the community and to the nation.

It has been estimated by some economists that the future tax yield that would be generated by a continuing policy of maximizing investment in education would be at least 10 times the investment.

The World War II G.I. Bill of Rights repaid the federal government many times over in increased earning power and tax yield from those who benefitted from the program.

In other areas we have set up successful Investment Trusts.

For example, there is ample evidence that the Federal Highway Trust Fund, created in 1956, is not only financially wise, but has supplied the major impetus for the modern highway system in America today.

I propose that we utilize this experience to create a National Education Trust Fund (NETF) which would invest in people just as the Highway Trust Fund invests in roads.

We can create a large scale revolving NETF by requiring those who would benefit most through increased educational opportunities to repay the fund with a small continuing surtax when they leave the educational system and become wage earners. This parallels the plan whereby relatively low federal taxes on gasoline and some auto supplies paid by the users of the highways replenish the Highway Trust Fund and pay for the construction of new highways.

It is obvious we would not have our modern, interstate highway system today if we had left the task of financing and building new roads to our states, cities and townships. Yet, this is precisely what we are doing with our present, fragmented system for financing education throughout the country.

The self-supporting National Education Trust Fund would call for an initial investment by the federal government of $5 to $10 billion. It would be repaid by an annual surcharge on federal income taxes according to a formula based on earning power and years of schooling.

I wish to point out that none of the individual pieces of this proposal is revolutionary as such. I have merely brought together existing proven concepts from various places. The Trust Fund is similar to the Highway Trust Fund, as I said. The surcharge on federal income taxes is similar to that levied to finance the Vietnam War. The free education and deferred payment plan is similar to existing scholarship and loan programs and to deferred tuition plans. When you put all these together as a National Education Trust Fund, however, it is revolutionary indeed.

In operation, the NETF might decide to finance the crucial pre-school years on a 90 percent federal—10 percent state and local fund basis—as we do for the principal interstate highways. The NETF might finance elementary and secondary school years on a 50–50 ratio and college and professional training on a 60–40 basis, or some other arrangement based upon more detailed economic studies. The percentages could be flexible, but the principle is clear. We can use this Fund to give emphasis where needed in the national interest and the interest of society in general.

This proposal calls for investment now, and a continuing investment in a constructive policy of education that will create jobs. It will pay dividends to our society for many years to come and reduce the need for additional welfare funds in the future as we provide the opportunity to make a greater percentage of our population self-reliant.

This investment program must be accomplished on the national level because only the federal government has the power to insure uniformity of taxation, and only the federal government can absorb the initial cost of priming the self-supporting trust fund. Also, because of the increasing mobility of our society, investments by individual states and cities might never be repaid to those governments.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. I have placed before you four proposals. Two of them deal with new ways of financing the most costly programs in our states and cities, education and welfare. The other two proposals focus on ways to improve the fiscal relationship between the federal government and state and local governments by permitting federally guaranteed loans and a program of drawing rights on federal funds.

I urge you to give these proposals very serious consideration. I have not documented our financial crisis in Pennsylvania because I'm certain it is similar to that of many other states with which you are familiar. You can take my word for it, however; it's bad.

I believe these four proposals would relieve that crisis and create an entirely new and healthier federal-state-community relationship.

I thank you for this opportunity to testify before your committee and I will be happy to answer any questions.

TVA TAX PAYMENTS DOUBLE IN LAST 5 YEARS

HON. JOE L. EVINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, many of my colleagues and many people throughout the Nation may be unaware of the scope and amount of payments in lieu of taxes by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

In this connection TVA has just announced that such payments will total approximately $20 million for this fiscal year.

In addition to in lieu of tax payments by TVA, TVA pays substantial amounts annually into the U.S. Treasury—including $90 million in 1972, $85 million in 1971 and $73 million in 1970—pushing total repayments and returns on investment to $749 million to date.

Because of the interest of my colleagues and the American people in this matter, I place in the RECORD herewith a news release from TVA concerning in lieu of tax payments to the States in the TVA area.

The release follows:

TVA WEEKLY NEWSLETTER

TVA payments in lieu of taxes to state and local governments will total about $20 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, the agency said today.

That is nearly twice as much as TVA paid five years ago, and five times as much as the same payments totaled 15 years ago. Last year's payments totaled about $16 million.

Largest TVA payments this year are about $10.5 million to the State of Tennessee, $4.3 million to the State of Alabama, and $2.8 million to the State of Kentucky.

Tennessee will receive more from TVA than the state's total general fund appropriation last year for its Department of Conservation—including strip mine reclamation, forestry, state parks, water resources, geology, tourist promotion, and hotel and restaurant inspection programs. (Some of these also receive funds from other sources besides the general fund.) TVA is the largest taxpayer to Tennessee state government.

This year's $19,960,863 total for TVA in-lieu-of-tax payments is based on the agency's wholesale power revenues, and represents only part of an estimated $45 million which state and local governments are receiving from wholesale and retail power operations in the region. The other $25 million is the estimated amount being paid in taxes or tax equivalents by the municipal and cooperative electric ssytems that distribute TVA power.

More than two-thirds of the combined total goes ultimately to local governments. Most of the TVA payments go to state governments, but several states redistribute part or all of this money to local governments. And local governments get most of the taxes paid by the local electric systems.

Last year the combined TVA-distributor payments amounted to 6.5 percent of the power bills paid by users of TVA electricity. Comparable state-local tax ratios for private power companies serving surrounding areas range from 3.5 to 9.9 percent of their customers' power bills.

These payments do not include taxes imposed directly on power users, such as the sales taxes on electric bills in several Tennessee Valley states.

As provided by law, TVA's payments this year represent 5 percent of last year's taxable power revenues. Power sales to several government and military installations are exempt. These payments will total $1,121,101 to counties and $18,839,762 to states.

Under the law, counties receive fixed tax replacement payments equal to former ad valorem taxes on any electric utility property purchased by TVA, and on TVA reservoir land allocated to power purposes. State governments receive the rest of the money available under the 5-percent provision. This is allocated among the states by a formula that takes into account both the location of TVA power system property and the proportion of its power revenue from each state.

The amounts being paid in fiscal year 1971 to each state and its counties by TVA (not including payments by distributors), compared with last year:

| State | Fiscal year 1971 | Fiscal year 1970 |
|---|---|---|
| Alabama | $4,370,844 | $3,326,456 |
| Georgia | 199,414 | 161,697 |
| Illinois | 10,000 | 10,000 |
| Kentucky | 2,834,490 | 2,465,680 |
| Mississippi | 837,658 | 667,705 |

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, the following is the language of House Resolution 319, which I introduced on March 17, 1971. I was hoping it might catch the attention of the administration.

H. RES. 319

Whereas the President of the United States on March 4, 1971, stated that his policy is that: "as long as there are American POW's in North Vietnam we will have to maintain a residual force in South Vietnam. That is the least we can negotiate for."

Whereas Madam Nguyen Thi Binh, chief delegate of the Provisional Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Vietnam stated on September 17, 1970, that the policy of her government is "In case the United States Government declares it will withdraw from South Vietnam all its troops and those of the other foreign countries in the United States camp, and the parties will engage at once in discussion on:

"—the question of ensuring safety for the total withdrawal from South Vietnam of United States troops and those of the other foreign countries in the United States camp.

"—the question of releasing captured military men."

Resolved, That the United States shall forthwith propose at the Paris peace talks that in return for the return of all American prisoners held in Indochina, the United States shall withdraw all its Armed Forces from Vietnam within sixty days following the signing of the agreement: Provided, That the agreement shall contain guarantee by the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and the National Liberation Front of safe conduct out of Vietnam for all American prisoners and all American Armed Forces simultaneously.

NUCLEAR POWER IN MAINE—THIRD INSTALLMENT

HON. WILLIAM D. HATHAWAY

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. HATHAWAY. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, I caused to be inserted in the RECORD of this body's proceedings the first four of seven chapters of a pamphlet called "Nuclear Power—The Greatest Threat to Maine," which is the product of a Maine citizens' group known as the Citizens for Safe Power. These chapters were devoted to the environmental, safety, and other problems which construction and operation of a proposed nuclear powerplant in Maine could cause. The insertions appear on pages 21717 and 21781 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Today, I include the fifth chapter of the pamphlet in the RECORD, together with appropriate footnotes. The chapter is entitled "Who Will Monitor and Regulate Maine Yankee Hazards?" I think my colleagues will find the answer to be of great interest:

WHO WILL MONITOR AND REGULATE MAINE YANKEE HAZARDS?

An Ira C. Darling Research Center Representative was asked who had the specific responsibility of gathering information that would provide evidence of the cause in the event of damage to the environment after Maine Yankee began operations. He replied that he knew of no organization so occupied, and certainly not the Darling Center from which such information would be strictly incidental to their broader pure research studies which include work on the Arctic, Bermuda, and the Gulf of Maine in general. He imagined such concern and information would have to be provided by area residents. "Pure research" by the Darling Center on the Montsweag Bay area includes measurement of physical and chemical characteristics based on averages and the assumption that complete mixing takes place at each tide even though they recognize complete mixing is impossible. Other work consists of identifying and measuring bottom organisms. Of the 68 species they list, 31 are labeled "unidentified" or with "?". Crabs and lobsters are counted, identified and measured for length and weight. Studies on salmon and striped bass are "to be done". Marine algae are being measured for growth rates, weights, and mortalities—data not being conclusive because much of the area is impossible to observe throughout the winter. In a reply to the questioning of a discharge of 11,000 pounds of chemicals a day used by an Oregon Nuclear plant to adjust pH, control corrosion, reduce mineral deposit, and stop biological growth in its condenser system. Mr. Edward A. Myer, Assistant to the Director, Darling Research Center, writes:

"There are 384 million pounds of water passing the outfall every minute so that the dilution is one in about 16 million in a day. On the assumption of perfect mixing, it may be hard to make a perfect case against it in view of what else is going into the Columbia."

Is not dilution irrelevant if at any concentration the chemicals do the job intended in the huge volumes of water involved (950 cubic feet of Montsweag Bay per second)?

Will Maine Yankee's chemical discharges be just one more pollution "case" the courts will accept? Robert Dow writes:

"We have observed deleterious effects in the discharge waters of fossil fuel plants from housekeeping chemicals . . . principally sodium hydroxide, sulphuric acid, hydrochloric acid, and chlorine. . . .

"They (our research people) have found detergents to be highly toxic in closed system lobster holding tanks, and we are concerned about their use."

After the Department of Sea and Shore Fisheries threatened to dispute the figures of Maine Yankee environmental studies, Maine Yankee decided to contract the Darling Center for principle environmental studies. Later Maine Yankee subsidized the Department of Sea and Shore Fsheries to find out if artificially managed growth of marine worms and shellfish in Maine Yankee's heated discharge will be consolation for the loss of an estimated $1,000,000 annually from harvests of present Bay worms and shellfish. The Department has yet to determine what the young worms eat, or how they feed them, or even if they are a specie capable of the extra spawning necessary to surpass natural production. One Department scientist reports shellfish cultures have been dying in the heated discharge at CMP's Cousins Island Plant. One Brookhaven Laboratories scientist sums up the Maine Yankee aquaculture potential in a taped personal interview as follows:

"They are making a virtue out of necessity. When they change the fuel core (approximately four times a year) that heat is off for a day, a week, probably two weeks . . . absurd."

At the peak of heavy construction, the Department of Inland Fisheries and Game began to count the number of water fowl within approximately a 3 mile radius of the Maine Yankee Plant "to determine what effect the operation of Maine Yankee Atomic will have on coastal migratory water fowl." (37) What purpose will counting birds now have when the number of waterfowl will obviously increase after the noisy, massive construction ceases. Would not before and after radiation counts in locally consumed fish and game, and involved food chains be more relevant?

It should be clearly understood that the presentation of Maine Yankee related studies is not to malign the state organizations involved. The point to be made very clear is that the studies only go far enough to provide a defense for Maine Yankee and not the environment or the public's health and welfare. There is one brief summer left to discover all the subtle relationships between the incredibly complex combinations of chemistry and physics in the Bay that trigger and pace the unknown biological clocks upon which the lives of all the organisms depend—one brief summer to establish the millions of maximum and minimum tolerances within which the Bay's ecology survives. Even if there were scientists involved in the necessary research, it would be impossible in the next few months to collect the continuous measurements of all possible situations over an extended period to establish any definitive pre-operation comparison data necessary to trace causes back to Maine Yankee. (Carlson, 1971)

Maine Yankee's own environmental monitoring is and will be recorded in monthly or daily averages that can neatly contradict the existence of high momentary releases of heat or radiation that take only minutes to leave massive destruction. Scientists warn that this "pulsing effect" presents the greatest threat to the environment. Maine Yankee took gamma scans for one group of samples in 1968 for clam shell, clam flesh, algae, sediment and oyster flesh.

The State Department of Health and Welfare writes that it has recently been taking weekly gamma scans at a salt water point and a fresh water point, and expects to set up equipment to monitor accumulations around the reactor and will be sampling seaweed, sediments, and ground water. "It is expected by the first of the year (1971), that we will have decided on the types of samples to be taken and the number per month." June is the latest estimate.

The gamma scans outlined do not account for individual isotopes or their other various particle emissions, and their environmental concentrations in the various food chains and other pathways to man. Nor do they account for the total possible accumulation for any one resident from all sources. Periodic base line monitoring can record low level releases and initial accumulations from Maine Yankee demonstrating "safe" or presently legalized AEC levels of radioactivity and completely overlook the hundreds and thousands of pathways through various food chains, and physical and chemical interactions of land, sea, and air that concentrate or accumulate these low levels into extremely hazardous doses for man. Dr. John Dunster of Windscale Atomic Works in England points out "that all sorts of scientific surveillance has been worked out but sometimes the main purpose, safety to man, is lost. He asked that health physicists ask what the numbers actually mean that they are collecting." Dr. J. F. Honstead of Pacific Northwest Lab, Washington, states "new pathways to man can be discovered any time. They had recently discovered such a pathway through upland game birds which were concentrating radionuclides through insects.

Connecticut Yankee has been given a clean bill of health. The actual monitoring report begins with an apology for the absence of comparison data, particularly from the Connecticut Health and Welfare Department, and then systematically discounts recorded abnormal counts of radioactivity in the report. Sample taking was done by the Utility and a local laboratory and the analysis was done by Combustion Engineering, nuclear reactors fabricators. "Lack of comparison data" has cleared the Dresden, Ohio plant and all other nuclear plants in the minds of utilities and the AEC, Maine Yankee will be monitoring releases into the stack and condenser discharge. Concentrations at the plant's boundary and beyond will be estimated by straight mathematical calculation of dilution factors. The Maine Department of Health and Welfare states:

"After taking into consideration that the Atomic Energy Commission will exert very close surveillance of the Maine Yankee reactor, that with the addition of a few more personnel and the purchase of a little more equipment, we will be able to carry out our assigned tasks." (38)

Can Maine residents trust their health and environment to the AEC? James T. Ramez, Commissioner, U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, states:

"It must never be forgotten, however, that responsibility for safety of the plant rests with the owner or operator. The regulatory groups, no matter how thoroughly they carry out their function, cannot provide complete assurance that public health and safety will be adequately protected . . ." (39)

The AEC is charged with both regulating releases of radioactivity and with promoting nuclear power plants. Under such a conflict of interest the AEC must weigh harm against benefits—local human disease and environmental destruction against electrical power supply. Thus the AEC decided to lower exposure standards for uranium miners to keep uranium fuel prices competitive. Union Officials estimate 6,000 miners have lung cancer. U.S. Public Health reports 170 miners have died due to lung cancer from radon radiation in the mines, and 600 to 1,100 more deaths are expected. (Ripley, 1970)

Last spring the AEC amended limits of radiation exposures to the public from nuclear plants to "as low as practicable", allowing "the flexibility of operation . . . to assure that the public is provided a dependable source of power". (40)

The AEC works on the basic assumption that natural background radiation compares with effluents from nuclear plants. Malcolm L. Peterson, M.D., Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Medicine, Washington University, states:

"To relate these levels of 'permissible' concentrations to levels of naturally occurring radiation can hardly be assurance of no risk because there are differences between the metabolism of some of the artifically and naturally occurring radionuclides . . . Also, it is obvious from what has been said about the differences in biological behavior of some of the radionuclides in wastes from reactors that it is the biological effect of the specific radionuclide that is of concern, rather than the total radioactivity released . . . hence many of the possible consequences of misjudgment seem irrevocable in terms of the health of future generations it would seem that a decision on this issue is as profound as any mankind has faced."(41)

The AEC and utilities usually compare the radiation from a granite wall with nuclear plant discharges. Even if the gamma ray particles from the uranium in the wall's surface gave an emission rate, the same as beta ray particles from a nuclear plant's tritium, beta particles are 2.5 times more destructive to chromosomes than gamma particles. Standing next to a granite wall and eating, breathing, or absorbing tritium entails the same difference as having a miniature grenade go off several hundred feet away and having a miniature granade go off in your gonads or ovaries. The utilities and the AEC are trying to convince the public to evaluate radioactive gases with conventional forms of air pollution. Yet, mortality rates due to respiratory diseases other than pneumonia and influenza for "clean" rural New Mexico sharply rose from a rate far below heavily polluted New York to above New York rates just after nuclear testing, only to drop off again after tests in Nevada and elsewhere had largely ended. Just after the "Sedan" and "Small Boy" shots of 1962 Utah had a peak rise of 700% in leukemia deaths in the 5 to 14 year old group, which was 400% over the rise in industrial Albany-Troy, New York with the same period of time. (Sternglass 1970).

In the February '71 issue of Atlantic, Paul Jacob writes on AEC's regard for humans:

"Five thousand soldiers were brought to the Nevada test sight in 1951 to participate in one weapons test. The AEC says no harm to them, but no long-term studies were made of the men . . . the Veterans Administration has started to get claims from some of those men or their families, charging disability as a result of their exposure . . . following a 1953 weapons test, the doses to the thyroid glands of infants in the St. George, Utah area 'would be in the range of 120–440 rads,' doses . . . very high indeed . . . the U.S. Public Health Service did begin a study, financed by the Atomic Energy Commission, of children's thyroids in St. George, Utah, . . . initially, the study indicated an increase in thyroid difficulties . . . as the study progressed . . . the data began to become very inconclusive . . . now . . . the study is ending, but the teenagers ought to be watched for many more years (for) . . . developing thyroid cancer . . .

" 'An exposure limit (for AEC personnel) of 3-r was agreed on prior to testing . . . The Division of Biology and Medicine agreed to an unpublicized exposure of 3.9-r which was used to give the 3-r limit added flexibility where absolutely necessary.' . . . 75% of the monitors exceeded the maximum exposure limit . . . that warning, that plea for 'continued observation and maintenance of radiation health records', and the statements that some areas of Nevada and Utah had received excessive exposures—all these statements are now missing . . . the AEC say it does not know who made the deletion or why it was done . . .

"A Physicist named Dr. Harold Knapp, then on the AEC staff, was investigating . . . 'hot spots' . . . unexplained high radiation that occasionally occur throughout the country as an aftermath of above ground weapons testing—Knapp was paying particular attention to evidence of iodine-131 . . . discovered in abnormal levels in milk produced near St. Louis, Missouri . . . The AEC had failed to monitor milk in those areas . . . because 'extensive inquiry into such details would indicate the concern of the test program's rad-safe (radiation safety) group with the possibility of milk contamination' and alarm an already worried community . . . Pressure was applied to Knapp to keep him from publishing his report . . . One AEC official . . . worried . . . 'what reaction may we expect from the press and the public' . . . the AEC convened a committee of scientists to review the report pointing out to them that if the report were published, it 'would make the Commission out to have been liars.' . . . finally Knapp's report appeared prefaced by an analysis of it by the committee members. But the AEC version did not include Knapp's conclusion . . . Its technical validity was questioned . . . its potential bad effect upon the AEC's public image was pointed out . . . Dr. Gordon Dunning, one of Knapp's superiors, told me (Jacobs) in 1970 that the Commission believed that publication of Knapp's report would lead to substantially larger numbers (of thyroid doses) than had been published . . .

"In 1969, Sternglass presented an analysis suggesting 400,000 possible infant and fetal deaths in the United States as a result of fallout . . . a request from the Atomic Energy Commission for a critique of the Sternglass thesis came to the Livermore Lab. The assignment was given to Arthur Tamplin who . . . prepared his own estimates, which were that 4,000 deaths might have been caused . . . Gofman and Tamplin had come to another conclusion even more disturbing . . . that the federal standard for acceptable radiation exposures was ten times higher than it ought to be and . . . would result in 32,000 additional cancer and leukemia deaths . . . The AEC has totally rejected the Gofman-Tamplin thesis.

"Dr. Paul Tompkin, the Executive Director of The Federal Radiation Council, dealt with the heart of the matter from the AEC viewpoint when he said that accepting the Gofman-Tamplin recommendations 'might well price society out of business. To reduce radiation exposure tenfold would cost billions; it might even cost more than the Vietnam War. To comply, you'd practically rebuild all nuclear installations . . .'" (42)

The FRC establishes radioactive release standards for the AEC. Dr. E. P. Radford, Professor of Environmental Medicine, School of Public Hygiene and Health, Johns Hopkins University, asks:

"And why has the Federal Radiation Council chosen an exposure figure that was three times higher than the recommendation of the International Commission on Radiation Protection covering radiation exposures to the general public that might effect genetic material? And why are standards on the public's exposure to radiation set by a "small group of scientists? . . . Shouldn't other representatives of the public be represented in these decisions? What happens if tritium taken up by oysters at the bottom of Chesapeake Bay reaches the vicinity of a woman's ovaries at the precise time she is ovulating and becomes pregnant? And won't there be enough krypton-85 released by fuel-reprocessing plants in the year 2060 to expose anyone in the world to 100–150 millirems (additional) of radiation a year? Something has got to be done here. The nature of the radiation hazard makes it quite different from the hazard in burning coal." (43)

Dr Paul Tompkin was asked if the FRC established guidelines for the environment—plants, wildlife, etc.

"No ma'am, and frankly, I hope it never does." When asked whether he assumed what was good for people would be good for the environment, Mr. Tompkin replied:

"That is the basic philosophy under which we have approached things up to the present . . . I indicated that we are tracking the known reconcentration processes but the FRC has not put a specific numerical value and says the release must be kept below this because of the reconcentration process. No, we have given no guidance whatsoever on how much can be released at any point on any isotope." (44)

In Nevada, the AEC has permanently contaminated over 250 square miles, now closed to the public.

The major reason for not revealing damage in the public domain due to nuclear plants is pointed out by the Seacoast Anti-Pollution League of New Hampshire:

"Maine Yankee's new nuclear plant will be complete and operating before any research conclusions are made. And it is difficult to conceive of alterations to a 151 million dollar (now 200 million dollar) nuclear plant which has just gone on the line. In fact, once the plant's reactor core is achieved, accumulated radio contamination precludes access to much of the power plant . . . let alone structural changes." (45)

The Indian Point Plant, outside of Manhattan has been shut down since May of 1970 because radioactive contamination has made minor repairs to the primary loop impossible. There are now considerations of abandoning that plant.

Engineer Abel Wolman sums up the AEC's conflict of interest in both regulating and promoting nuclear plants.

"It is only with (AEC) research for criteria for radiation limits that one finds that it should be permissible to kill people to obtain benefits to society. This has undoubtedly been in the mind of all criteria makers, but rarely has it reached the frank and stark pronouncements of recent years. An agreed acceptance of a number of consequent disabilities is not an appealing basis for the development, say, of nuclear power. Industry will do better than rest such an affront to man." (46)

One Brookhaven scientist sums up the AEC in a taped personal interview:

"They are just plain dishonest, and they have been all their lives. It's very hard for a government agency to be frank and above board. . . ."

Does not State jurisdiction assure safe operation of Maine Yankee? The State's waste discharge license for Maine Yankee reads:

"That in the event of adverse effects upon aquatic organisms through increased temperatures or radioactivity, Maine Yankee Atomic Power Company shall act immediately to correct such adverse conditions to the satisfaction of the Commission.

"That the radioactivity of the condenser cooling water discharge shall not be harmful to humans, animals, or aquatic life, nor shall such discharge result in radionuclide concentrations in edible fish or their aquatic life such as to render them dangerous for human consumption." (47)

However, the Assistant Attorney General, John Patterson, writes:

"EIC as yet has no authority to license atmospheric discharges. The burden of proof generally is on the party who makes the accusation, whether the remedy sought is criminal or civil. We would have to present a case. They could be content to poke holes in it . . . if we can prove irreparable harm we can apply for a temporary restraining order immediately halting the discharge. Usually some sort of preliminary hearing is held to show the facts to the judge."

The Deputy Attorney General, Jon R. Doyle was asked in a taped interview what would happen if the judge were confronted with conflicting findings such as when Robert Dow pointed out in 1968 that temperature estimates made by Stone and Webster, builders of Maine Yankee, and Dr. John Ryther, Biological Consultant, were in serious error by comparison to actual surface and bottom temperatures. (Graham, 1970)

"The judge is going to decide who's right and who's wrong . . . it is very difficult to prove in the usual situation, a pollution case . . . there is a problem I think in some areas of the State of educating the judiciary as to how we think the evidence ought to be presented in a pollution case."

Mr. Charles Keenan, President of the Yankee Atomic Electric Company, Rowe, Massachusetts, recalls the case where charges of damage by thermal pollution from the Turkey Point Plant were brought before a Florida judge.

"The judge in the case went out to the site, reviewed all this himself, looking through a glass-bottom boat, etc., and came back and said from his standpoint he saw no reason in the world to stop the Florida people from building that power plant (the second two units) . . . and the judge has apparently said to them, "well, so far you haven't proved that you've done anything wrong."(48)

The Rosenstiel School of Marine and Atmospheric Sciences. University of Miami, had found at the Turkey Point Plant:

"The area of totally damaged bay bottom vegetation near the mouth of the effluent canal was estimated by the project biologist to consist of approximately 55–60 acres by the end of 1968. A year later this area had increased to 70–75 acres. Signs of significant damage have been observed over an additional 225 acres." (49)

The accused conventional units at the Turkey Point Plant discharge 530,000 gallons of water a minute, and the two proposed nuclear units will discharge 1,340,000 gallons per minute. (Singer, 1970)

Former Senator, Carlton Day Reed, Jr. explained in a personal interview that in Maine today it is very difficult for one judge to set any precedents in a pollution case, because long before today's environmental consciousness court actions had established model decisions that now leave precedents, rules, proceedings—the entire judicial process—with a very strong "bias" for industry over the environment.

The State discharge license is not preventative legislation, but only applies to damage done, detected, and proven. To prove damage considered a public matter in Maine, only a State agency, not an individual or group of individuals can bring the case to court. Orlando Delogue, Director of the Portland Law School, writes:

"A. Some states allow a number of individuals (usually 6 or more) who are members of the public to have standing to sue to abate general harm to the environment. Such public action can be taken in Maine only with respect to violations of the Wetlands Act. Legislative effort should be made to broaden the base in environmental issues which members of the public have standing to raise on behalf of the public in State Court.

"B. For any other violations, a formal complaint . . . should be issued to the appropriate State agency.

"C. Funding to allow public prosecutors to tackle environmental injuries to the public must be increased and a priority of these sorts of offensives (and prosecutions) must be raised."

Individuals may present a civil suit to prove personal damage.

What would the State deem "adverse effects"? The State has authorized destruction of several hundred square miles of Maine countryside for transmission lines and the Plant site. The State has authorized many acres of prime marine worm and shellfish tidal flats to be buried under dikes and fill, and be destroyed by an outlet canal one-half mile long and an intake canal 600 yards long, along with substantial salt marsh area to be buried under the dredgings. The State has closed the entire Montsweag Bay to shellfish digging. The Department of Sea and Shore Fisheries state, contamination from the Kennebec River has caused the closing. However, just before construction crews arrived at Maine Yankee, Robert Dow, Assistant Director of Sea and Shore Fisheries testified:

"At the present time the Bailey Point area is free of pollution and is certified as an approved area. . . . Any degradation of the environment necessitating closure of shellfish areas will make the Atomic Energy Commission and Maine Yankee subject to the Federal Pollution Control Act. P.L. 89–753." (50)

The Maine Yankee Plant is being built on Bailey Point. Bacteria readings done by Sea and Shore in conjunction with the EIC of the Bay before Maine Yankee construction crews arrived, ran 23, 39, 43, 93, 43, and now run 930, 1,100, 230, 2,300, 2,100, out of a permissible 70, while bacteria counts of Kennebec waters have been decreasing. William Adams of the EIC writes that the readings simply point out the "vicissitudes" of bacterial counts. Dana Wallace of Sea and Shore Fisheries, writes:

"Another source of pollution to Montsweag Bay is the Maine Yankee sewage disposal plant . . . Inasmuch as this sewage disposal plant has recently been reconstructed, we need to know its consistent effectiveness. The number of people being employed by Maine Yankee is in a state of flux. When the Maine Yankee Plant becomes operational, we will be able to make better informed and safer evaluations of the area which needs to be closed."

Maine Yankee claims all sewage has been sterilized with chlorine. The Natural Resources Institute of the University of Maryland, found in the Chesapeake Bay:

"that chlorinated sewage caused the lowered fish populations . . . blocking of the upstream migration . . . enriched areas further downstream . . . the species composition of the fish communities changed significantly . . . immediately below a sewage outfall, both the number of species and number of individuals during all sampling periods were drastically reduced." (51)

Recently the Convert-all Company that built the Maine Yankee sewage plant went out of business because they could not get their devices to work properly. The sewage problem was anticipated by the State along with other post-operational predictions by Robert Dow, and was detected. Yet absolutely nothing is being done about it. What can be done about the subtle, complex and more dangerous problems of radioactivity and thermal pollution when nothing is done about the relatively simple, easily traced sewage problem?

Would Maine go to court over radiation damage from Maine Yankee? A Minnesota Supreme Court Justice decided on December 15, 1970, that the AEC has jurisdiction over Minnesota on radiation matters. Regarding Maine's position now, Mr. John R. Doyle, Deputy Attorney General, writes:

"I think the sense of the decision is that the State cannot exert controls, quite possibly of any type, which are regulated by the AEC. In other words, the Atomic Energy Commission has almost exclusive jurisdiction in this area."

Mr. William R. Adams, Director of the Environmental Improvement Commission, writes:

"In my opinion only State control is affected. Should damage occur, recourse through civil suits would be unaffected."

Actually whether jurisdiction lies in Federal or State hands is irrelevant because what the AEC will not do to deceive and exploit the public on a federal level, Central Maine Power Company (controlling shareholder of Maine Yankee, whose President, William Dunning, is also President of Maine Yankee) and the other utilities will do on the State level. Almost all attempts to control nuclear plants in Maine have been defeated. Governor Curtis writes:

"There was an attempt made to have the Company (Maine Yankee) provide performance bonds for the building of cooling towers in the event they may be needed. . . . This attempt to force bonding on Maine Yankee was unfortunately defeated."

Senator Richard N. Berry, who is also owner of a power company, writes:

"As you know, cooling towers can be used but their construction and operational cost would seriously increase the cost of the power generated."

Governor Curtis continues:

"Likewise, I supported legislation at both the regular and special sessions of the 104th Legislature that would have provided the State with temperature standards for discharge of heated water. Intensive lobbying efforts and the activities of Senator Berry, Chairman of the Natural Resources Committee, saw to it that these standards were not passed into law."

Senator Berry replies:

"This (legislation) was a good example of theoretical as opposed to practical restrictions which would have been completely unworkable."

The last shred of control the public has over future nuclear plants in Maine lies in the recent "landmark" Site Location Law.

The Law states:

"To provide a flexibility and practical means by which the State, acting through the Environmental Improvement Commission, in consultation with appropriate State agencies, may exercise the police power of this State to control the location of those developments . . . in order to ensure . . . a minimal adverse impact on the natural environment . . ." (52)

The only exemptions are construction and operations prior to January 1, 1970 and "Public Service Corporation Transmission Lines." Clearly the EIC has the say on where future nuclear plants will be located. Henry E. Warren, Site Location Consultant to the EIC, writes:

"It is our interpretation of the Site Location Law that power plants of any type would fall within the requirements of the law."

However, one member of CMP's Board of Directors has explained that CMP is now sending their attorneys out to clarify the exemption. Senator Richard N. Berry, now Senate Majority Leader, writes:

"The exemption of nuclear power plants from the site selection law is based on the rather vital need for their location somewhat adjacent to an adequate supply of cooling water."

Senator Berry was Chairman of the Natural Resources Committee that wrote the Site Location Law. Former Senator Carlton Day Reed, Jr. was also in that Committee and states in a personal interview that the intent of the Law was emphatically to include nuclear power plants in the Law under jurisdiction of the EIC, "and I'll challenge Senator Berry any day of the week on that." Senator Berry writes that justification for the exemption is:

"You will understand that the possibility may arise whereby it might be impossible to obtain site approval anywhere along the coast and the State would then be faced with an impossible situation."

The number of nuclear plants contemplated for Maine requires access to any and all estuaries on the Maine Coast. Former Senator Reed explains that CMP is simply maneuvering for the right lever to force siting decisions into the hands of the Maine Public Utilities Commission, without appearing to challenge the E.I.C., which would be very poor relations. Guy E. Trombly, Chief Engineer for the Maine Public Utilities Commission, states that the Utility Commission already works under the "impression" that nuclear plants are exempt, and writes:

"Generating stations either may or may not be exempt. It should also be pointed out that where Federal Statutes are applicable, they may take precedence over State Regulations."

Thus CMP and Maine Yankee now support LD989, a bill introduced by Senator Wyman of Washington County, which will strip the E.I.C. of jurisdiction over all environmental considerations regarding nuclear power plants and essentially allow such plants to come into Maine by simply picking up a certificate from the PUC. The public would have no legal recourse in Maine courts to defend their welfare or environment without first obtaining approval from the PUC. LD989 represents the most comprehensive outline of legislation Maine utilities are attempting to quietly pass through each legislature under the subtle guise of environmental concern. The public should carefully study the wording of LD989 and be alerted to future utility efforts to further undermine protection of the public's interests.

The 1968 "public hearing" on Maine Yankee in Wiscasset was conducted by the AEC which decided who participates and what the issues will be. The issue at Wiscasset was construction of the plant—not its operation. This subtlety put months of expensive, exhaustive preparation down the drain for a Long Island group which tried to protest aspects of a proposed nuclear plant's operation before it was built. Their well prepared testimony, which included appearances of top scientists from throughout the Country, was stopped by AEC officials who informed the group at the hearing that they were there to consider only construction of the plant. Maine Yankee repeatedly reminded local residents that the construction was harmless and would generate hundreds of construction jobs, and that there would be a later hearing to consider operation of Maine Yankee. However, the latter hearing is not public. The AEC reports:

"A public hearing is not required by law on an application for operating license. When the Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards and the AEC Regulating Staff have completed their reviews, the Commission either publishes a 30-day notice of the proposed issuance of a provisional operating license, or it schedules a public hearing on the application. Normally the Commission will not direct that a hearing be held at this stage unless there is a difficult safety problem of unusual public importance, or substantial public interest which would warrant that course." (53)

After the Wiscasset Construction Hearing, the State's Environmental Improvement Commission writes:

"We do not anticipate further hearings regarding this installation." Harold Green explains in the Notre Dame Lawyer:

"Public hearings are mere window dressing and that the actual decision to license a reactor is made (behind closed doors and beyond public scrutiny) by the ACRS and the AEC's regulatory staff, primarily the latter." (54)

MAN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN—HOW LONG?

HON. WILLIAM J. SCHERLE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. SCHERLE. Mr. Speaker, a child asks: "Where is daddy?" A mother asks: "How is my son?" A wife asks: "Is my husband alive or dead?"

Communist North Vietnam is sadistically practicing spiritual and mental genocide on over 1,600 American prisoners of war and their families.

How long?

HON. FRANK E. DENHOLM

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. DENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I voted with the majority of the Members of this House to defeat the proposed amendment of the Honorable HENRY S. REUSS, my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin, which was an attempt to place a 1-year moratorium on all stream channel work in watershed projects.

I am pleased that the Soil Conservation Service projects and watershed construction programs in South Dakota will not be delayed by a moratorium on funding of essential and necessary field projects as proposed by the Reuss amendment.

Essential policies and programs of land and water conservation must be continued without interruption in South Dakota. The expertise of the experienced and learned personnel of the Soil Conservation Service is needed more now than at any time in the history of this country. I commend those dedicated persons that have done so much with so little in conservation practices to preserve our soils and waters. There is nothing more important to the people of this great country—and to generations unborn—than essential planning and preservation of our land and water resources.

I respectfully include some of the copies of correspondence that I have received from the concerned and knowledgeable people of South Dakota encouraging and supporting my opposition to the Reuss amendment in the RECORD:

SISSETON, S. DAK., June 9, 1971.

Representative FRANK DENHOLM,

CONGRESSMAN DENHOLM: The Roberts County Board of Conservation District Supervisors would like to voice their opposition to the moratorium on Watersheds as proposed by Congressman Reuss of Wisconsin.

We feel support should be given to the Whitten Amendment for additional funds for Watersheds. This would support the Upper Little Minnesota Watershed in Roberts County.

Thank you for your consideration.

Congressman FRANK DENHOLM,

CONGRESSMAN DENHOLM: The Upper Little Minnesota Watershed Board of Managers would like to voice their opposition to the moratorium on Watersheds as proposed by Congressman Reuss of Wisconsin.

We feel support should be given the Whitten Amendment for additional funds for Watersheds. This would support the Upper Little Minnesota Watershed in Roberts County.

Thank you for your consideration.

LEONARD WICKRE,
Chairman, Upper Little Minnesota Watershed, Board of Managers

GETTYSBURG, S. DAK., June 10, 1791.

Hon. FRANK DENHOLM,

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DENHOLM: I have been advised that Congressman Henry S. Reuss is planning to introduce an amendment to the Agricultural Appropriation Bill providing for a one year moratorium on water development activities of the Department of Agriculture. As I understand it, this is especially aimed at PL 566, small watershed projects construction.

I know from letters you have sent to me that you support PL 566 projects and as you know the President has recently indicated a revision in his budget for increased support of PL 566 projects.

If Congressman Reuss' moratorium becomes law, this would delay construction on eight projects in South Dakota.

Contrary to the testimony that Congressman Reuss has received in committee hearings; the projects in South Dakota will not contribute to the deterioration of fish and wildlife habitat and other environmental features, but will enhance all environmental factors. Conservation Districts and Watershed Districts have worked closely with fish and wildlife interests in the planning and construction of watershed projects. Through the inclusion of mitigation measures for wildlife, the providing of land treatment, and the inclusion of recreation facilities, the watershed projects such as Upper Deer Lake-Hendricks, Union Creek, Hurley Creek, Pattee Creek, Spring-Bull Creek, Upper Little Minnesota, and Mud Creek have or will contribute to the enhancement of fish and wildlife and the environment.

In view of your indicated support and the above information, I trust that you will advise Congressman Whitten of your support for the Appropriation Committee's recommendations for funding of PL 566 planning and construction.

Sincerely,

ORLOW EIDAM, President.

PIERRE, S. DAK.,
June 14, 1971.

Hon. FRANK DENHOLM,
U.S. Representative, Longworth House Office Bldg., Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DENHOLM: The South Dakota State Conservation Commission sincerely hopes that you will support the President's request, to the House Agricultural Appropriations Committee, for an increase of $12,000,000 for conservation operations (CO 1 funds) and $28,000,000 for watershed construction by the Soil Conservation Service. South Dakota has 41,500 Conservation District Cooperators that will receive additional technical assistance in carrying out sound conservation on their land.

The additional $28,000,000 requested for watershed construction will accelerate the watershed program in South Dakota.

The Commission is also asking you to oppose Representative Henry S. Reuss' proposal for a one year moratorium on stream channel work in P.L. 566 watershed projects.

The proposed moratorium would practically stop all watershed construction in South Dakota for three years. The Soil Conservation Service would be forced to lay off over 1000 people in the nation—South Dakota would lose a proportionate number. These people will be forced to find other employment. If the moratorium only lasted one year, watershed construction would be completely stopped for at least three years. The Soil Conservation Service will be in a position of reducing and training new people.

South Dakota has eight watersheds in some stage of construction. Stream channel improvement, to carry the controlled flows from the flood water retarding structures and flood waters that enter the floodplain below the structures, is essential if these projects are to be effective.

The State Conservation Commission hopes that you will support the President's request for additional funds for conservation operations and watershed construction. We also hope that you will oppose the proposed one year moratorium for channel improvement in P.L. 566 watershed projects.

Sincerely yours,
HOWARD GEERS, Executive Secretary.

JUNE 16, 1971.

Congressman FRANK E. DENHOLM,
Longworth Building,

DEAR SIR: This letter is being written out of concern for the proposal to temporarily halt the SCS stream channelization program submitted to Congress by Representative Henry S. Reuss from Wisconsin, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy & Natural Resources, House Committee on Government Operations.

Under attack by this proposal is not only the channelization program, but entire watershed projects. The Upper Deer Creek-Hendricks Watershed flood retention structure recently completed in the northeastern corner of Brookings County provides the public with the benefits of an abundant water supply, recreational and wildlife facilities, and economic development, besides assuring farmers of flood prevention. The channelization which is currently underway south of the structure will extend this flood protection approximately five miles south of the structure. Taxpayers, in general, benefit from watershed projects by the elimination of high taxes for bridge and road repair and replacement. Annual damage to roads, bridges and culverts represent a loss to every taxpayer, regardless of whether he owns property on the flood-plains or works in an office in the city.

In this day and age, when ecology is playing such an important role in the preservation of our environment, channelization and watershed projects may be answers to halting much of our water pollution. 88% of the pollution in our streams and lakes is due to sediment or silt erosion as a result of the misuse of the land. Work done in a watershed program will include the application of soil conservation practices such as terracing, waterways, pasture renovation, contour farming and tree planting on a minimum of 50% of the land above the watershed structure, thus improving the value of the land.

In many parts of the country, dams alone will not do a proper flood prevention job, and, in some cases, channelization provides the only means of flood control. A stream slowly dying of strangulation from sediment and debris is not a pretty sight. When free flow of water is established by channel improvements, banks are shaped and stabilized with grass and trees which enhances fish and wildlife habitat and improves the beauty of the area.

59% of the annual national flood and sediment damages occur in rural upstream areas. If we are interested in maintaining and improving our social and economic standards, it is of the utmost importance to keep the ball rolling on the watershed program.

Whenever water retarding measures cannot handle the runoff of uncontrolled surface water alone; it is necessary to improve stream channels to restore flow capacity, reduce damage from flooding, and stabilize streambanks. It has been proven that small watershed projects have a beneficial impact on soil, water management, fish and wildlife, and people.

Maintaining and building up the capacity of our soil to produce now and in the future is one of America's most urgent problems today. The watershed idea makes it easier for people to see how vitally soil conservation work affects their daily lives because it is a basis for increased prosperity, freedom from flood damage, elimination of high taxes and increase in recreational and wildlife facilities.

We urge your support in voting down Representative Reuss's proposal.

Sincerely,
George Messner, Chairman Board of County Commissioners, Francis Murphy, Commissioner, Otto Oines, Commissioner, Lyal Parks, Commissioner, Charles Sayre, Commissioner.

JUNE 18, 1971.

Hon. FRANK E. DENHOLM,

DEAR FRANK: In response to your letter of June 9, 1971 I'm taking this opportunity to answer your request for information on our budget situation. As you know, the President has said he will revise the SCS budget to increase SCS assistance to Conservation Districts by $12 million and Watershed Protection funds by $28 million. This will be of considerable help in rebuilding our depleted staff of technicians in the field.

There is a threat however to the total watershed program in the nature of an amendment to the appropriation bill. Congressman Henry S. Reuss is proposing the amendment as a moratorium on water development projects of the U.S. Department of Agriculture for one year. Such a moratorium would certainly require an immediate reduction in force of SCS watershed technicians and set the program back several years.

The moratorium is apparently aimed principally at small watershed projects (under PL–566) and more specifically at channel improvement activities associated with some PL–566 projects.

The SCS has, I believe, been responsive to critics of channel improvement by:

(1) Calling for a complete review and categorization of all projects awaiting construction. Some projects may be dropped.

(2) Attempting to inform critics of the alternatives (i.e. detention storage) considered prior to the use of improved channels for controlling floods. Also of the opportunities provided by PL–566 for developing fish, wildlife and recreation.

(3) Revising our design criteria to provide for small channels.

(4) Providing measures to mitigate losses to fish, wildlife, and the environment caused by channel improvement or other structural works.

(5) Minimizing disturbance to native vegetation and planting additional vegetation along channels and over the entire watershed.

I have read some of the testimony presented at the Conservation and Natural Resources Subcommittee (Congressman Reuss, Chairman). The generalizations, broad accusations of SCS programs have, in my estimation, provided an unrealistic bias to the hearings.

Kenneth Grant, Administrator of SCS, appeared late in the hearings to explain our program. I understand few committee members were present so the effect of his testimony is not known.

We feel that rather than this total moratorium, the present review of environmental statements by the Environmental Protection Agency (and others) and the consequent project by project review is a much more realistic approach. This is what we believe we have been doing in South Dakota and will continue.

If you need further information, I will be happy to supply it.

Sincerely,

V. W. SHALLY,
State Conservationist.

BROOKINGS, S. DAK., June 21, 1971.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE DENHOLM: It causes me great concern when I recently read in a news publication the desire by many of our nation's spokesmen to halt progress on our nation's watersheds and stream channelization in the name of environmental protection.

Don't they realize how much benefit people realize from a watershed in flood prevention, road and bridge maintenance reduction and the reduction of siltation by a properly planned and constructed watershed? The enhancement of the country-side can't be measured in dollars by a clear flowing stream in a stabilized channel flowing all or nearly all the time as compared to a stream flowing at flood time choked with silt and trees spilling over pastureland leaving a layer of silt on the grass making it unpalatable for livestock.

We have recently finished a watershed on Upper Deer Creek that you would find interesting to see, and to visit with the people benefited. This watershed has generated enthusiasm for a second watershed development, Six Mile Creek, which is just being organized.

If you can see your way to support further watershed and channel development I would certainly appreciate it.

Sincerely,

ROBERT J. FOSTER.

Mr. Speaker, I am firmly convinced that the people that live on the land—"love this land." It is their country—it is their home. They will not destroy it. Conservation of our soil and conservation of our waters is essential to posterity and proper for all people of our country.

The Soil Conservation Service is a public interest program that must be preserved against all adversity, at any cost, at all times for all of America.

LOUISVILLE RED CROSS DEDICATES $2.75 MILLION CENTER

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, last Sunday, June 20, the Red Cross in Louisville, Ky., dedicated its new $2.75 million headquarters center. It had been my hope and expectation to attend this event because of the importance of the center to the residents in northern Kentucky and southern Indiana.

The new facility—the most modern of its type in the Nation—will, among many other important services, make available donated blood to any patient requiring it in 57 area hospitals.

Bob Schulman, who is familiar to the residents of my district for his television editorials on WHAS–TV devoted one of his recent broadcasts to the center's dedication. I ask that the text of his remarks be printed at this point in the RECORD.

ONE MAN'S OPINION: A SPREADING RED CROSS

Is there more to the familiar Red Cross symbol than meets the casual eye? We associate it, automatically and importantly with blood and with help in disaster. But is the Red Cross stretching its arms to become what, until recently, the young were calling "'more relevant" to changing times?

It's a good question to ask, around the time of Sunday's dedication in Louisville of a new $2¾ million Red Cross headquarters center. And the answer is an encouraging and absorbing "yes".

You do not want to pass lightly by the primary significance of Sunday's dedication: the blood of life for the people of 37 Kentucky and Hoosier counties, with laboratories and processing facilities making the new center the nation's most modern, for the collection and distribution of donated blood to any patient needing it in 57 area hospitals.

But consider a program in which two young training interns, themselves from the inner city, are preparing 50 young inner city people for service this summer as aides in nursing homes, mental health clinics and neighborhood centers. Or take a look at what used to be only the "Junior Red Cross," now extended to teen-age youth and including a rural camp for leadership training, from which one girl returned proclaiming it "a crash course in caring."

Tour the new Louisville headquarters with the chapter manager, the impressively sharp and alert Marjorie Jordan, and you capture a sense of earnest outreach—a stated determination to involve more rich and poor and in-between, more white and black, in helping activities that are not just starchily laid down by what've been Red Cross interests in the past.

Evidences of the good old familiars are on hand, of course. In the Youth Department, samples of the toy animals and writing kits that thousands of schoolchildren make for distribution to needy kids in hospitals and ex-GI patients at VA. The ready rooms, for communications and dispatching of volunteer teams to help with everything from food and clothing to recovery aid, after fire, flood and tornado. The free classes in the pre-natal care, and in swimming and boating safety and first aid.

But the good Red Cross news is in the impulse to change. I'm not one to knock coffee and doughnuts, but baby, when you find the Red Cross staking a "Blood Brother Day" in the ghetto, then you see new life in the words on the wall of the new lobby: We dedicate this building in a spirit of love for our fellowman.

ARKANSAS LEADS IN ECONOMIC EDUCATION

HON. DAVID PRYOR

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. PRYOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article entitled "State Leads in Economic Education" that appeared in the June 6 issue of the Arkansas Gazette. The article points out that the State of Arkansas has become one of the leaders in the Nation in the field of economic education.

The success that my State has achieved in this area is a direct result of the outstanding leadership of Dr. Bessie B. Moore, the director of Economic and Environmental Education for the State Department of Education. I commend Dr. Moore, whom I consider to be one of the Nation's most eminent educators, for the innovative and creative work that she is doing in economic education.

I insert the article by Victor A. Croley in the RECORD:

STATE LEADS IN ECONOMIC EDUCATION

(By Victor A. Croley)

A large billboard beside Highway 62 near the Ozarks town of Yellville proclaims that Arkansas is lowest among the states in the amount of tax money allotted to education.

Arkansas teachers protest that they are among the poorest paid in the nation.

So many other complaints are made about our school systems, facilities, curricula, et cetera, that it comes with almost a shock to discover that all is not gloom and despair; that Arkansas is far from a total loss educationally; and that in at least one category Arkansas and Arkansas teachers rank No. 1 head and shoulders above those in any of the other 49 states in the Union.

This outstanding success is in the field of economic education, and it is not a one time, flash-in-the pan victory, but a success based upon demonstrated merit over seven years.

Indeed, Arkansas teachers of economics in the elementary and secondary grades, led by Dr. Bessie B. Moore, have won a large share of the famed Kazanjian Economics Foundation awards since the nationwide competition was inaugurated in 1964.

In that year they won five out of 20 awards. The following year saw them win 10 of 40 awards. They won 11 to 52 in 1966; in 1967, 18 of 43; in 1968, 14 of 50; in 1969, 12 of 38; and in 1970, nine out of 53.

This is a winning record any Razorback football squad would be understandably proud of and it is past time that the world learns that Arkansas can lead in education as well as athletics.

Arkansas' achievements in economic education—admittedly one of the most complex and difficult subjects—was attributed by Dr. George L. Fersh, associate director of the Joint Council on Economic Education of New York, to the enthusiasm and support inspired by Dr. Moore.

Dr. Moore has been a classroom teacher herself and a state supervisor of elementary education, as well as consultant to the United States Office of Economic Education.

At present she is director of Economic and Environmental Education for the state Department of Education, and also has administrative responsibility for school libraries.

She was a delegate at the Conference of the International Federation of Library Association which met last year in Moscow and Leningard.

Dr. Fersh called Arkansas' program for economic education in the elementary and secondary schools "the best in the country," and at a conference in Little Rock attended by representatives of most colleges and junior colleges, plans were laid to create an equally effective program at the college level.

The Kazanjian Economics Foundation was established "to disseminate economic truths to the end that greater happiness and prosperity may come to all through the better knowledge and understanding of the laws of economics."

Calvin K. Kazanjian, born in Armenia, was brought to this country as a small child. Son of an impoverished minister, he rose to eminence as a businessman, financier, and philantropist.

The Kazanjian Economics Foundation was established when he saw that most of the mistakes made by society were the result, not of malice, but of ignorance.

He felt that social and political difficulties could be traced, in large measure, to man's lack of knowledge of economics and he firmly believed that if more people understood the basic facts the world would be a better place in which to live.

The Arkansas program was selected for presentation to the Joint Council on Economic Education as a model for the nation because of the innovation approaches used in involving every sector of the economy, its acceptance by educators, and its proven effectiveness in Arkansas classrooms.

THE JEWISH PEOPLE LIVES, MR. BREZHNEV

HON. FRANK J. BRASCO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. BRASCO. Mr. Speaker, no human tragedy is sadder than the failure of man to learn the most elementary lessons from the repeated disasters of history. And of all the truths that people must come to a fuller realization of, the need to desist from persecution of people because of their religious beliefs is one of the first. Such a dawning of revelation has yet to arrive within the borders of the Soviet Union.

This society I speak of here has been able to break out of the bounds of the earth, but it still indulges in the most barefaced, shameful anti-Semitism. All across the Soviet Union today, persecution of the Jewish people continues unabated. Their religious beliefs are not respected. Their right to the most elementary decencies is violated. Their ability to travel freely is vastly circumscribed. All in all, the picture is as gloomy as it is degrading. All over the free world, people are raising their voices against this infantile and disgusting exhibition on the part of the Russians. In this Nation, we are not guilty of the crime of silence. Fortunately we have the right and the desire to cry out against these crimes against humanity.

This week marks the celebration of Jewish Identity Week in the Nation's Capital. During this time, the Nation's Jewish community will send representatives to this city to call the attention of the Government to the plight of their coreligionists within the confines of the Soviet Union.

During this time, they will seek to make sure that the Congress knows of what is going on in Russia in regard to the Jewish people. They will call for action in the form of national and international appeals on behalf of these oppressed people. I join them in demanding that we vigorously reaffirm our support for their right to travel, worship freely, and live as their consciences dictate.

It behooves us to understand that such a series of crimes against one small and helpless minority sets still another precedent. For if they dare to continue such evil acts as a set government policy, then no one else is immune. If we revere any kind of human rights policy, we must apply it vigorously. We must prevent this kind of action, and by speaking out in this manner, at least the Soviet regime will not be able to perpetrate such atrocities in the dark.

It is odd, indeed, that the Russian Government does not heed the lessons of history. Each time an oppressor has acted in such a manner toward the Jewish people, their acts have recoiled back upon them. The heaviest blows have in the end fallen upon the heads of the despots who thought they could stamp out an ideal, a culture, and a way of life. All of these the Jewish people possess in abundance, and it will take more than the secret police of this particular brand of tyranny to accomplish what every dictator from Nebuchadnezzar to Nasser failed to accomplish.

PUBLIC SAFETY AVIATION INSTITUTE IN HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, the International Association of Chiefs of Police—utilizing grant funds from the Justice Department's Law Enforcement Assistance Administration—has established the Public Safety Aviation Institute in Huntsville, Ala., to train police and other public service helicopter pilots. As more police departments throughout the Nation acquire and use helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft, one naturally wonders why such a program was not established before now.

The June 1971 issue of the Police Chief, the official publication of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, contains an article by William H. Franey, director of the IACP Highway Safety Division, describing the Public Safety Aviation Institute. I would like to share this article with other Members of the House and insert it in the RECORD at this point:

AN ACADEMY FOR POLICE AND PUBLIC SAFETY AVIATION

(By William H. Franey, Director, IACP Highway Safety Division, Gaithersburg, Md.)

As society becomes more populous, mobile and complex, demands for protection and service by police and other public safety agencies have risen to unprecedented levels. The accelerated need for rapid mobility and swiftness of response, coupled with ground transport limitations, has introduced the helicopter and airplane to public safety organizations. As the disparity between public service need and public safety capability increases, it is reasonably expected that the trend toward aviation use becoming an integral part of police operations will continue.

There is sufficient evidence available to indicate the effective and efficient use of aircraft by public safety organizations can be a significant factor in providing a safer environment for the citizens of a community. There is some doubt, however, that aircraft (rotary-wing and fixed-wing) are being utilized at their full potential. A significant increase in performance and effectiveness within agencies utilizing aircraft would occur if meaningful programs and standards were developed and public safety personnel were trained to meet these performance standards.

The spectrum of missions, for which helicopters and other aircraft are presently employed by police, is as variable as the type of equipment being used. Variations in the types of missions which are flown are affected by many factors, ranging from political to economic. Data availability relating to utilization and effectiveness of aircraft employed in the public safety role leaves an intolerable void.

In recent years police agencies have placed greater emphasis on prevention of crime, highway collisions, and other antisocial behavior. A basic technique used to accomplish this goal has been preventive patrol. Increased demands for police service has minimized the amount of time available for preventive patrol. The effectiveness of patrol activities in minimizing opportunities for misconduct is generally related to the frequency of patrol. In the eyes of the public, the efficiency of the police is frqeuently measured by the mobility and response time of the patrol force. The concept of police omnipresence and rapid mobility and response can be enhanced through the use of ground patrol units supplemented by effective use of aircraft. The integration of effective air support into the patrol function will serve to eliminate some of the disparities that presently exist.

There is a need for effective training of personnel, evaluation of equipment and techniques, and establishment of operational guidelines and standards by which the efficacy of aircraft and its use by public safety organizations may be related to the overall mission of such organizations.

To meet these objectives, the International Association of Chiefs of Police has established a Public Safety Aviation Institute. The Institute, located in Huntsville, Alabama, resulted from the cooperative efforts of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, the State of Alabama and the City of Huntsville, Alabama.

The Institute is designed to assist in the preparation of needed guidelines and standards and will provide public safety agencies utilizing aircraft with a center to train personnel in a public safety oriented environment.

The list of possible applications for aircraft in the public safety arena is endless. Inherent within the Institute's programs will be the identification and definition of those missions where aircraft use can produce the greatest impact. This will result in procedural standards and improved coordination between air and ground operational and support units. Additionally these programs should reveal further research development and testing needs and provide data for cost-effectiveness analysis.

Long range plans are to provide training opportunities and professional assistance to all public safety disciplines which may benefit from the use of aircraft including fire departments, fish and wildlife services, water safety services, park ranger service, traffic supervision agencies, emergency medical service, and pollution control agencies. Quite frequently, the public interest will be better served when interdisciplinary coordination and cooperation is achieved. The Institute will promote this concept.

The Public Safety Aviation Institute will enhance the general public safety through programs especially designed to train police and public safety pilots and observers with emphasis on operational concepts and doctrines which are unique to police and public safety organizations.

Initial programs are designed to offer various alternative courses that will include all aspects of public safety aviation. At present, nine separate courses have been developed for LEAA approval. As other areas of need are identified, additional courses will be developed accordingly. The proposed offerings are identified in Table I.

Overall course curricula, when applicable, will be devoted to three primary instructional areas.

Flight Instruction—to be provided by FAA qualified flight instructors.

General Ground School Instruction—classroom instruction devoted chiefly to flight mechanics, aircraft systems, navigation, weather, vehicle nomenclature and communications.

Public Safety Instruction—classroom training designed to orient the student in pertinent public safety problems and aircraft applications. Actual demonstrations of those techniques taught in classrooms relating to police mission problems is incorporated into the flight instruction phase of training. Additionally, instruction is provided in effective reporting procedures and record keeping activities.

While in the process of training, student performance is evaluated in comparison with those standards established by the Federal Aviation Agency and the International Association of Chiefs of Police. A final narrative evaluation report is developed for each graduating student and is provided to the chief executive of his agency. In addition, the performance evaluation program is utilized to identify training needs and to maintain the highest quality for Institute programs.

A continued and gradually expanding effort will be devoted to the collection of useful data for support of a successful research and developmental program.

Utilizing the support data gathered and through the review of past studies and research conducted from both within and without the police community, a plan will be developed for an air mobility research, test and development program.

It is inappropriate at this time to form judgments concerning format or test programs that will be utilized during this phase. Concepts and criteria will be postulated after examination of the existing systems in the public safety community in relation to their principal objectives.

An effective research, development and test program will serve to facilitate public safety air mobility in several ways.

A partial listing of important elements follows:

1. To provide a definition of public safety air mobility, operations, and objectives for use by designers and planners for developing aircraft with capabilities and equipment which fit the needs of public safety agencies.

2. To provide administrative guidlines to facilitate:

Cost effectiveness analysis.

Minimal safety requirements.

Minimal airframe and equipment specifications.

Minimal personnel qualifications.

Minimal landing facilities, including minimal heliport facilities and standards for emergency landing and takeoff areas.

Data requirements.

3. To provide operational guidelines designed to facilitate:

The improvement of police communication and response times.

The control and reduction of selected types of crime and criminal behavior.

The control of and the safe movement of motor vehicles within the Highway Transportation system.

The improvement of surveillance methods (both daytime and nighttime).

Emergency procedures for operations during unusual occurrences (civil disorders, natural disasters, etc.).

Emergency medical evacuation.

Air-ground coordination.

Search and rescue operations.

4. To provide a testing and evaluation center of modified and innovative airframes, avionics and related equipment to determine their feasibility and application of public safety programs.

5. To provide a clearinghouse for information relating to public safety aviation which can respond to inquiries, serve as a depository for pertinent input, and publish periodic abstracts, informational pieces, etc.

6. To maintain liaison with others, in both the private and governmental sectors, connected with aviation research and development for purposes of information exchange, possible joint research project endeavors, and to remain current with ongoing and anticipated research and development projects and trends.

Inherent within these program areas will be constant consideration of economy, safety and effectiveness.

Huntsville, Alabama, is a vital center for the National Aerospace Administration and the home of the George C. Marshall Flight Space Center. As such, a large number of the nation's leading aerospace contractors have established offices-plants in Huntsville. These firms represent the finest aerospace technological expertise and research and development capability. In addition, the University of Alabama at Huntsville provides one of the newest, most modern institutions of higher education in the South. The proximity of the Institute to this unique technological, academic and scientific community provides an obvious unlimited potential for strengthening and expanding the Institute program. This is particularly true as it relates to the Institute's research and development plans.

IACP believes that the effective and efficient use of aircraft by public safety organizations can be a significant factor in providing a safer environment for the citizens of a community. From crime prevention to the patrolling of highways, to the transporting of injured, the possible applications for aircraft in the public safety arena are yet unlimited. The challenge of controlling and preventing crime in a free society and the challenge of providing mobility on our nation's highways without mayhem are demanding ones. The Public Safety Aviation Institute and its goals of training police aviators and enhancing the use of aircraft by the many public safety disciplines will be a significant step towards meeting these challenges.

NINE MONTHS FROM SUPER SUNDAY—THE ENDLESS SEASON

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, for the most part, June 26 will be no different from most summer Saturdays. Public parks and swimming pools will be filled with the happy sounds of children at play. Young people will be found bicycling on our trails, or perhaps reading in the shade of a tree, or maybe just loafing. Thousands of peanuts and colas and beers will be consumed at RFK Stadium as the Senators take yet another drubbing. In the evening, while the streets of Georgetown begin to swell with their mixed contingent, families will take to their backyards and porches in search of a breeze. Summer nights are good times—to talk and listen and enjoy life.

Yet this Saturday night may witness something different. The streets of Georgetown may thin early. Through open windows, the sound of an unrhythmatic hut, hut, hut, and the grunts of grown men beating on each other may shatter the quiet calm of evening. And somewhere, you may be able to hear the screams of an angry, frustrated wife, threatening divorce—or worse, to rip out the television cable.

Yes, Saturday, June 26—27 days after the swimming pools have opened, 5 months before Thanksgiving, and a full 7 months from Super Sunday—marks the beginning of the football season and its first televised game.

In Lubbock, Tex., in the heat of a southwestern night, last year's All-America's will kickoff the first in an endless series of preseason scrimmages. I repeat, that this is 7 long months from Super Sunday, and I must protest.

Mr. Speaker, the domino theory has found new life in reverse. A few years ago, the first televised football game was in late August. Then it was moved back to July. Now it is June. Now only 4 months—May, April, March and February—separate us from year-round football, brought to us through the courtesy of promoters who seem determined to drain every last nickel out of their product.

And their counterparts in other professional sports are no less greedy. Professional basketball, an indoor game designed for winter play, wound up this season in the heat of May. Major league baseball will complete with pro football for the best television time slots in October. Even professional hockey, a game that reminds us of frozen ponds and bitter cold, has discovered the joys of television and the endless season. This year's Stanley Cup playoffs ended in May—after the pro basketball playoffs—and in Montreal and Chicago, it was so hot they had trouble keeping the ice frozen. The pro leagues, spurred by fat network contracts, are stripping our national sports of their seasonal tradition and glutting the airways in a way that will certainly damage our national sports by permanently dissipating interest in them.

Mr. Speaker, has not this orgy of year-round baseball, basketball, hockey, and football gone far enough?

In an attempt to get a dialog on this question started, I introduced legislation earlier this year to limit the televising of pro sports to times approximating the seasons the sports have traditionally been played. It was my hope that this bill would start the leagues thinking and perhaps would lead to a reevaluation of a trend which I fear will result in the demise of games I love.

Once again, I want to call that bill to the attention of the networks and the pro leagues. I urge on them a little bit of moderation and self-regulation. For if the networks and the pro leagues continue in this unnecessary search for another buck, they will almost certainly ruin the games that Americans treasure, and invite upon themselves the kind of Federal regulation that no one wants.

DOUBLETALK ON PRISONERS OF WAR

HON. LOUIS C. WYMAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. WYMAN. Mr. Speaker, not all of the doubetalk on the prisoner of war problem comes from Hanoi, even though the following Evans and Novak column is interesting in this light. Rest assured if we do not get our prisoners back before all our troops are withdrawn the ransom will be exorbitant, if offered.

In their eagerness to respond to what the media suggests is mounting public demand for a cut-off date, some Members of Congress are making claims of legislative responsibility for prisoner exchange that do not accord with fact. One such claim is that the McGovern-Hatfield amendment took care of the prisoner issue.

The fact is it did no such thing. All McGovern-Hatfield provided was that if the enemy failed to agree to release our prisoners—not to release them but agree to release them with no time set—within 60 days after passage, the effective date for a cut-off of funds for the salaries and supplies of our troops in Vietnam should be postponed 60 days.

There was no second postponement, nor any requirement that the prisoners be released or commitments made for their release thereafter. So, McGovern-Hatfield called for a cut-off of all funds by March 1, 1972, and the heck with the prisoners.

As Senator SAM ERVIN said of this proposal on the floor of the other body before the vote (S. 9251):

We abandon our prisoners and all efforts to release them 60 days after midnight on the 31st day of December, 1971. . . . I cannot vote for an amendment which shows that as far as American prisoners of war are concerned, 60 days after December 31st we abandon efforts to secure the release of our prisoners of war. That is what (it) provides.

Mr. Speaker, we must insist on the prior return of our prisoners of war in any legislative limitation on funding for military operations in Southeast Asia.

HANOI DOUBLETALK ON POW'S

(By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak)

The skill and audacity with which the Vietnamese Communists manipulate American public opinion on the emotion-charged prisoner-of-war issue is illustrated by a diplomatic cable transmitted back to Hanoi June 11 by the North Vietnamese negotiating team in Paris.

That cable contained the official Communist transcript of an interview in Paris three days earlier between Xuan Thuy, chief North Vietnamese negotiator, and Chalmers M. Roberts of the Washington Post. The transcript quoted Xuan Thuy as saying that "if the United States sets a reasonable deadline for the complete withdrawal of troops, we could discuss the settlement of the prisoner of war question—precisely the Hanoi line.

In truth, however, that is not what the Communist negotiator said at all. Roberts, a respected diplomatic correspondent, reported Xuan Thuy as telling him, "if a reasonable date is set, the question of prisoners may be settled." In response to another question, he amended that to "will be settled."

The discrepancy reveals the POW game played by the Hanoi Politburo. The soft line actually given in the interview with Roberts is intended to convince Americans that the POWs will come home just as soon as President Nixon sets a troop withdrawal deadline. The altered transcript cabled to Hanoi reiterated the hard line that is the Vietnamese reality: Hanoi promises nothing whatever in return for a troop withdrawal deadline.

This audacious game has worked, feeding demands in the United States for quick withdrawal. Two antiwar Democrats, Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana and Rep. Robert Leggett of California, returned from talks with the Communists in Paris indicating that the Americans were to blame for the negotiations deadlock. Clark Clifford, former Secretary of Defense, has predicted release of the prisoners 30 days after agreement to withdraw. In a climate further soured by the Pentagon papers, many Americans believe the worst of their own country's leaders while exercising complete gullibility about Communist promises.

When not talking to American politicians and journalists, the Communists revert in formal Paris sessions to the hard line of their official statements. Based on those statements, there is every reason to believe that the Communists plan to use the POWs as hostages to steadily up the ante in fulfilling all goals in Vietnam.

The basic position is point one of the South Vietnamese Communist eight-point "elaboration" of last Sept. 17. It not only links prisoner releases with a fixed date for U.S. troops withdrawals but also talks about taking all U.S. weapons and war materials from South Vietnamese troops and dismantling U.S. bases in Vietnam. Thus, the troop withdrawal deadline accomplishes nothing.

Consistently the official Communist line in Paris has been that such a deadline set by Mr. Nixon would win him merely the right to discuss prisoner releases. Mme. Nguyen Thi Binh, chief South Vietnamese Communist negotiator, deviated from this only once. On April 15, an article by her in the French newspaper Le Monde suggested that Mr. Nixon need only fix a deadline "for GIs and American prisoners to be rapidly and safely returned."

But on the very day that article appeared, Mme. Binh was her usual intractable self at the negotiations session. Prisoners would return home, she said, only after the war had "come to an end"—that is, after a political settlement along Communist lines.

Rep. Leggett's visit to Paris on May 31 again showed the two faces Nguyen Van Tien, Mme. Binh's deputy, told the congressman that POWs could be released as soon as Mr. Nixon set a "reasonable date" for withdrawal. But when reporters queried Communist spokesmen about Leggett's visit, they were told repatriation of prisoners would be merely discussed once the withdrawal of troops was announced.

Still another example occurred when Anthony Lewis of The New York Times interviewed Xuan Thuy May 21. Lewis reported the North Vietnamese negotiator "understood the concern about the American prisoners and was ready to do something immediately . . . if Mr. Nixon set a withdrawal date." But the official Communist "transcript" cabled to Hanoi said only the Communists will "be ready to talk to Mr. Nixon on the POW issue" after a troop withdrawal.

The pattern is unmistakable. The ransom for American POWs will be much dearer than the Democratic sponsored troop withdrawal deadline. To get them home, the U.S. must agree to humiliating concessions ending with a Communist regime in Saigon. Such is the iron realpolitik behind the Oriental smiles exhibited in Paris for American politicians.

LEST WE FORGET

HON. CLARENCE E. MILLER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in a land of progress and prosperity, it is often easy to assume an "out of sight, out of mind" attitude about matters which are not consistently brought to our attention. The fact exists that today more than 1,550 American servicemen are listed as prisoners or missing in Southeast Asia. The wives, children, and parents of these men have not forgotten, and I would hope that my colleagues in Congress and our countrymen across America will not neglect the fact that all men are not free for as long as one of our number is enslaved. I insert the name of one of the missing:

Comdr. Robert Saavedra, U.S. Navy, [redacted], Nogales, Ariz. Married and the father of four children. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Saavedra, Nogales, Ariz. Attended the University of Arizona. Officially listed as missing April 28, 1968. As of today, Commander Saavedra has been missing in action in Southeast Asia for 1,152 days.

MISS INEZ WATSON SPEAKS BEFORE THE 25TH PALMETTO GIRLS' STATE

HON. FLOYD SPENCE

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, recently Miss Inez Watson, clerk of the South Carolina House of Representatives, made an unusually perceptive and eloquent speech before the 25th Palmetto Girls' State.

The citizens of Girls' State witnessed many fine presentations by a number of distinguished guests during their week, Mr. Speaker, but Miss Watson's appearance was certainly a major highlight. Drawing on her many years of experience working with and observing political and governmental affairs, Miss Inez brought neatly into focus the myriad problems faced by this country.

In this age of protest, Inez Watson had some protests of her own to make; and in a time when it is fashionable to attack and scorn our "older generation," she had several thoughts on just what her generation has meant to America's progress and development.

So that my colleagues may have the opportunity to read this excellent speech, Mr. Speaker, I insert it at this point in the RECORD:

SPEECH BY MISS INEZ WATSON

It is again my pleasure to have been invited to speak to this charming and promising group of young ladies. I look forward to Girls State each year and I must admit that I cherish these moments with you.

These are very hallowed halls in which you hold your meeting. I consider it a great honor each day that I am allowed the privilege to work here. I know you must feel so honored that you gather here for your session.

This is a seat of government . . . and it is a compassionate government. This is a Hall of varied opinions, yet each and everyone is channeled toward the good of the people. This is a Hall of a progressive and responsive government. And may it always be so.

Each year when you have honored me with an invitation to address you I have tried to choose a topic of timely interest. Thus I have gone through responsibility, respectability, determination and challenge and goodly amounts of God, Country and Motherhood. Last year I even took on the Women's Liberation movement. I may not always have been wise—but, like Buckeley—I have never been without an opinion.

Selecting a topic for today has been most difficult. There are too many people who have too many opinions about what is timely—about what is important—about what should be priorities of concern—about where we should place collective emphasis.

Thus—the signs of these times is not the cohesiveness that we need—but the confusion that we fear. At a time when we should be drawing closer together—we seem to be pushing further apart.

Chants, songs and slogans of love have made us suspect. Instead of love—there is even hate. We are forming opinions and making decisions amid a background of haste and without a knowledge of or foundation of a proper concept of history or humanity.

We have been caught up in an unreal popularity of pollution, politics and protest. And there is the very real threat that the commitments we make today—in haste, in confusion—will be the convictions of generations of tomorrow.

Ecology has caught our eye and our attention. The natural balance of nature is being sold as if it has just been discovered. We have been sensationalized with statistics and fish kills, oil slicks and the ivory-billed woodpecker. And our judgment on these and many other matters has been warped by the urgency which comes from the hue and the cry of those who espouse the causes.

Politics generally has degenerated into a me-tooism and a one-up-manship battle of questionable lasting value. Chants for equalities have resulted in gross inequalities.

In protest we have splintered ourselves and our purpose and thus have seriously threatened our effectiveness.

It is time—it is past time—for reflection.

America did not become great because it sniffed flowers—but because our forefathers planted gardens. Reasonable debate produced the Constitution which has charted this nation's course to greatness. It was not the result of a protest march.

I imagine at this point that you have gotten the point that I am protesting the protestors—I am criticizing the critics—I am fed up with slogans, labels, and the liberties which have been taken with my liberties, with my freedoms, and with my right to be a good citizen.

And that I think—is the ultimate challenge and it should be the ultimate—and the common goal. Being a good citizen and within the framework of what has been recognized as practices of good citizenship lies the answers and the solutions to all our problems.

I would like to pass on to you some of the remarks of Charles Gould, publisher of the San Francisco Examiner, which parallel my feelings at this moment:

I am unalterably opposed to those who desecrate our Flag, denounce our Constitution, and extoll the virtues of Godless ideologies of other lands.

I protest those who campaign and petition and parade for individual rights but have no tolerance for the rights of those who oppose them.

I protest those who profess to champion peace but resort to terror, violence and blackmail to make their points.

I protest those so-called men of God who sow seeds of conflict and encourage disrespect for temporal law and authority.

I protest broadcast commentators and newspaper writers who feed the flames of fear by allowing rumor, guesses, speculation and conjecture to masquerade as fact.

In short, I protest those group and individuals within our country who champion any system at variance with the basic concept of equal rights and opportunities—and equal responsibilities—that must be the hallmarks of our way of life.

Words we hear today disturb me. People refer to a "Generation Gap" and in so doing imply that my generation, and those before me exercised no wisdom and no foresight and no proper understanding of the problems of the world, of the nation—of the state and even the county and city.

The other word is—relevant. What is relevant? Who is relevant? Is a new industrial plant relevant? Are schools relevant? The list of questions is endless. But we should ask ourselves—are they really relevant?

I have no apologies for my generation and I do think we have not been relevant.

As Mr. Gould points out—In one generation we have conquered and controlled diptheria, small-pox, typhoid, polio, measles, tuberculosis and pneumonia. No longer do these ancient scourges sweep across our land leaving deaths and tortured limbs and minds and hearts in the wake.

We have built more schools, colleges, hospitals, libraries than any other generation since the beginning of time. We have trained and graduated more scientists, doctors, surgeons, dentists, lawyers, teachers, engineers and physicists than did our forebears for a thousand years before. We have raised our standard of living and lowered our hours of work.

The list is endless and in reflection becomes a standard of service that your generation and those to come, might do well to follow and try to exceed. But you cannot do it divided—it must be done together. It cannot be done by those who teach and preach dispair and disunity. It cannot be done at love-ins or hate-ins.

It can be done within the framework of good citizenship; by millions of unsung heroes who are doers with hope.

It has been written—And the young men shall dream dreams and the old men shall see visions. But where there is no vision, the people will perish. And so it will remain throughout the ages.

Nations need the dreams of its youth—the energy of its youth—and the enthusiasm of its youth—but it must be channeled by the counsel of the elders.

You will find that if there is such a thing as a generation gap it is caused by those who refuse to listen to seasoned counsel and found their false faiths on flimsy threads of idealism devoid of the very necessary realism.

There is still work to be done and challenges to be accepted. There are hopes to realize and goals to be met.

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, I am requesting the immediate ban on the use of DDT, coupled with a review of permissible levels of DDT now allowed in Great Lakes fish. In addition, I am taking several other steps to relieve the economic plight of fishermen in Lake Michigan and others of the Great Lakes.

I am writing to Mr. William Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, stating that "the continued use of DDT is utterly inconsistent with DDT levels which are found in Great Lakes fish."

I find it difficult to understand why the Food and Drug Administration, on the one hand, bans the sale of fish with over five parts per million of DDT, while the Environmental Protection Agency, on the other, refuses to eliminate all interstate shipment of DDT. There should certainly be a more uniform policy so that there is no need for further seizure of Great Lakes fish.

Mr. Speaker, the Environmental Protection Agency for some reason has chosen to use the "cancellation" method to deal with the DDT problem. This allows continued shipments of the pesticide while a lengthy administrative process is underway. I am asking Mr. Ruckelshaus to use instead the "suspension" process, which would immediately halt interstate shipment of DDT. Is it not better to stop the use of DDT than to put an entire industry out of business?

I am also requesting the Food and Drug Administration to investigate the current permissible levels of DDT in fish. I am writing to Mr. Charles C. Edwards, FDA Commissioner, stating that I think we should reexamine the five parts per million limit to see if it is a realistic one. It may be that this limit should be modified in view of the actual consumption of fish caught in the Great Lakes.

I believe that the FDA should also investigate DDT levels which remain in the edible parts of the fish. While the five-parts-per-million level might be exceeded as to the entire fish, once it is cleaned and made ready for eating, it may be that the DDT level is much lower, and the fish are no longer injurious to health. I do not understand why the Department of Agriculture measures DDT concentration in meat only in the final product which reaches the consumer, while the Food and Drug Administration tests DDT levels only in raw, uncleaned fish. These practices seem highly inconsistent, and I believe that they should be fully explained.

I am also contacting the Small Business Administration to see what relief is available for Great Lakes fishermen who are now unable to market their catch because of DDT concentration. I will seek to have the Great Lakes area declared an economic disaster area, which would then qualify fishermen for SBA relief funds. The Government should certainly provide funds to ease the economic burden in which many fishermen find themselves today.

In addition, I am asking the distinguished chairman of the House Select Committee on Small Business to look into the matter of providing economic disaster funds for the Great Lakes fishermen.

Mr. Speaker, the fishermen in Lake Michigan and others of the Great Lakes are finding it increasingly difficult to stay in business because of conflicting and confusing governmental actions. I believe that we must seek clarification of EPA's policy of permitting DDT usage, and of FDA's apparent refusal to reexamine DDT levels in Great Lakes fish. At the very least, if no other relief is available, the Small Business Administration should provide funds for the hundreds of fishermen who are now unable to pursue their livelihood. I am hopeful that some solution can be found to this problem as soon as possible.

TOM STEED RESERVOIR BILL IS INTRODUCED IN HOUSE

HON. ED EDMONDSON

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, four of us in the Oklahoma House delegation—Congressmen JOHN JARMAN, PAGE BELCHER, JOHN HAPPY CAMP, and I—have today joined in introducing a bill to name Oklahoma's Mountain Park Reservoir the Tom Steed Reservoir, in honor of our beloved and distinguished colleague, the Honorable TOM STEED.

The bill will give much deserved and long-due recognition to an outstanding legislator who is the unsung hero of every major water project that has been funded in our State for 20 years.

TOM STEED has been a key figure in the fight for appropriations for scores of flood-control projects, watershed development projects, and our great McClellan-Kerr navigation system.

He richly deserves the recognition to be afforded by the proposed legislation, and I feel sure it will be overwhelmingly approved by the Congress.

TAX RELIEF FOR HOMEOWNERS

HON. ROBERT PRICE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. PRICE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on June 10, 1971, I introduced the Homeowners' Tax Relief Act of 1971. Joining with me at that time were 33 other like-minded Members of Congress. By introducing the bill, I hoped to provide a new focal point for tax reform; namely, our Nation's beleagured homeowners.

That this focal point is a significant one is evidenced by the fact that since I introduced this proposal, I have been contacted by homeowners in more than a dozen States, and pledges of support are flowing into my office in ever-increasing numbers.

Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the Homeowners' Tax Relief Act with 11 additional cosponsors: Mrs. ABZUG, Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. DENHOLM, Mr. DUNCAN, Mr. HORTON, Mr. LEGGETT, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. MORSE, Mr. WYDLER, Mr. ZWACH, and Mr. MILLER of Ohio.

Bit by bit this proposal to provide substantial and comprehensive tax relief to our Nation's homeowners is gathering momentum. I hope now to enlist the assistance of private and public organizations and concerned individuals in the hopes of helping to organize a tax reform movement which will have as its goal nothing less than providing each and every taxpayer with true tax justice.

For the benefit of my colleagues' information, I am enclosing excerpts from several letters I have received concerning this issue.

The letters follow:

MEMPHIS, TENN.—"We hope you can get enough support for passage of this bill. We are writing to our Congressman to ask for his support for this bill."

MIAMI, FLA.—"We work many years to buy a home, spend a great deal of our free time in keeping it maintained and what we can not do ourselves we pay to have done so that we can have pride in it. We take a great interest in local affairs and what happens to the community and we do not object to fair taxes. It does not seem fair, therefore, to reach a point where one can be forced to have to give up his home because he simply cannot keep up with rising taxes and repairs with no help at all."

WACO, TEX.—"Why does it never occur to Congress (and other legislative bodies) that business and industry enjoy lots of advantages that the harassed middle-income home owner cannot. Businesses can depreciate everything from pencils to trucks to immense plants and lots of 'vital' travel and other expenses; while the poor average home owner gets soaked more daily for ad-valorem taxes by every governmental entity from the precinct to the Congress; and he cannot depreciate, for example, the full cost of educating a child who will go on to become a contributing citizen."

HOUSTON, TEX.—"I sincerely hope you can gain enough support to bring this into reality. Thank you for your efforts in behalf of the home owner and the 65 year olds."

YORK, PENN.—"My friends and I heartily endorse your proposal giving home owners tax depreciation and home repair/upkeep allowance with IRS. Indeed, it is way overdue."

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—"As a young couple with a large mortgage and whose parents are retired and living in their own paid for home, we are most interested in seeing legislation of this type enacted . . . Our sincere wishes for your continued success and efforts in behalf of citizens like ourselves who have a big stake in our society."

SPACE PROGRAM NEEDS METHODICAL PERSISTENCE

HON. DON FUQUA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, this Nation needs a broadly based program for the exploration of space. To do otherwise will be a step backward for a great land.

Unfortunately, we have reacted with emotion in our space program—funding a massive program to compete with the Russians after sputnik, and after getting to the moon, failing to remember what our purpose was to begin with.

The Florida Times-Union of June 8, 1971, had an editorial with which I agree with entirely which expresses my thoughts on this matter and I am inserting it here so that others might read what they said at that time:

IN SPACE: "METHODICAL PERSISTENCE"

The U.S. space program remains alive, as the House literally shouted down efforts to kill the space shuttle and the two final Apollo moon flights.

But perhaps the most significant omen for the future is not the outcome, which was far from unexpected, but rather the way it happened—the overwhelming voice vote (to retain the shuttle and flights) and final approval of the overall NASA appropriation by a nearly five-to-one majority.

Notably, this happened before the Russians achieved the first orbital space laboratory, not merely in response to it. This indicates a sort of "second generation" attitude toward space, which bodes well for the future.

Ever since the "moon race" was won, we haven't really seemed to know exactly where we were going, or when, in outer space.

In the inevitable and understandable "letdown" which followed the moon landing, several voices of warning were raised. For one example Dr. Foy Kohler of Miami, a former U.S. ambassador to Moscow who has conducted an intensive study of U.S. and Soviet space programs, raised this point:

". . . One weakness of this country is that it does not have the same methodical persistence that the Soviets do.

"The immediate question is whether we can today fashion a rational program in science and technology for ourselves for the future, or whether we are again to wait until some new spectacular Soviet breakthrough (like Sputnik I) forces us into a 'crash program' . . ."

In other words, Dr. Kohler was asking, are we going to simply slip behind when the pressure is off, only to have to spend extravagantly to "buy time with money" at some future date?

The action of the House would indicate such will not be the case.

The efforts to close down the Apollo program early were countered by the point that the savings realized would be offset by the high cost of starting all over again if the timetable were interrupted.

The Soviet space program, as noted, proceeds with "methodical persistence," unhampered by national debate. What the House has said, in effect, is that ours, even with free debate, will have a degree of both method and persistence.

By so doing we not only can save future massive outlays, which would result when we were "hopelessly behind" again, but it may well prevent our getting in that unenviable position and facing a decision on whether or not to give in to nuclear blackmail from space.

AMENDMENTS TO END THE WAR

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, we are engaged in a wasteful, immoral, illegal, and unjustifiable war abroad. While we have widely recognized this fact, we have taken no firm stand on ending our involvement in Southeast Asia. Instead, we tacitly accept as progress the piecemeal withdrawals of the administration's Vietnamization program. Each vague and half-hearted administration promise is reversable if there is a upsurge in enemy activity. Reliance on these promises as sincere and real means to arrest our military action is a sign of congressional weakness and a neglect of congressional responsibility. I urge my colleagues to seize this opportunity to express their desire for a certain departure from Indochina. We cannot refuse to heed the hard learned lesson of the past decade that sheer military strength and intervention into the affairs of other nations cannot bring about solutions consistent with either self-determination or our own national interests.

Congress has permitted itself to become the weakest branch of the Federal Government. Day by day, the strength of the executive branch has grown and left Congress in its shadow. Sadest is that we are doing nothing about it. The tendency of Congress to surrender its war powers to the President has convinced me that we are in danger of falling into a one-man rule in this Nation on questions of war and peace. The war is undeclared and therefore unconstitutional. Both the Nedzi-Whalen amendment and its alternative, the Mink amendment, are calls for Congress to reassert its powers that the constitutional fathers intended us to wield as elected representatives of the American people.

We must speak up on behalf of millions of agonized Americans who are weary of the war and want their sons to come home. I question whether bolstering the unhealthy South Vietnamese regime is worth the price we are paying. We have talked of a nebulous commitment to support our allies in Southeast Asia. Let us talk of another commitment—one to the American people. The Government was established to serve them first and foremost. We have overextended ourselves militarily and have exaggerated our sense of mission to peoples in need of aid to the point that we have neglected our own people. We have honored our commitment, if we did indeed have one, well beyond what could be expected of us.

The burdens outweigh the benefits of the war. After losing 50,000 lives, incurring 300,000 casualties, and spending over $150 billion, our Nation has reaped no economic or security benefits. Our extravagance with limited resources has created troublesome inflation. The war has seriously divided the country, creating disturbances and revolution among the young. The alarming number of our servicemen addicted to drugs is a cost long-in-the-making but only recently exposed. Our domestic needs are so overwhelming that we need to begin binding up our own wounds. My vote for the end-the-war amendments is a vote to redirect our national energies to our homeland—our first concern.

The country is no longer interested in what we say about the war. It is waiting to see what we do. Words will not stop the bloodshed nor will they bring home the prisoners of war. POW's are not exchanged ordinarily until the war is over and certainly while 150,000 or even 50,000 troops remain in combat. Affirming our commitment to pull out of Indochina hastens their release and can hardly jeopardize it. Information now indicates that the enemy is willing to release prisoners on or before the withdrawal date, once that date is set.

Let us recognize the Nedzi-Whalen amendment for what it is. I support it not because it will directly end the war, because it will not. But I support it as an expression of concern about our continued involvement in Vietnam and an endeavor on the part of the House of Representatives to share in decisions affecting our military involvement. Since House rules require that the amendment be germane, the amendment appears weak and unsubstantive. The Mink amendment which eliminates the escape clauses of the Nedzi-Whalen amendment, leaving the path for Presidential action open in all directions, is an attempt to thwart this criticism. Admittedly, the effect of a freeze on funds for new weapons would not be felt until sometime after the December 31 deadline. As an affirmation of a sincere desire to disengaged from Indochina, either amendment is only a small step toward the end of the war. That is what I am seeking.

WHY I LEFT SOUTH AFRICA

HON. DONALD M. FRASER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Joel Carlson is a South African attorney who left his country several weeks ago. His "Why I Left South Africa" appeared in the June 4, 1971, New York Times. A lawyer can do no more than expose injustice while having clients acquitted. "But in South Africa this is not enough," for in South Africa some acquittals lead to other forms of legal restraint.

A good introduction to Mr. Carlson comes from the Friday, April 16, 1971, Newsletter of the National Union of South African Students—NUSAS. I quote the brief announcement of Mr. Carlson's departure and Carlson's essay which appeared in the Times:

JOEL CARLSON LEAVES

Mr. Joel Carlson attorney for the defendants in a number of political trials, and an Honorary Vice-President of NUSAS left South Africa last week on a British passport. Mr. Carlson will take up a lecturing post in the U.S.A.

Previously his South African passport had been withdrawn by the Government and its return refused. Mr. Carlson said that his work was being made increasingly impossible in South Africa, but that he loved the country and would return.

It has been hoped that Mr. Carlson would make a speaking tour of the campuses as the guest of the National Union in May, and his departure has come as a surprise.

Mr. Carlson is much respected on the campuses. NUSAS President, Neville Curtis said: "We regret very much that Joel Carlson has left. His work and his determination gained him many admirers, and the National Union conferred an Honorary Vice-Presidency on him at Congress last year. I am sure that he will continue to be active on behalf of the oppressed in South Africa, both now, and on his return."

WHY I LEFT SOUTH AFRICA

(By Joel Carlson)

It is the duty of a lawyer to guard the individual against all invasions of his liberty by authority. It is his duty, too, to expose injustice, corruption and brutality. The measure of freedom in any society is the extent to which lawyers and others can fulfill these functions.

By the end of 1970 my ability to act as a lawyer in South Africa had been severely curtailed by the security police.

After I exposed security police torture of detainees, the Justice Minister used his arbitrary powers to have my passport removed. Eighteen detainees had died in detention. There was strong evidence of assaults, of electric shock and other tortures.

The withdrawal of my passport marked an intensification of the campaign to harass and intimidate me. When I used my telephone to insert a newspaper advertisement for the sale of my car (not giving my name or address) my car was shot up and extensively damaged hours later. My office and phone (and my bedroom too) were bugged. Privacy was impossible.

More difficult were the threats to my wife and children. There were the late-night abusive telephone calls and death threats. A Molotov cocktail was hurled at my study. My office was shot up. One morning I opened my mail to find a bomb in a book. Poison-pen letters named me Communist, capitalist Jew and extorter. Security police subjected some of my staff and clients to interrogation. This was coupled with handsome cash offers and threats of reprisals if the offers were rejected. One secretary suffered such reprisal and left the country with her family on a one-way exit permit.

These people were tainted only with the guilt of association with me. My efforts to protect them led to their being subjected to more frequent and longer hours of interrogation by security police.

And there was the ever-present threat of the 2 A.M. knock on the door and detention. I knew only to well the horrors of this. Three widows had come to me for help after their husbands had died in detention. I had first-hand knowledge of police methods of interrogation. Persons detained were held incommunicado, in solitary and indefinitely, at the pleasure of the security police. I prepared for this with my wife. We planned what was to be done at home and in my office. Each night I put next to my bed toothbrush and shaving cream, which could also be used for lice and bugbites. I kept by my bedside a Bible presented to me by sympathetic churchmen and hoped I might be allowed that book in detention. I waited. But the plan was not to detain me, but to destroy me by smear.

It became clear that the battle I had begun 25 years earlier was fast coming to an end. My energy was spent in protecting those close to me and in keeping sane. The rest went to cases that were won in court but lost to arbitrary administrative action by security police.

In 1969 about 100 people were detained under the draconian Terror Act. Some six months later 22 of them were charged in a special court under the ambiguous "Communism Act." When we exposed in court the weaknesses of the state case, the torture of both state witnesses and the defendants, the Attorney General withdrew the prosecution. As the judge solemnly acquitted the 22 defendants the security police waited.

When the judge left the bench, they acted. The defendants were surrounded by armed police guards and redetained under the Terror Act. More than a year later they were again charged—this time under the Terror Act.

Another special court ruled the charges to be the same as before and again acquitted the defendants. The state unsuccessfully appealed but the security police did not await the outcome. All those acquitted were served with 5-year banning orders. Some were house arrested and all deprived of the enjoyment of the company of their family or friends.

Punishment without trial—a regular feature of life in South Africa—and of people judged innocent was never so blatant. What more can a lawyer do than expose injustice and have clients acquitted? But in South Africa this is not enough.

The struggle for me inside South Africa was over. My wife and four young children deserved a better life and, perhaps, I too could contribute from abroad. I applied for the return of my passport and when once again it was refused I devised ways and means of leaving with my family. But that's another story.

HON. JOEL T. BROYHILL

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in recent months considerable attention has been focused on the care veterans receive in Veterans' Administration hospitals. All too often our opinions are formed on isolated cases reported to us by the news media. Yet the VA with its thousands of employees treat hundreds of thousands of veterans each year in ways often unpublished.

In this connection, I commend to your reading a letter recently sent to the Honorable Donald E. Johnson, Administrator of the Veterans' Administration in which Comdr. John S. Hoover, U.S. Navy, retired, of my district, describes the treatment he received at the veterans' hospital here in the District of Columbia:

ALEXANDRIA, VA.,
June 10, 1971.

Hon. DONALD E. JOHNSON,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs,

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: During the past 30 years, while on active duty, I had heard rumors of the deficiencies and shortcomings of the VA hospital: patients are ignored, equipment is archaic, doctors are unprofessional, nurses are heartless, etc., etc., etc. I want to report to you that those rumors were laid to rest within two hours last week. Reporting on June 3, 1971, to the VA hospital, Washington, D.C., for disability determination, I handed my orders to a Mr. Howard F. Stewart at the desk; in a few minutes their system took charge. Mr. Stewart personally escorted me to the laboratory where a technician politely and efficiently did her job. Next, Mr. Stewart escorted me to internal medicine where I was examined, interviewed, and reassured by a warm, professional, and interested physician, Dr. Lloyd. During his examination, Dr. Lloyd sought a consultant skin specialist, Dr. Fischman, to examine me while I was conveniently disrobed (solely to preclude my having to make another stop). After the examination, Dr. Lloyd personally escorted me to the next event, the surgeon, Dr. Brall who showed me the same degree of interest and courtesy.

You can understand, Mr. Johnson, that by this time I was incredulous: hospitals just are not supposed to function in such an efficient and personal manner. But that isn't all: I went to be X-rayed, and in a few minutes a full set of films was taken by a slip of a girl who had the same cheery and interested demeanor that I had observed in the other hospital personnel.

What a fine experience it was! The hospital is a credit to the Nation, and those people with whom I had contact are a credit to the Veterans Administration. Congratulations.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN S. HOOVER.

BARGELINES ACCELERATING DECENTRALIZATION OF INDUSTRY

HON. LEONOR K. SULLIVAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, all transportation systems seem to be facing problems today and attempts are being made to provide better service in a number of areas.

It has been called to my attention that the bargelines are accelerating decentralization of industry, and in this connection Mr. Thomas J. Barta, executive vice president of the Valley Line Co. of St. Louis, spoke recently at the University of Tulsa. So that my colleagues can share Mr. Barta's thoughts on this matter, I am inserting his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

Mr. Barta's remarks read as follows:

COMMON CARRIER BARGE LINES LOOK TO 50 PER CENT INCREASE IN CAPACITY OVER NEXT DECADE

It's a pleasure to be here in Tulsa to talk about the marketing implications of the creation of the fifth dimension in transportation—the canalization of the Arkansas-Verdigris River system. You've had rail, truck, pipeline and air—and now comes water transportation.

At last you have them all and that full choice I think is the single most important development. High on the list of the factors governing plant location for the basic industries is the question of alternative means of transportation—whether, to put it bluntly, there is competition among the various modes so that the best efficiencies of each are available. The plant location experts are practical men; they want to see a competitive struggle for the traffic of their plant. The existence of low-cost water transportation brings with it water-compelled rail rates as well as the potential for water-truck and water-rail coordination. Out of this interaction of the different modes comes a healthy climate for any industry which must reach far out for its markets. Barging extends that reach by thousands of miles.

Let me first clarify some fundamentals so that you have a framework for thinking about barging.

Basically what we sell is low-cost transportation for those commodities adapted to barging. Mile for mile we approach the economics of a large pipeline; a large pipeline will only beat us when it cuts straight across country. The barges, of course, follow a winding and sometimes circuitous river. Looked at in another way, $1 will take a ton 330 miles along a river, 70 miles by rail and 14 miles by truck. It takes less energy to move a ton of freight over water than by any overland means of transportation. Try moving a pleasure boat in the water with your hand and compare the energy you expend to that of hauling it on a trailer. The difference in energy required is reflected in the barge rate, which normally tends to be one-quarter of the rail rate between the same points. That's money in the bank for any shipper.

But there's a catch to it. Instead of a truckload or a carload—30,000 pounds or 100,000 pounds—shippers must think in terms of a minimum of 300 tons and usually 1,000 to 1,200 tons in one barge. So that excludes lamp shades, electric light bulbs, TV sets, watches, and similiar commodities which are best shipped by truck or air.

About 10 percent of the inner-city freight is transported by barge. Steel, paper, chemicals, grain, coal, fertilizers, molasses, sugar, petroleum, building aggregates, and many other basic commodities move by barge. The barge lines receive in revenues about half of one percent of the Nation's freight bill for doing about 10 percent of the work. That's why, whenever navigation is the topic in the halls of Congress or anywhere else, the conclusion is quickly reached that the economy needs more of that low-cost barge transportation.

How much the rail and truck freight rates are influenced by the barge lines has never been determined. But, judging by the frequent calls we recieve from many famous companies, inquiring as to the barge rate, we know we're popular and that water-compelled rates by other modes are among the most valuable economic assets of any community.

A word about productivity. Our company, the Valley Line, pioneered the trend to larger and more powerful towboats. The Valley Line, in 1955, bought the first 6,000 horsepower towboat. It is capable of pushing 30 to 40 thousand tons of freight up and down the rivers. The river industry has gone from 500-ton barges to 1,000-ton and now 1.800-ton barges. The industry puts a lot of money into scientific research in testing basins to determine the most efficient configuration of a tow. Knowledge has accumulated over the past 15 years; the productivity trend is good and looks good out ahead as the present nine-foot channels are replaced by 12-foot channels. Today average rates are lower than in 1960—a truly remarkable achievement. Only recently, in the face of galloping inflation, have barge rates turned up after a steady decade of declining average rates. Five years ago, a 1,400-ton covered hopper barge cost $61,000. If I were to buy one tomorrow, it would cost about double. Wages are up; everything is up. But I do guarantee you this, the water carriers may have to raise rates in the face of inflation, but water carriers' rates will always be among the most anti-inflationary forces in the economy.

Let's talk about common carriers—ICC-certificated common water carriers. There are fourteen of them serving the Arkansas. Together they cover the entire Mississippi-Ohio river system connecting Tulsa with every port on 25,000 miles of river system. Is it a reactor vessel for a nuclear power plant you want to bring out of the Delaware River? Common carriers will do that complicated job. Is it a missile on its way to the moon? Common carriers take it from Huntsville, Alabama, to Cape Kennedy.

Common carriers are the lines with the responsibility for providing service week in, week out, month in, month out, year in, year out on commodities of every description adaptable to river movement.

Barge carriers may be divided into the generalists—those who handle all commodities, the common carriers—and the specialists, those who specialize in, for example, coal or grain or chemicals.

The certificated common carriers handle all commodities including the so-called regulated freight which is defined by statute as those commodities subject to transportation mark or count. You can count the bundles of steel rods, the number of steel pipes, the bags of sugar, the rolls of newsprint paper, the bundles of scrap, and similar commodities. If it can be counted—it's regulated. You can't count coal or grain or sand and gravel. Although a very able member of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, John Bell Williams, now governor of Mississippi, observed some years ago that if we were not careful the Supreme Court would have us counting grain. But if you can't count it, it's unregulated.

The rationale for this distinction, which must sound odd to many who study barging for the first time, is that when, in 1940, water carriers were brought under regulation, the objective was to regulate only those aspects of barging and lake carriage which were considered competitive with regulated railroads and regulated trucks. The solution was to invent a sort of generic classification for those commodities which were competitive at that time and exempt all those which were not. Included in the exempt classification were the dry bulk traffic and the liquid bulk traffic. As a result we have this highly complicated situation in which about 10 per cent of river cargo rates are regulated by the ICC—meaning that rates cannot be changed except on 30 day's notice and that rates must be published and are subject to protest and suspension. On 90 per cent of the traffic, rates are subject to negotiation and may change hourly—literally do change hourly sometimes on grain. They are also secret.

It's a messy situation. The railroads are now highly competitive on grain, chemical and other bulk traffic and they complain—we think quite rightly—that regulation is unequal. The common carriers and the railroads last year jointly proposed that at least dry bulk rates ought to be published. There was agreement that if rates were published competition would be more equitable and more vigorous.

A bill incorporating the rail-water proposal passed the House. It was rejected in the Senate, but rejected in such a way that the Department of Transportation now has the responsibility of recommending a solution to the "equity" problem. Personally, I think there are going to be changes in the present situation in the next few years in the direction of more equity in regulation between rail and water carriers. This may not be comfortable for either mode, but it will be good for you.

We've staked out our position. It is simply this: government intervention in intermodal price competition is only justified when the more efficient carrier, as determined by objective tests, is shut out of the competition by the less efficient carrier by means of tactics readily recognizable as an abuse of economic power. The basic public policy objective can best be stated negatively: the more efficient carrier should not be precluded from competing for the business by tactics having nothing to do with relative efficiency. We have to face up to a definition of efficiency, of course. Relative efficiency can only be measured by comparing the full costs incurred by the different modes in performing the job. No form of partial cost can serve as a measure of relative efficiency. All that will come out in testimony before the Congressional committees charged with the duty of taking the various proposals for reform and shaping them to a public interest conclusion. I think we can expect changes.

The greatest advantages of barging, of course, come to those farsighted companies which locate their plants on water. But the river economies can reach quite a long way from the river bank. Our company and others are always happy to make a study of total transport costs and make a recommendation as to the relative economics of combining barging with some other mode.

For example, recently we studied a movement of a huge boiler from the West Coast to Pennsylvania. It couldn't move east of St. Louis by rail because of dimension limitations on the railroads. The only alternative seemed to be via intercoastal steamer. We worked out a combination of rail and barge and saved the shipper $75,000. We have also worked out water-truck movements with savings up to 40 per cent.

I could cite other examples, but the basic point is that if you bring us your problem, we can, as experts in transportation, work out alternatives and may well be able to save you very substantial sums of money.

The typical barge line is a small operation with none of the usual bureaucracies of very large companies. We can get to the heart of the matter fast and give shippers decisions without delay.

A major campaign of our industry over the past three years has been to sell the railroads on the advantages of sharing in water transport savings by joining the best efficiencies of railroading and of water transportation. Studies we have made indicate over-all savings to shipper of from 10 to 50 per cent are possible on rail-water movements. There also exists an opportunity for higher earnings for the rail carrier than it could achieve by connecting with another railroad.

Railroads have been reluctant to join forces with water carriers, but the advantages of using the most efficient combinations of both modes are so overwhelming that I believe we will see much more voluntary coordination between rail and water carriers in the future. Already some important new movements have started and more are under discussion. The climate is improving. Common carriers, of course, hold certificates of convenience and necessity and can make through joint rates with railroads and motor carriers. The ICC even has the power to prescribe reasonable joint rates from lake and river ports by rail. This area for potential improvement in efficiency and productivity and the lowering of over-all transport costs is getting more and more attention. If the railroads refuse to become "willing partners" of the barge lines, the Commission has the power to make them partners anyway.

The idea of improving rail-water coordination makes even more sense in the light of the expansion of transport facilities needed in the next decade. According to the Department of Transportation, the transport industry will have to increase its capacity by about 50 per cent if the needs of the economy are to be met. Barge lines have in fact increased their capacity by 64 per cent over the last decade and hence are well aware of the financial strain involved in such an achievement. We expect to increase our capacity at least by 50 per cent in the next decade. Expansion of this order requires hundreds of millions in new investment and that investment ultimately has to be founded on adequate earnings.

But the way to stable rates and even, in the long run, lower rates, may well be higher rates now, paradoxical as that may sound. An investment by shippers in rates that will produce adequate earnings will develop a "return" in improved carrier productivity. Transport companies which do not make adequate earnings are condemned to continuing to employ obsolete and costly techniques. They do not have the money to buy the latest in money-saving productivity. Fortunately for barge shippers there's a lot of improved productivity to buy in the years ahead.

Those in the marketing field would do well to pay increasing attention to the obligations we all have to help solve the problem of pollution associated with transportation. State and federal authorities are under heavy pressure to clean up the environment and the common carriers are taking a leading role in experiments leading to proper control of water pollution. Experimental equipment on several towboats has as its objective returning water to the river in better condition than it was taken out. Other towboats are rapidly installing holding tanks for waste fluids. I have no doubt that suppliers of barge lines which now deliver fuel will soon have the added job of removing wastes and garbage.

As this program takes shape, it is going to be essential to develop agreed standards among the states so that the barge lines are not faced with contradictory and confusing regulations as they move from one state to another. Nor would it be right to impose a double standard, requiring more of the barge lines than is required of communities and industries along the river banks. All these are important details; the most important point to make is that the barge lines want to get this problem behind them as rapidly as possible.

More intensive training of crews at such places as the Arkansas River Academy at Helena, Arkansas, will result in higher competence of river crews and fewer accidents. Our company has for many years believed that licensing of pilot house personnel for all river barge lines is overdue. All our crews are properly licensed. Our constant emphasis on safety has been recognized by insurance companies in a tangible way. Doing the job right, therefore, represents both sound public policy and sound business policy.

There will be costs associated with preventing spills at terminals and installing other measures to improve the environment, but they are going to be worth the price. The key objective, of course, must be to make requirements uniform throughout the river system and standardize the equipment necessary so that it can be mass-produced at the lowest possible cost. The common carriers are pledged to accelerate their efforts in this field. We are discarding single-skinned barges, for example, and replacing them with double-skinned barges which are, in effect, a tank within a tank. The single-skin tank barge, when damaged, leaks its cargo directly into the river. It should be phased out and replaced, as we have been doing, with double-skinned barges. Damage to the outer skin leaves the cargo intact.

The shippers and the barge lines know what needs to be done. We are getting on with it. It may be that some will wait until they are forced into it, but I personally think that would be poor business and public policy.

This much is true. Because it takes less energy to move freight on the rivers, the barge lines inherently should be the mode of transportation which creates the least pollution—air, noise, and other forms of pollution. We believe this is the case today. We want to keep it that way.

We see a busy decade ahead. As the economy grows, there is a pronounced shift of industry toward the savings that come from large scale operations and the use of the most economical techniques. That means including water transport wherever possible.

A most interesting new development is the LASH barge concept. A huge mother ship shuttles between New Orleans and Europe on a fast schedule. Between schedules, her 400-ton capacity lighters travel up and down the rivers picking up and discharging cargo. On the other side of the ocean they travel up and down the European rivers. As you know, the European economy is even more river-oriented than ours, so that the potential for the exchange of cargoes at costs which eliminate warehousing and port transfers on both ends cut down on insurance and loss, and speed the movement of goods is quite exciting. It will bring a new type of traffic to the common carriers—traffic which has not seen the river since the steamboat days—everything, in fact, from clothespins to farm machinery.

Water transport has an exciting future in this country. Industry is increasingly locating and expanding along the rivers. This is contributing most significantly to the decentralization of economic activity. The country would benefit from a gradual rearrangement of industry and could solve its urban problems more quickly if decentralization were to be expedited. Low-cost river transportation is a powerful force promoting decentralization to the benefit of those communities which have that fifth dimension—river barging.

TRIBUTE TO VETERANS OF THE 66TH INFANTRY DIVISION OF WORLD WAR II

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, meeting in convention at Atlantic City on June 25 through June 27 will be the veterans of the 66th Infantry Division of World War II fame. Governor Cahill has issued a proclamation designating Saturday, June 26, as 66th Infantry Division Day in the State of New Jersey, in recognition of the record of valor established in combat by the division.

Activated on April 15, 1943, the three regiments of the 66th Infantry Division reached England during November and early December of 1944. On December 24, Christmas Eve, the division embarked to cross the channel, destination Cherbourg. A German torpedo detonated into the transport as it made the crossing; 762 brave men of the division were lost.

After debarkation, the 66th was attached to the 12th Army Group, 12th Army Group Coastal Sector, with operational control of all French forces in the area. On December 29, 1944, the 66th relieved the 94th Division in the Brittany-Lorie area. The division's mission of containing the enemy in the St. Nazaire and Lorient pockets was carried out by daily reconnaissance patrols, limited-objective attacks, and the maintenance of harassing and interdictory fire on the enemy's installations.

The 66th repulsed a heavily mounted German attack near La Croix on April 16, 1945, and strongly emplaced enemy positions were taken during the days of fierce fighting that occurred between April 19 and April 29. Fifty thousand enemy troops, in the Lorient and the St. Nazaire pockets, surrendered to the division when hostilities ended on May 8, 1945. The division had freed 180,000 French civilians and liberated 850 square miles of France in the Brittany Peninsula. All of these achievements were attained at heavy and tragic cost; the division suffered 2,250 casualties.

The 66th went to Marseilles from Coblenz, late in May, and sailed for home on October 27, 1945. Arriving in the States on November 6, it was inactivated on November 8, 1945.

Its shoulder patch had been a red-bordered circle, having within it a panther's head, black, against an orange background. Thus it is that the reunioning veterans at Atlantic City are organized as the "Panther Veterans," men feared by their country's enemies in time of war and admired and respected by their countrymen at this convention time set aside for recollection, remembrance of departed comrades, and reaffirmation of the principles of patriotic performance of duty.

On the 28th anniversary of their outfit's activation, I salute the Panther Veterans of the 66th Infantry Division.

HOMEOWNERS' RELIEF PROVIDES "TAX JUSTICE"

HON. R. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that real estate taxes have become an increasingly oppressive burden of our Nation's homeowners. In view of this fact, I am joining over 40 of my colleagues in cosponsoring the bipartisan Homeowners' Relief Act of 1971, originally introduced by my distinguished colleague from Texas (Mr. PRICE).

This act underscores my deep concern for "tax justice" and would be especially helpful to homeowners of low and moderate incomes, and to those on fixed incomes, such as pensioners. By allowing annual deductions of up to $1,000 for home repairs, and giving other special benefits to homeowners 65 years of age or over, this legislation recognizes that the real estate tax burden falls particularly hard on those with low and moderate incomes. Homeownership is being penalized both by rising State and municipal real estate taxes, by the inflationary costs of purchasing homes, and by tax regulations that inhibit those of moderate means from buying homes.

A study last year showed that at least 3 million households, most of them owned by those in low-income brackets, paid more than 10 percent of their yearly income in real estate taxes. Although such taxes account for about 85 percent of all tax money collected locally, there is still heavy pressure to raise these levies to pay for the increasing costs of schools, police, and other local services.

In a 25-city survey, average city real estate taxes—much of them collected from low and moderate wage earners—accounted for some 70 percent of all taxes collected. The study, noted above, points out that real estate taxes in the suburban and rural areas, where there may be little commercial or industrial development, are very high, up to 85 percent, which I cited earlier.

Referring specifically to the cities, Milwaukee ranks first in percentage of income paid in real estate taxes. The percentage is 10.7 for persons in Milwaukee earning $5,000 yearly. Other cities follow the Milwaukee pattern, with the actual percentage paid by the people in this wage bracket about the same as that paid by those making $15,000 annually. There is as much as a 2-percent drop in total percentage of income paid for real estate taxes when salaries rise to $25,000 annually.

The Federal Government must exert initiative in both stimulating homeownership and providing a needed measure of tax justice to homeowners through reasonable tax incentives. The cure-all and end-all was not the Tax Reform Act of 1969 alone, which I gladly supported, but must be a continuing effort in reforming our tax laws.

The Homeowners' Tax Relief Act of 1971 is one more step in that direction. Individual homeownership always has been a goal for which Americans have strived and is the basis for the stability of our communities. We must do all we can to help encourage homeownership and not discourage it.

The need for action of this sort has been immense and long overdue. Congress finally has before it a bill which will hopefully extend to homeowners some of this necessary relief. I urge my colleagues to push for immediate passage of this important piece of legislation.

VALUE ENGINEERING CONCEPT EXPLAINED BY EXPERT IN FIELD

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. WILLIAM D. FORD. Mr. Speaker, the concept of value analysis/engineering was introduced to the construction industry about 6 years ago, and tested and proved on the Federal Government level by the U.S. Postal Service in 1970.

The post office experience has since served as a pattern for value engineering studies by several other Government agencies. The Postal Service was so impressed, in fact, that it initiated a value analysis/management training course last year in its Postal Service Management Institute.

An excellent history and explanation of the value engineering concept was written recently by Mr. Louis C. Kingscott, Jr., president of Louis C. Kingscott & Associates, of Kalamazoo, Mich. It was published in the May bulletin of the Michigan State Society of Architects.

Because of the tremendous potential of value engineering at the Federal Government level, I recommend it highly to my colleagues, and insert it at this point in the RECORD.

The report follows:

VALUE ANALYSIS—ENGINEERING IN THE CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

(By Louis C. Kingscott, Jr.)

"We do Value Analysis/Engineering as a part of our normal Architectural and Engineering Services" most A&E firms will tell you. I said that before 1965, but my experience since has shown that this is not true. Why?

It has been six years since the concept of Value Analysis/Engineering was introduced to the construction industry. Recently, a marked increase of activity has been noted which appears to be related to the recent upsurge in prices and accompanying budget restrictions. In an effort to combat this upsurge, the construction industry is becoming more receptive to the VA/E concept.

"We have been cutting costs for years, but we don't call it value engineering," is a typical reaction when one mentions VE in most consulting firms. This is understandable since all firms are concerned in some manner with cutting costs. A question asked by many firms is, "What is the difference, besides the name, from what is being done now?"

Actually, during more than five years of activity in the VA/E profession, our subsidiary Washington, D.C. firm has developed and refined VA/E specifically for the construction industry As pioneers in this field, our VA/E approach has resulted in total cost reductions of at least five percent of total cost of ownership for many clients.

It was in recognition of our early activities in the VA/E field that prompted the United States Senate Committee on Public Works and the House of Representatives Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Postal Facilities and Modernization to ask us along with others to testify before them about the potential of Value Analysis/Engineering in the construction industry. As a result of the Hearings, a number of government agencies have studied this potential and have adopted formal programs.

The present method of design for a facility involves principally the architect and/or engineer developing plans and specifications which take into consideration the design criteria of the owner.

The architects and engineers must determine which materials, equipment and methods are most suitable from the standpoint of aesthetics, economy, function and maintenance but within the standards and criteria set by the owner. Generally, the selection is done by an architect or engineer working on a particular aspect of the design. For example, the electrical engineer selects the generators and material for conductors, conduits, panel boxes, etc. The civil engineer selects the sewage and water systems, etc.

In some cases, economic studies are conducted, such as fuel selection, structural systems, and even site selections. However, in most instances, any selections or studies are made by an individual or at best, by a group of individuals within the same discipline. In some cases, a team is called together. But, normally no formal job plan is followed or full-time employees assigned to organize and coordinate activities to generate and follow through on new ideas.

In essence, what occurs is that each discipline ends up generating requirements, reviewing these requirements, establishing and modifying their particular criteria, based on the standards and criteria of the owner. This approach does not always lead to decisions which are most economical for the end function of the facility. Instead, this approach fosters or encourages economic decisions within each area with maximum safety factors deemed necessary by each discipline. Although this system is not totally without merit, it tends to sacrifice end system performance in maximizing sub-system performance. The result is that total cycle costs (total cost of ownership) are not adequately considered.

HOW DID VALUE ANALYSIS/ENGINEERING ORIGINATE?

During the last years of World War II and the early years of the war recovery era, General Electric in its manufacturing activities noticed that some of the substitute materials they were forced to use actually performed as well, or better; and at the same time, they cost the same, or less.

GE decided they needed to know why they didn't discover these substitutes for themselves in the first place without the war forcing them to it. After digging into their usual design practices, they realized that scarcities had forced them to perform a functional analysis approach to the design of their components. And, GE's accompanying cost analyses showed them that a relatively few parts of the design represented a great majority of the high cost items. This basic observation by GE is formalized by Pareto's Law of Distribution. Pareto (1848–1923) was an Italian economist and sociologist who found that in situations where a large number of diverse elements are involved in a single unit, about eighty percent of the costs are in about twenty percent of the elements.

WHAT IS VA/E?

Value Analysis/Engineering in construction is an objective, systematic method of optimizing total cost of a facility or system for a specific number of years. By total cost is meant the ultimate costs to construct, operate, maintain and replace a facility or system over a specific life cycle.

In simple terms, VA/E is a systematic, organized approach to obtain optimum value for every dollar spent. Through a system of investigation, unnecessary expenditures are avoided or removed, resulting in improved value and economy. The VA/E approach is a creative effort directed towards the analysis of functions. It is concerned with elimination or modification of anything that adds cost to an item but is not necessary to its needed requirements. During this process all expenditures relating to construction, maintenance, operation and replacement are considered. Through the use of creative techniques and the latest technical information regarding new materials and methods, alternate solutions are developed for each specific function. VA/E is not simple cost-cutting by making smaller quantities or using less or cheaper materials.

Lawrence Miles, while at GE, the now-recognized father of Value Analysis/Engineering by industry, and the National Society of American Value Engineers, (SAVE), formalized a management approach to develop a series of questions about certain important elements of design. This series of questions can be used in designing an electrical appliance, a building or even finding the best way to do house work. This series is called the "VA/E" Job Plan.

Thus the essential component of this organized effort is the Value Analysis/Engineering Job Plan. The Job Plan breaks down into four phases; i.e., information phase, speculative phase, analytical phase, and proposal phase.

Before the Job Plan can be utilized, the VA/E effort must seek out high cost areas having potential segments of unnecessary costs. This continuing effort should start as soon as valid design decisions have been made and end only when the client accepts the facility or product.

After a number of high cost areas are isolated and evaluated, the areas of greatest potential savings are selected for further VA/E study. Systems such as structural systems and mechanical systems are always investigated for unusually high costs. The study is conducted by a trained multi-disciplined team. This team approach has proven to be most productive.

THE INFORMATION PHASE

During this phase four principal questions must be answered.

What is the design?
What does it do?
What is the value of the function?
What does it cost?

The first step taken by the team is to gather all pertinent information such as existing criteria, present performance, and special problems. The next step in the information phase is most important—determining the primary and secondary functions of the design and relating these functions to cost. In simple terms, primary and secondary functions are those performance characteristics that a design possesses. The primary function is the basic purpose of design. It is the function that must remain to do the job. Conceivably, all other functions might be eliminated, but the primary cannot. Secondary functions are not required to achieve the basic purpose of the design—they only aid in achieving it. If the design can be changed, the need for secondary functions may be modified or even may disappear. For example, in a typical electrical wiring system, the wire itself performs the primary function—conduct current.

The insulation performs secondary functions—protect wire, identify wire, and insulate wire. Theoretically, we could eliminate the insulation and still perform the primary function—conduct current. Quite often we find that the secondary functions cost more than the primary function.

The next step is to determine the value or worth of the primary function. This is defined as the lowest cost achievable to perform the primary function in the most elementary manner feasible within the state of our present technology, with due consideration given to aesthetics. Normally, no value is assigned to secondary functions. This value or worth is used as a guage to indicate whether or not good value is apparent in the performance of a particular function. Extreme accuracy in determining this figure is not important since it is merely used for comparison.

The final step in the information phase is to determine what we are paying to perform this function. If this figure exceeds the estimated value of the function by many times, poor value and high costs are indicated.

THE SPECULATIVE PHASE

During this phase of the principal question to be answered is—what alternate ways can the necessary function be performed? This phase is designed to introduce new ideas to perform the basic function. Therefore, it is necessary to fully understand the problem, and, by using the problem solving or creative technique, to generate a number of possible solutions. The objective of this process is to generate a greater quantity of ideas, thereby enhancing chances of optimum solutions and higher savings.

The creativity process starts early in life for every individual and maximizes at 4–5 years of age. From then on, creative thinking is restricted due to parental and school controls, rules, regulations and social and legal requirements until many lose their inherent ability to be creative. In fact, one can become negative.

What can be done? For one thing, it must be recognized that the creative process requires an alert mental attitude and a responsiveness to change. Also, it must be recognized that regeneration of creativity can definitely be advanced through training. This phenomenon is dictated by the loop on the curve. By training and practice, creative ability can be improved by learning to recognize and overcome barriers to creativity. As one aspect of training, it is very important that such emotional blocks as the fear of making a mistake or of appearing foolish be removed in order to maintain a positive approach to creativity.

The foremost approach in value analysis/engineering creativity is the "brainstorming" technique. Brainstorming is a problem-solving conference method, whereby each participant's thinking is stimulated by others in the group. The typical brainstorming session consists of a multi-disciplined group sitting around a table and spontaneously producing ideas that might perform the required function. During the session the group is encouraged to generate the maximum number of ideas. No idea is criticized! Judicial judgment and negative thinking are not permitted.

Experience has shown that engineers, and to a somewhat lesser extent, architects find it difficult to participate in a brainstorming session. It is necessary to continually point out that any evaluation or criticism must be held under a later phase. It is only after a number of sessions that "free wheeling" is achieved.

ANALYTICAL PHASE

In this phase, sometimes called the evaluation and investigation phase, alternates generated during the preceding phase are sifted, examined and developed into alternate solutions. The principal tasks to be accomplished are to evaluate, refine, and cost analyze the ideas and list them in order of the greatest savings.

The VA/E team must use all the sources of information available to determine if the ultimately selected alternate is truly lower cost, and perform required functions without impairing the essential quality, reliability or maintainability. An important aspect of the problem is determination of total costs. One solution might result in lower acquisition cost, but at the same time it might result in higher cost for the life of the system.

PROPOSAL PHASE

The proposal phase, sometimes called the program planning and reporting phase, is the final step in the VA/E Job Plan. During this phase, three things must be accomplished.

1. The group must thoroughly review all alternate solutions being proposed and document them completely to make sure that the best value is being presented and significant savings really are being offered.

2. The group must develop a sound proposal to management. In doing this, the group must consider not only to whom it must propose, but how to propose solutions most effectively.

3. Finally, the group must present a plan for implementing the proposal. This action is a critical one. If the proposal can't convince management to make the change, all the work goes for naught.

A most important fact is that the VA/E staff or team does not make the final decisions. It only recommends to the decision maker—designer, architect, engineer, or owner. Its effectiveness depends on its performance (which has been proven) and the attitude of management.

When is the best time to apply VA/E? The best time is in the early design cycle where VA/E can make its maximum impact on cost reduction. At this point, however, without accurate cost estimates, it is harder to document. But, major design decisions can be challenged and if changed, implemented without much extra work.

The most dramatic application of VA/E is when bids have exceeded the budget. This is the least productive stage but cost savings can be documented more easily. Major design changes are quite often prohibitive both from the implementation costs and the time schedule.

It is most important to note that when VA/E change proposals are accepted that the architect-engineer receive proper additional service fees for implementation.

What are some of the beneficial side effects of VA/E with our own office? Better internal communications between disciplines has resulted. It helps us to view a building as a total system as opposed to a collection of separate design solutions for architectural, mechanical, electrical, structural and civil engineering problems. It has inceased our internal efficiency. How much? By at least five percent. Many other benefits are developing continually.

Architects and Engineers, as the major decision makers, must investigate all new management tools that will provide their clients with better service. We must not be reluctant to change and especially in the study and adoption of new management tools that will offer our clients the most value for their construction dollar. Value analysis/engineering is a tool.

REV. JOHN J. LONG—GREAT PRIEST, GREAT EDUCATOR, GREAT MAN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, last Friday morning, the Reverend John J. Long of the Society of Jesus died in Mercy Hospital in Scranton, Pa., and in dying, left the community bereft of a truly great priest, a truly great educator, and a truly great man.

Father Long came to Scranton with one great mission before him. He took over the position of president of the University of Scranton with an absolute determination to make a splendid university an even more distinguished one in the academic world. He brought together the people of our community in a manner we had not seen before. He gave each one of us a sense of participation in the life of that university and he gave every student in that university an enormous sense of participation in the life of the community.

Throughout the years when he was president of the university, and in the years afterward when others took on that burden, there was scarcely a project initiated by the good people of that region in which Father Long did not have a prominent part. He had a sense of dedication to the community that made the community realize that this was a unique man. He had a sense of dedication to each individual in the community that has made his loss a very, very personal loss to all of us who were fortunate enough to have him as a friend.

It is the end of most men to pass from this earth and to be forgotten quickly. Occasionally there comes along a man who leaves such an imprint on his time that he is remembered for generations to come. Father Long was such a man. In the death of Father Long, it is very difficult to extend sympathy to anyone. In his lifetime, he triumphed over death to such a degree that it seems only to be a quiet passage from the splendor of this life to the splendor of the life beyond the grave where the God he served so well awaits him.

I know that all of you, my colleagues in Congress, will join me in a fervent prayer of thanks that such a man walked among us here in America and enriched the lives of all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I insert two editorials, from the Scrantonian and the Scranton Times:

[From the Scrantonian, June 20, 1971]

REV. JOHN J. LONG

The John J. Long Center on the University of Scranton campus will perpetuate for our time and beyond the name of the priest, educator and builder whose contribution to the University and the community was enormous.

As the third Jesuit President of the University from 1953 to 1963, Reverend John J. Long, S. J. presided over and gave inspirations and leadership to a decade of progress in which the physical complexion of the University was transformed. Its academic structure was expanded and improved and the institution developed an entity with a true campus atmosphere and a record number of resident students.

While the Long Center by name will keep the memory and image of Father Long high in the consciousness of all of us, the splendid building itself represents but a fraction of the advancement made through efforts carried forward, brought to fruition or initiated during the period of his stewardship.

In all, 12 new structures were erected and will stand as testimony to the productivity of his tenure. The face of extensive area of the city on the fringe of downtown was altered with the acquisition of properties on Quincy and Monroe Avenues, the Scranton State Office Building and squash court and property along Lindon Street.

A fine interworking between the University and the community helped immeasurably in opening the way for enlarging the University into the excellent asset it is today. The Board of the S. R. A. as constituted at the time assisted substantially in property acquisitions and financing and Father Long frequently expressed gratitude for the understanding and cooperation accorded the great work of building a modern University.

It was fitting that Father Long, a Philadephian whose priestly and teaching endeavors assigned him to various cities and institutions before he came here, lived out his years of retirement in Scranton and had as his last responsibility the role of advisor to the University President. Father Long found here a welcome and warmth he prized and in return he gave us the fruits of work superior in quality and structured to endure.

[From the Scranton Times, June 19, 1971]

FATHER LONG BROUGHT US TOGETHER

The Rev. John J. Long, S. J., came to us a virtual stranger nearly 18 years ago. He stayed on first as president of the University of Scranton and then as adviser to succeeding presidents. And because of the personal holiness he brought here and his dedication to the cause he served he left this community at his death yesterday spiritually richer and much taller academically than it was on his arrival. Few men do so well.

Father Long's role in the tremendous physical expansion of the university is well known. He had much help in this endeavor because he sought it out. It was Father Long who forged the strong link between the university and the community by involving thousands of men and women in its goals and enlisting their talents and contributions in fulfilling those objectives.

Through his kindly determination Father Long was able to bring about as well the broadening of the university faculty and the advancement of the university's scholastic excellence in new fields of learning.

And he gave of himself and the university in return. His personal warmth made him approachable to those of high and low station. He was never too busy to give spiritual and paternal advice when it was sought nor to join in the furtherance of community projects. The facilities of the university were made available to the community under his tutelage for research and consultation on civic problems, for the enrichment of its secondary educational programs and for varied other endeavors.

The University of Scranton stands as a monument to the man. It was Father Long's benevolence which will live on in the hearts of men.

HON. WILLIAM A. STEIGER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, too often our discussion of international trade is restricted to language that confuses more than it enlightens. By resorting to the terms "free trade" and "protectionism," we regularly imply there is no middle ground between the two positions.

In a recent speech, Mr. John H. Esch, of Sheyboygan, Wis., has explained the fallacy in this dichotomy. Mr. Esch, president of the Leverenz Shoe Co., stresses that absolute free trade is incompatible with the role which Government must play in promoting social progress:

Today in America we can point with humanitarian pride to the legislative controls which have raised the standard of living of the American workman to the highest level in the world. American citizens rightfully enjoy the benefits of the 40 hour work week with time and one-half for overtime, the legal minimum wage, workmen's compensation, child labor laws, social security and every other benefit.

We also realize that every product manufactured in the country includes these costs in its selling price as well as the extraordinary high cost of being governed at all levels in America.

Mr. Esch maintains that the result of these social programs is to prevent the perfect operation of a free trade model, which assumes that industries compete with each other between countries on the strength of their own efficiency and technology. Mr. Esch says:

The cost of any American made commodity is higher than its foreign counterpart, even if the cost of material and processing is actually the same or less.

Mr. Speaker, I believe his conclusions form a reasonable standard for us to consider in establishing international trade policy:

Whether we wish to consider tariff and nontariff restrictions, whether we wish to consider inequalities of cost burdens, whether we wish to consider the practice of illegal dumping, or whether we wish to consider the effect of inflation on the inflexible dollar, the fact remains that free trade has been a one way street favoring our trading competitor. Our decision must be between giving away still more, settling for present inequality or providing reasonable protection to the threat of unfair competition.

I commend the speech to your attention:

FREE TRADE VERSUS PROTECTIONISM?

When I was a boy I was intrigued by Aesop's famous fairy tale of the blind men and the elephant, and as a man I have tried to remember his lesson. You will recall that Aesop told of the blind men who sought to understand the appearance of an elephant. One, judging the elephant by his leg, assumed that an elephant must be something like a tree, another determined from the trunk that an elephant was like a serpent. The third felt the elephant's side, and thought that an elephant must be like a wall. Each attempted to judge an elephant from where he stood, and in each case it was not possible to get the complete picture from that position.

There is a great temptation to judge the issue at hand from the position of our personal economic interests. Those of us whose existence is threatened by imports can easily become inclined toward protection, and those of us who profit from exports are easily tempted to recommend a free trade posture for our country. I believe that when we stand back and look at the big picture, we discover that the truth lies somewhere in-between.

Today I would like to seek an understanding of the big picture with you, by looking at the trade question in the light of these observations:

1. The issue of free trade versus protection is an academic question, because there is no free trade, especially for Americans.

2. There is a need for movement from our selfish interests to humanitarian concern for America and Americans.

3. Several economic facts of life dictate the necessity of a moderate defense of American labor and industry.

Considering the first of these contentions, I would like to make it clear that there is no free trade and that we are living in times of growing protectionism abroad.

Stanley Nehmer, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Resources, put it this way, "We are not facing a simple choice between free trade and protectionism, neither one of them exists anywhere in the world."

The tendency of our country to match protectionism abroad with our own free trade inclination was described well in an interview by Treasury Secretary Connally in the U.S. News and World Report last month. Referring to our trading partners he said, "These countries have grown accustomed to our being relaxed, fairly generous, always forgiving, always easy in our dealings with them. Consequently, they have built up tariff arrangements, they have built up trade restrictions against U.S. goods, they have carved out territorial areas where they now grant preferences, and they expect us to take it and like it."

The policy that we have pursued in the years following World War II has been an understandable one. In 1946 we were sitting on nearly $25 billion in gold, we had the only viable economy in the free world, and we were generous in our trade agreements. We responded generously to the appeal of any free country in economic trouble, and in those days it was right that we should. Today we have a different situation.

My own personal experience includes a trade mission to England to purchase shoes for our company from an English manufacturer and to market our own Wisconsin made shoes in England. We had a product at the time that was in demand in England and that could have been sold in the market. I spent a day in the American Embassy and received the fullest measure of cooperation and assistance. In the end I discovered, however, that the importing of shoes from England was a very simple proposition, but I was advised that I might just as well forget the possibility of exporting to England. The conditions were far from reciprocal, and there surely was no free trade for Americans.

In September 1970 the House Ways and Means Committee published a list of nontariff barriers to United States exports in 69 countries, and should there be any real doubt in your mind about the nonexistence of free trade in the world today, I would recommend this list to you. The listing includes quantitative restrictions, quotas, tax supported subsidies, export credits, accelerated depreciation, insurance against loss, and outright prohibition. There is no free trade for Americans.

The theory of free trade is based on the assumption that manufacturers compete with one another across international boundaries on the strength of their own efficiency and technology. For American industry this is not the case. Today in America we can point with humanitarian pride to the legislative controls which have raised the standard of living of the American workman to the highest level in the world. American citizens rightfully enjoy the benefits of the 40-hour workweek with time and one-half for overtime, the legal minimum wage, workmen's compensation, child labor laws, social security, and every other benefit. We also realize that every product manufactured in the country includes these costs in its selling price as well as the extraordinary high cost of being governed at all levels in America. The result of all of this is that the cost of any American-made commodity is higher than its foreign counterpart, even if the cost of material, and processing is actually the same, or less. The American government imposes a heavy burden on the shoulders of the American manufacturer, and so long as he carries this burden without protection there is no free market for Americans.

Another American giveaway took place at Bretton Woods, New Hampshire in 1949, when the dollar was fixed as the international standard of exchange, and all other nations were allowed to devalue and revalue their currency when they see fit to make it more costly to sell in their markets, and to strengthen their position as exporters. Of all the nations in the world only the United States cannot exercise this option.

Bruce Clubb, United States Tariff Commissioner, emphasized the seriousness of this issue in this way. Accordingly when we experience unusually great inflation, as we have for the past five years, we must ask our workers and investors to work harder, faster, and more efficiently to keep up with their foreign competitors whose costs are not rising as fast. When our workers and investors cannot keep up, then we ask them to change their line of work. Most other countries would take care of at least a portion of this problem by adjusting their exchange rate, rather than putting the entire burden of adjustment on their import competing industries."

The point that I have tried to make is simply this. Whether we wish to consider tariff and nontariff restrictions, whether we wish to consider inequalities of cost burdens, whether we wish to consider the practice of illegal dumping, or whether we wish to consider the effect of inflation on the inflexible dollar, the fact remains that free trade has been a one way street favoring our trading competitor. Our decision must be between giving away still more, settling for present inequality or providing reasonable protection to the threat of unfair competition.

A second appeal that I would like to make to you would be in behalf of a movement from personal self interest to a humanitarian concern for fellow Americans.

I think that I could help to make this point if you could take a walk through our factories with me, and I could introduce to you the many fine American citizens whose working lives have been spent making some of the finest of Wisconsin's men's shoes. Some are veterans, most are family people, many own homes, few, if any, have ever been on relief, or drawn unemployment insurance. They pay taxes in Sheboygan, New Holstein, Valders, or in the surrounding communities, and have contributed their full share to financing our state and our country throughout their wage earning years. They are citizens in good standing. Many of them will be through working for life if they lose their shoe factory jobs. Your computer may tell you that they are expendable, but if you knew them, your heart would tell you that they are not.

If you find it difficult to relate to these people as individuals, consider the effect of their employment on our relief rolls and on your tax burden. While there are many skilled workers in our industry, there are also many of modest skills. Many workers are from minority groups, and many live in rural America. In many a small town the local shoe factory is the largest employer. At a time when our country is presuming to do everything possible to provide hope and opportunity for the minority worker, for the low skilled worker, and for the rural poor, there is surprising reluctance to save an industry that has been fulfilling this obligation for America without any subsidy for years.

Is it really necessary to move from our one-sided free trade posture in order to save an industry like the shoe industry? Here is a story of what has happened:

In 1956 imports were 1% of American production.

In 1970 imports became 42% of American production.

While we have been talking about what might be done to save the shoe industry for America, imports increased 27.4% in the first quarter of 1971. In March they were 67% of production. Eighty-five factories closed last year, a net loss of 140 for the decade. Production is the lowest in 15 years.

Optimists say that in ten years the domestic footwear industry will be gone unless some form of protection is offered. Pessimists say that it will take only five years. Whether it be five years or ten, the effect on the American consumer will be disadvantageous. If you were not to consider the loss of the individual jobs or of the industry of concern, the effect on the American consumer-at-large should be a matter of concern. When the American footwear market is at the control of foreign manufacturers, and freed of local competition, the American consumer will pay the price. The dumping will stop and the profit taking will begin. Not only that, should there be a national emergency in the future, ours will be a nation without shoes or apparel, regardless of price.

The point that I am trying to make is that I recognize that trade is a two way street. We must seek a balance that will permit vital industries to survive, that will make available a balance of jobs to match the talents and skills of American labor, that will permit the importing of sufficient goods to eliminate the inefficient American manufacturer, and that will permit sufficient exportation of America's superior products to strengthen our economy and balance our payments. Each of us has an obligation to stand back from our self-interest in this matter, and to recognize the needs of America and Americans.

Finally I would like to submit other reasons for retreating from our unilateral free trade policy, and undertaking a moderate defense of self-interest.

It is argued that our national economy can prosper by matching cash outflow due to imports with growing exports. The truth is that in the trillion dollar world market United States manufacturers are losing ground. Inflation and rising costs are taking United States products out of the world market. The United States share of world exports in 1968 was 23.8%, in 1969 23.3%, and in 1970 down to 22%. Ours is a declining share of the world market. While this conference is to be commended on its resolve to reverse this trend, we can ill afford to gamble our national economy on this hope.

The rumors of favorable trade balances in the past simply have not been true. Export figures have included AID giveaways and Public Law 480 exports that are paid for in foreign currency. The true result has been a deficit trade balance. More than that when you recognize that freight and insurance costs on imports are actually a cash outflow, we find that in the last four years our deficit trade balance has risen from $186 million to $1.7 billion. (U.S. Department of Com-census publication FT990 and Trends in Foreign Trade).

With reference to this trend, Treasury Secretary Connally states, "I am not one of those who treats this whole question of foreign trade with benign neglect. I am worried about it. All I am saying is that if other nations are concerned—as they ultimately will be if we continue to have balance of payment deficits of $10 billion a year—they must be fair with us. We don't have reciprocity in our trade agreements. I think we are entitled to it. It is just that simple." Stanley Nehmer, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Resources, put it this way, "Many people feel that the expansion of exports will restore our balance of trade to a healthy condition. Certainly export growth plays a large role in meeting this objective. But over the last decade our imports have been rising more rapidly than our exports, and this is building problems for our balance of payments far into the foreseeable future."

Students of the international economy are impressed by the spectacular growth and the prosperity of the Japanese economy and the European Common Market. The theory that the American economy can only grow with the continuation of free trade policies is left subject to real doubt when we realize that both the booming Japanese and Common Market economies are intensely protectionist. The success of these economies commends to us a re-evaluation of our unilateral free trade policies, and a reasonable defense of our own interests.

I have tried this morning to appeal to you for an open mind, recognizing that this is essentially an American problem that must be viewed from outside our special interests. I pointed out that we do not have an opportunity to elect free trade as a practical alternative, because there is no free trade for Americans in the real world, and I emphasized the need for a reasonable level of protection for American labor and industry because it is our duty to our citizens, our international credit demands it, our trading partners are prospering under it, and our national economy requires it. Should there be any uncertainty in your mind as to where to begin with a reasonable level of protection, may I suggest shoes?

HON. CARLETON J. KING

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I would like to include an article which appeared in the June 24 issue of the Christian Science Monitor entitled "The Laughable Legend of Uncle Sam."

As one of the sponsors of the resolution approved by Congress in 1961 designating Samuel Wilson, of Troy, N.Y., as progenitor of America's national symbol, and because I still have the high privilege and honor to represent the city of Troy, N.Y., in the U.S. House of Representatives, I am pleased to call the attention of my colleagues this article concerning the legend of Uncle Sam.

The article follows:

(By Lloyd J. Linford)

That astute fellow decked out in top hat, striped pants and chin whiskers, whom we fondly call Uncle Sam, is a legendary character with origins that were considered laughable by early-day Americans who appreciated a good joke.

A lesser personage might not have survived such odds, but Sam overcame his mirthful beginnings and has come on to enjoy world-wide notoriety.

How the nickname "Uncle Sam" came about is one of those quirks of history that prove truth really can be stranger than fiction.

The story begins back in the early 1800's when the young nation found itself embroiled in another war with Great Britain—the War of 1812—not many years after the Revolution had severed ties with the mother country.

A certain meat packer and dealer named Samuel Wilson had built up a thriving business in the town of Troy, near Albany in eastern New York State. Troy was an important trading center those days for the country's expansion to the north and west, as well as for the Army.

Sam Wilson, who was the butt of the joke in question, was a stalwart citizen of the Troy community, well-known for his honesty, common sense and jovial disposition. And, of course, he was affectionately called "Uncle Sam" by his many friends and acquaintances.

By 1812 when the war started, Sam Wilson had become prominent in state affairs and thus was a natural choice for serving as inspector of provisions for the U.S. Army in the area. And it was natural, too, perhaps that as a leading meat packer he was called upon to supply meat to the Army quartermaster.

Soon after the fighting began, a group of government officials visited the Wilson plant in Troy. One of the group casually asked a workman what the "U.S." stamped on the meat barrels stood for. Actually, it referred to the U.S. government. But the workman jokingly replied that the U.S. stamp represented his boss, Uncle Sam Wilson. Thus was born the nickname of the United States.

Following the incident, "Uncle Sam" became a standard joke around the area and in the Army. The term spread among soldiers of that day much as "GI" (government issue) took over during World War II. Before long all government property was being referred to as Uncle Sam's.

Newspapers and magazines at home and abroad picked up the name, too, and in a matter of years Uncle Sam came to symbolize the national character and the government itself.

Cartoonists were especially instrumental in fixing the name and the image. Historians credit the popular British magazine Punch and its cartoons showing a lean, whiskered gentleman wearing a top hat and striped trousers with having set the stage for development of the modern Uncle Sam concept.

By the turn of the century, through the efforts of such noted American cartoonists as Thomas Nast, Joseph Keppler, and others, Uncle Sam had become firmly entrenched in people's minds as the symbol of the republic.

One of the most imaginative and lasting treatments of the symbol is James Montgomery Flagg's Army recruiting poster showing the imposing figure of Uncle Sam pointing his finger and saying: "I want you. . . ." Flagg's poster, credited with bringing in countless recruits and otherwise fanning the flames of patriotism, was used extensively in both world wars.

As alert readers may sense, Uncle Sam has changed with the times as cartoonists have adapted his image to suit current issues and their timely conception of what the nation's image should be at any particular point in history. But his likeness remains unmistakable and his usefulness unchallenged.

As for Uncle Sam Wilson, who took it all as good-natured jest, he continued to prosper in meat and other business lines and enjoyed the limelight as one of Troy's leading citizens. Historians find no evidence that he ever took advantage of his privileged status as the patron saint of the republic in his business and social affairs. It was just a good joke.

Sam Wilson passed on July 31, 1854, at the age of 88. His grave site in Troy is marked by a four-ton granite monument inscribed: "In loving memory of Uncle Sam, the name originating with Samuel Wilson (1766–1854) during the War of 1812 and since adopted by the United States."

HON. JOHN R. RARICK

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. RARICK. Mr. Speaker, those of us from that area of the United States known as the South have additional reason to question the sincerity, motivation, and intent of those at the helm of our country.

Our Nation's leaders announce that the South is leading the Nation in racial mixing, including public school integration. We are told, as are all Americans, that it is the North that is dragging its feet; that it is with the Northern moderates and liberals who have consistently pointed their fingers at the South where the true racial problem still exists.

Then in a matter of days, the Nixon administration announces that it has written 39 school districts in 17 Southern and border States ordering more integration and more busing to advance the doctrine of racial proportions.

But, the North remains unscathed. Apparently the doctrine of conquered provinces remains the policy of the Republican administration.

And, to make race mixing profitable and more palatable to the Southern politicians, the administration urges enactment of legislation to provide revenue sharing to Southern school districts in the form of large sums of money hopefully to provide "emergency school aid for quality integrated education."

A more real reason for the President's insistence on such benevolence from the American taxpayers is to buy the school buses that are necessary to carry out his Chief Justice's order. Reports from Jackson, Miss., indicate school buses for that city alone will cost between $300,000 and $400,000.

Perhaps the President and his loyal band of experts and advisers are satisfied with their progress toward integrated education in the South and have now concerned themselves with improving the economy by selling school buses. We need only to find out who in the administration is in the school bus business to learn the answer.

I include several related newsclippings and the Herald of Freedom from June 25, 1971, in the RECORD at this point:

BUSING ORDERS SENT TO SCHOOLS IN 39 DISTRICTS

(By Peter Milius)

The Nixon administration said yesterday it has written 39 school districts in 17 Southern and Border states that they have some more desegregating to do under the Supreme Court's April 20 pro-busing decree.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare sent letters to the 39 districts last Friday. A spokesman said more will be sent this week.

The letters are the first time the administration has moved in a major way of its own volition to enforce the busing mandate. HEW did earlier recommend extensive cross-town busing in at least three Southern cities. But it did so in each case as a consultant, after a judge asked for its opinion.

The department said yesterday it has tentatively identified "80 to 100" districts under its jurisdiction that have "substantially disproportionate" racial ratios in one or more schools and are thus subject for action under the new Supreme Court decree.

There are 4345 school districts in the 17 Southern and Border states. HEW has jurisdiction over about 3660. Most of the others, including most of the South's big cities, have been taken into court.

It was chiefly these big cities that the Supreme Court's April decree affected. Most of the HEW districts are smaller, and many of them have no or relatively few black children in them.

The 39 announced yesterday include Virginia Beach and Martinsville, Va.; Wicomico County on the Maryland Eastern Shore; Wilmington, Del.; Gulfport, Miss.; Paducah, Covington and the suburbs of Louisville, Ky.; and Amarillo, Tex.

Eight of the districts are in North Carolina, seven in South Carolina, five in Texas.

Prince George's County is on the list to get a letter, but hasn't yet. Alexandria will probably be on the list as well.

There is only one district on the list with which HEW has already begun detailed negotiations. That is Columbia, S.C., one of the largest in the HEW purview.

Columbia has about 40,000 students, about half of whom are black. Last year, before the Supreme Court's decision, HEW let it leave about half of those black students in black schools inside black neighborhoods. Now it will have to bus them out.

HEW's letter set no deadlines, but several officials agreed yesterday that "it's this September."

The department said some districts listed yesterday have only one or two "disproportionate" schools and may be able to comply with the Supreme Court standards with only minor adjustments. But "most will have to bus," one official said.

LEADERS AGREE ON RACE PLAN FOR SCHOOLS

JACKSON, MISS., June 23.—School district officials and civil rights leaders agreed today on a plan for desegregating the city's elementary schools through busing and educational parks.

Both sides, in the first compromise they've ever reached, agreed the plan would remain in effect for three years without a court challenge. The school district is the largest in the state.

Dr. Harry S. Kirshman, acting superintendent of schools, said the agreement will affect some 18,000 to 19,000 elementary school children, with some 8,000 to 9,000 being bused to classes.

Kirshman estimated buses will cost between $300,000 and $400,000, while two educational parks for fifth and sixth graders will cost about $1.5 million. He said some school tax increase probably would be needed to augment available state and federal funds.

The educational park concept is built on clusters of modules around a common center. Each module is to accommodate the equivalent of four traditional classrooms with 30–1 pupil-teacher ratios.

The South Jackson Park would have 2,391 pupils, 43 per cent of them black, and the North Jackson Park would have 2,437 pupils, 54 per cent of them black.

U.S. STRICTLY ENFORCING SCHOOLS RULING

(By John Mathews)

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare last week continued to demonstrate that the Nixon administration intends to rigorously follow principles set down by the Supreme Court in its April 20 school desegregation decision.

In plans filed by HEW at the request of federal courts in Corpus Christi, Tex., Wednesday, and in Nashville, Tenn., Tuesday the government recommended substantially increased busing of school children to effect school desegregation. In each case, the local federal court eventually will order a desegregation plan, considering both the government proposal and that made by the local school board.

While HEW has been responding to directions by courts to submit desegregation plans, the department has yet to say clearly how it will apply the principles of the Supreme Court decision to school desegregation plans it has negotiated directly with school districts.

INDIVIDUAL APPROACH

Indications are that HEW intends to avoid setting national guidelines, but prefers instead to deal with school districts on a case-by-case basis. Politically, this approach is viewed as less controversial and more manageable than a national pronouncement affecting all desegregating school districts.

HEW statistics show that 754 school districts in the 11 Southern states negotiated desegregation plans with the department. Another 640 are desegregating under court orders, and 44 are still in litigation. A total of 2,904 school districts, most of them smaller school systems, are termed "fully desegregated" and have regularly filed compliance agreements reviewed by HEW.

In Corpus Christi, Nashville, and in the Austin, Tex., plan, filed May 14, HEW for the first time adopted the principle of non-contiguous zoning, set forth by the Supreme Court.

Non-contiguous zoning is a departure from the traditional neighborhood school policy since the new attendance zone may be a combination of two previous attendance zones located at some distance from one another, or a gerrymandered zone. The new zone invariably requires busing of school children.

PAIRING RECOMMENDED

In all three cases, HEW has also recommended pairing of white and black schools and satellite zones which sweep across neighborhoods to bring together in schools white and non-white children separated by segregated housing.

The Corpus Christi plan, filed by HEW with judge Woodrow Seals, orders the busing of about 10,000 school children in a school district which previously bused only small numbers. The district has more Mexican-American and Negro students than Anglo students, while suburban school districts are heavily white. The racial percentages of the district are 49 percent Mexican-American, 45 percent Anglo and 6 percent black.

14,500 MORE BUSED

With more than 92,000 children in its schools, Corpus Christi currently has 17 elementary, 5 junior high and 2 high schools which are 80 percent or more Mexican-American and Negro. The HEW plan is designed to eliminate the racial concentration in the schools. An HEW spokesman, however, could not say whether any largely white or minority schools would remain.

The Nashville plan calls for the busing of 14,500 more students. The system currently buses 33,500 students and the additional busing recommended by HEW will bring the number of children bused to more than half the total enrollment of 95,300. One Nashville high school would still have a heavy concentration of black students, although the percentage of blacks will be reduced from 92 to 65 percent.

In its April decision, the Supreme Court said that busing, noncontiguous zoning and pairing of schools are legitimate devices for desegregating schools. The court added that a school system would have to give convincing reasons for retaining individual schools with predominantly minority enrollments.

The burden of deciding what constitutes reasonable desegregation plans was placed by the high court on the U.S. District Courts.

HIGH COURT RULING PUTS SCHOOL BOARDS IN BIND

(By Curtis J. Sitomer)

LOS ANGELES.—Jolted by the United States Supreme Court decision that bond issues may require approval of more than a majority of local voters to be legal, California schools—as well as others across the nation—may be forced to lean harder on state and federal governments for financing their building needs.

The Supreme Court ruling was on a West Virginia law that required a 60 percent affirmative vote on bond issues or raises in tax rates. The state's Supreme Court of Appeals—its highest tribunal—had thrown out the law, declaring that it violated the equal-protection clause of the U.S. Constitution by sidestepping one-man, one-vote majority rule.

LOWER COURT OVERRULED

But the U.S. Supreme Court overruled that decision, thereby reinstating West Virginia's law—and thus also upholding similar laws in other states such as California. The Supreme Court said such laws do not violate the one-man, one-vote concept so long as they do not "authorize discrimination against any identifiable class."

Now a Rand Corporation report, undertaken for the California Governor's Commission on Educational Reform, strongly urges centralizing school financing at the state level.

An economist, Dr. Stephen M. Barrio, principal author of this study, says that such a move would eliminate vast inequities among school districts in both taxing and spending. He says a shift to a statewide property tax, either on all property or at least on industrial and commercial property, would be a fairer method of school financing than the present dependence on local homeowners and voters.

CALIFORNIA AFFECTED

In West Virginia the U.S. Supreme Court, in effect, also voided a California Supreme Court decision of last June—which was also based on "equal protection." The court here has set aside a longtime state requirement that two-thirds of the voters are needed to approve city, county, and school-district bond issues.

Three California districts are immediately affected by the U.S. decision. Since last year's ruling, voters in southern California's Antelope Valley approved $8.5 million in school construction bonds by a 57 percent majority. And the Los Angeles suburb Los Nietos passed by a 65 percent affirmative vote for $980,000 in building bonds. These referendums now are invalid since they failed to achieve a two-thirds (66.67 percent) majority.

LOS ANGELES HIT HARD

Hardest hit, however, is the 733,000-student Los Angeles district itself, this nation's second largest, which had just approved $198 million in school bonds to rebuild and replace facilities damaged by the Feb. 9 earthquake here.

The ballot measure narrowly missed—(by fewer than 1,500 votes)—clearing the two-thirds requirement. And officials were hopeful that the U.S. Supreme Court would uphold the 1970 state ruling and validate the passage of the bonds on a majority basis.

Now the Los Angeles Board of Education says it will have to seek permission from the State Legislature to hike a special override tax from 10 to 50 cents to bring more than 150 stricken schools up to state earthquake standards. Also, district Superintendent William J. Johnson says it may be necessary to go back to the voters in a special election next October to try to recoup needed bond funds.

Meanwhile, state school chief Wilson C. Riles shows little optimism about passing school bond issues by a two-thirds majority. He notes that in 1970 60 percent of those presented to voters up and down this state failed to muster this type of support. However, a high proportion did achieve a simple majority approval.

The U.S. Supreme Court edict comes at a time when public schools both here and across the nation are feeling a severe financial pinch.

Moves to lift some of the fiscal burden from local taxpayers and depend more on state financing have been rebuffed in California recently, chiefly by those who fear losing local control of schools.

RACISM AND THE U.S. SUPREME COURT

The U.S. Supreme Court decision in April 1971 authorizing the busing of children to integrate public schools is in itself a form of racism. While segregation has been declared illegal, forced integration is just as illegal and the decision is a usurpation of the authority of Congress and is in violation of the U.S. Constitution. Congressman John R. Rarick has pointed out that the average American is being told via TV and newspapers that the Supreme Court has now "legalized" busing of school children and that the Supreme Court's order is the Law of the Land. "Nothing," he said, "could be further from the truth." The law of the land is derived from Article VI of the U.S. Constitution which states: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby . . ." Nothing in the Constitution provides that Supreme Court decisions are to be the Law of the Land. To the contrary, judges are bound by acts of Congress and Congress made the matter of busing clear in Title 42 of the U.S. Code, section 2000C–B which reads:

". . . provided that nothing herein shall empower any official or court of the United States to issue any order seeking to achieve a racial balance in any school by requiring the transportation of pupils or students from one school to another or the school district to another in order to achieve racial balance or otherwise enlarge the existing power of the court to insure compliance with Constitutional Standards."

Definition (b) of the above section states: "Desegregation means the assignment of students to public schools and within such schools without regard to their race . . . but desegregation shall not mean the assignment of students to public schools in order to overcome racial imbalance."

The decision of the Supreme Court was a follow-up to the 1954 Warren Court Decision which was in no small part based on studies made by Gunnar Myrdal, who was identified as a notorious Swedish Communist in hearings of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee in March of 1958. The infamous Supreme Court Desegregation decision of May 17, 1954 set the stage for racial troubles which have continued ever since. It was the efforts of Thurgood Marshall, on behalf of the NAACP, which brought about the school desegregation decision of 1954. Marshall was rewarded by being appointed a U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge and is now a U.S. Supreme Court Justice himself. Thurgood Marshall, according to official records, had several affiliations with organizations cited as Communist and subversive and practiced law in New York State for over 20 years without a license.

The recent "busing" decision was as a result of a case in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system in North Carolina. In that case approximately two years ago, U.S. District Court Judge James B. McMillan ruled that all known ways of desegregating including busing, should be considered, and a year ago Judge McMillan ordered the busing of students across a wide area. Appeals to the U.S. Supreme Court ended in the recent Burger Court decision to permit busing.

U.S. District Court Judge James B. McMillan was born in Goldsboro, North Carolina, December 19, 1916, the son of Robert Hunter McMillan and the former Louise Outlaw. He graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1937 and Harvard Law School in 1940. On February 27, 1944 he married Margaret Blair Miles. Judge McMillan is known as a liberal, a one-worlder, and has been a member and supporter of the subversive United World Federalists for many years. With a weird sense of humor, Judge McMillan has a battery-run toy school bus which he zooms around on his office carpet. Judge McMillan was appointed to the federal bench in 1968 in one of the last appointments made by former President Lyndon Johnson.

The Charlotte, N.C. school desegregation case was instituted by Julius Chambers, a 35-year old Negro attorney employed by the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. He had argued the case from its origins in Charlotte in 1969 up to the Supreme Court in Washington, D.C. The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. receives a considerable portion of its financial support through what is known as "The Committee of 100," located in Suite 1900 at 1776 Broadway, New York City. The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. describes itself as being the "principal legal arm of the civil rights movement, serving members of all organizations and unaffiliated individuals. No part of any other organization, it is an independent non-profit corporation, with its own directors, staff and budget." Contributions to it are deductible for U.S. Income Tax purposes. The political orientation of The Committee of 100 may readily be determined by noting some of its members such as Roger N. Baldwin, John C. Bennett, Leonard Bernstein, Eugene Carson Blake, Ralph J. Bunche, Henry Hitt Crane, Frank P. Graham, Horace M. Kallen, Alfred Baker Lewis, Benjamin E. Mays, Reinhold Niebuhr, Albert Sprague Coolidge, all of whom have, according to published records, varying degrees of affiliation with either Communists, Communist-front organizations, or Communist enterprises.

In a recent letter soliciting funds the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. made an appeal on behalf of the black poverty, unemployment, job discrimination, job promotion and hunger. Not a word was said about lawsuits to force integration or busing.

The NAACP, which is responsible for instituting the action which brought about the 1954 decision and this most recent one on busing, has been described in the Congressional Record as having a "subversive character." The State of Georgia Commission on Education, stated in an official report, "It might be enlightening to give some totals which indicate the extent to which the top leadership of the NAACP has given aid and comfort to the Communist-front apparatus. Listed on the current letterheads of the NAACP are the names of 236 different national officers. One hundred forty-five (or more than 61 percent) of these individuals have been involved, in one way or another, with Communist enterprises, for a grant total of 2,200 affiliations of public record. Forty-six of these NAACP national officers have had one or two Communist affiliations; 99 have had 3 or more such affiliations; 52 have had 10 or more; and 46 have had 15 or more."

The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, according to Newsweek of May 3, 1971, plans to institute lawsuits in at least 49 Southern cities, including Birmingham, Little Rock, Dallas, Houston, Atlanta, Tampa, Memphis and Richmond for new integration programs. Some 3 million children attend public school in these cities and if just 20 per cent of them had to be bused, that would mean transportation for 600,000 students in cities that have few school buses now.

The U.S. News and World Report of May 10, 1971 pointed out that school district attendance zones may be gerrymandered and pupils shifted from one school to another by pairing or grouping of schools. Anti-busing laws that obstruct desegregation are unconstitutional according to the article which stated, "The broad rules that the Court laid down give a green light to virtually all the devices for racial mixing that have provoked so much controversy—and occasional violence—in the South."

Jack Greenberg, director of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, who argued the cases before the Court said, "The country is going toward an integrated society and the Supreme Court has not turned back from that, in spite of many dire predictions it would." When Thurgood Marshall left the NAACP to become a U.S. Superior Court of Appeals judge, his place in the NAACP was taken by Jack Greenberg.

The N.Y. Times of October 5, 1961 stated, "Professor Walter Gellhorn, an authority on civil liberties, sparked Mr. Greenberg's interest in the legal aspects of the subject, and when Mr. Marshall asked Professor Gellhorn to recommend a bright student to help handle some of the NAACP cases, the professor submitted Mr. Greenberg's name." Professor Gellhorn was a long-time friend of Thurgood Marshall; they had been together on the National Committee of a Communist front, the International Juridical Association. Louis Budenz, in testifying before the House Committee to Investigate Exempt Tax Exempt Foundations on December 23, 1952, identified Prof. Walter F. Gellhorn as a member of the Communist Party. Professor Gellhorn was also a member of the Communist front, the National Lawyers Guild, as was Thurgood Marshall. According to the N.Y. Times, Jack Greenberg, Marshall's successor in the NAACP, feels that law is a religion and "he once confided that the only place where he really felt he was in a house of religion was when he entered the Supreme Court of the United States."

Representative John R. Rarick, addressing the House of Representatives, stated:

"Our responsibility under that Constitution is plain. The American people have no redress but in this House. The power of impeachment rests with us. The power of the purse rests with us. The very existence and jurisdiction of every district court and court of appeals in the federal system rests with us. The appellate and supervisory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is entirely ours to bestow, limit or abolish.

"We behold judges, ignore the positive statute law which we have enacted and the Constitution which they have sworn to uphold.

"Freedom of choice is not an empty slogan. Freedom of choice is the heart and soul of American liberty. The American people still understand this and we must understand that there is a point beyond which the great law-abiding majority cannot be pushed. We are perilously near that point.

"I state plainly and simply that this action of the Supreme Court of the United States is founded neither in any possible construction of the Constitution nor in any possible understanding of the law.

"It is a classic example of the arbitrary and unfettered exercise of naked power.

"Long years ago, Thomas Jefferson warned free men of this very possibility, when he dramatically pointed out that of all tyranny, judicial tyranny is the most fearful.

"If the Constitution of the United States forbids a State to assign pupils to a school solely because of their race, it makes no difference whether the object of such assignment is segregation or forced integration under the newly invested 'Doctrine of Racial Proportion.' If government has no power to forcefully segregate, it has no power to forcefully integrate.

"It does not take genius to understand that the State either has that power or does not. Until 1954, it had such power. The Constitution did not change, but in 1954 the Warren court decided the power had vanished. The Warren Burger court has now decided that although the State has no such power, the court has.

"What the preposterous decision amounts to is that racial school assignments are unconstitutional if they are made by the States, but constitutional if made by the courts.

"These decisions are a gross distortion of any possible interpretation of the Constitution."

The militancy of civil rights groups began with the 1954 Supreme Court decision, with freedom rides, marches, demonstrations, sitins, and civil disturbances, which ultimately led to riots, lawlessness, anarchy and insurrection. In high schools throughout the country there have been untold instances of assaults, robbery, rapes, destruction of property and even attacks on school teachers. National Negro militant groups advocate segregation of blacks from whites but neither the federal government nor the Supreme Court takes notice of this. The Black Muslims (with thousands of members throughout the country) and other black nationalist groups advocate separation of the races and practice blatant racism. The court decision, brought about by a subversive organization, supposedly is to benefit Negro children, yet no one has taken a referendum as to what white and Negro parents actually want for their children. In Richmond, Va. a city official conducted a poll and found that 99% of the whites opposed mandatory busing as did 85% of the blacks. Nevertheless a U.S. District Court judge ordered cross-city shipments of 17,000 Richmond secondary students, many of whom must travel two hours a day, including transfers, to fulfill a court order. In September of 1971, 21,000 pupils, including very young elementary students, will be bused back and forth across the city of Richmond.

As the Dallas Morning News pointed out, "The Supreme Court's decision on busing to break up the pattern of neighborhood schools was a masterpiece of compound contradictions.

"First in telling the federal courts they could push ahead with plans to set up their own preferred racial proportions in each school, the Court adopted a position that has been opposed by the President, by the Congress—in several laws—and by the great majority of the American people.

"Busing children back and forth across school districts solely for the purpose of establishing racial proportions is a concept that is popular with theoreticians but with almost no one else."

The Montgomery, Ala. Advertiser commented, "April 20, 1971, was the day when the Court demanded absolute subjugation of Southern schools, 'root and branch,' and authorized, directly or indirectly, gerrymandering, crosstown busing, racial quotas—any means at all, no matter how insane or 'bizarre,' as Chief Justice Burger politely said—to accomplish what the latter-day John Browns want.

"What do they want? After reading every reaction story it hardly seems unfair to say they want the destruction of Southern schools. We can reach no other conclusion. The same hatred by enlightened Northerners who professed love in supporting Reconstruction I is apparent in this, which they hope will be the final act in Reconstruction II."

Commenting on the Burger court busing decision, Governor George C. Wallace of Alabama stated, "I am not surprised at anything the court does. I feel the people in Alabama's insane institutions could have written a better decision."

While the decision primarily affects the southern states, New York Cvil Liberties Union attorney Burt Neuborne predicted it is now just a matter of time before New York's anti-busing law is thrown out once and for all. He further predicted that the New York Board of Education officials would now be free to enforce whatever integration plans they want. The N.Y. Daily News in an article out of their Washington bureau, April 21, 1971 stated that a new generation of political nightmares may be in store for Nixon or his successor if the Burger court decides to tackle the issue of segregation in the North.

Senator Abraham A. Ribicoff introduced an amendment to a bill appropriating $1,400,000,000 for school desegregation. Sen. Ribicoff's amendment would have required the same rules to apply in the north as those which are to be enforced in the south. Senator Jacob Javits opposed the amendment and on April 20, 1971 Ribicoff charged Senator Javits with hypocrisy for being "unwilling to accept desegregation for his state, though he is willing to shove it down the throats of the Senators from Mississippi." Shunning the tradition against personal attacks on the Senate floor, Sen. Ribicoff declared that Javits and other northerners were against his proposal to force an end to school segregation in metropolitan areas in the North because of their "fear of political reprisal." Looking directly at Javits, whose head was buried in his hands, Ribicoff said, "I don't think you have the guts to face your liberal constituents who have moved to the suburbs to avoid sending their children to school with blacks."

At a time when there is so much talk of poverty, hunger and unemployment, to spend $1,400,000,000 to push integration seems an unwise expenditure of tax-payers funds. Forcing white children into predominantly black schools and vice-versa creates antagonism and adds to the already serious condition which exists in schools in most parts of the country. A 1970 survey conducted by the Senate Sub-committee on Juvenile Delinquency shows a tremendous increase in crimes in schools from 1964 to 1968. Some types of crimes in the 110 school districts studied jumped several thousand per cent. Homicides in these elementary and secondary schools jumped from 15 to 26 per year—an increase of 73 per cent. Forcible rapes increased from 51 to 81 per year (or 61 per cent). Robberies increased 306 per cent; burglaries and larcenies jumped sharply; narcotics arrests were 1,069 per cent higher. The biggest jump of all was in assaults on teachers by students, which went from 25 in 1964 to 1,801 in 1968, or a gain of 7,100 per cent in four years. Crimes by nonstudents at the schools jumped 2,600 per cent. The National Education Association has estimated that school vandalism alone is costing the nation's schools about $200 million a year. These statistics were reported in Life-Line's Freedom Talk of April 17, 1971.

An organization of high school principals in New York City reported that crime—assaults, robberies, lawlessness, etc. including attacks on teachers—has become so prevalent throughout the city of New York that the entire school system is in danger of being unable to function properly. The majority of the crimes, according to reliable informants, are committed by young Negro militants who brutalize and terrorize younger students, and school authorities are reluctant, not only in New York but in many other cities, to bring in the police for fear of creating racial tension. Forced busing of students is going to aggravate this situation considerably. Not only will there be student resentment but parent resentment as well.

Those Americans who thought the Supreme Court under Burger would become more conservative have to realize that they were indulging in wishful thinking. This recent decision is worse than the Warren Court decision of 1954. Most children of the federal judges, administration officials and legislators attend expensive private schools where integration or segregation problems do not exist. Senator Javits is not the only hypocrite; there are many others. Congress has the authority to enact laws which become the Law of the Land the Supreme Court notwithstanding.

Late in April, referring to what he called the unfortunate opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Brown vs Board of Education, Senator James O. Eastland, quoted from the Court's own decision: "To separate them (Negroes) from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone." The Indians, Japanese, Chinese, etc. in America, like the Negroes, represent minority groups, however, no mention is made about their "minds and hearts." The whole concept is absurd and raises questions as to actual motive. The neighborhood school plan has proven to be fair, practical and economical and this plan included a freedom of choice. The recent Supreme Court ruling eliminates even freedom of choice, abolishes the neighborhood school concept and places more federal control over children. Only Congress can correct this unconstitutional decision. This should be remembered as chaos develops in our schools as it surely will.

IS IT A LOST CAUSE?

HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, the new book "U.S.A. and the Soviet Myth"—Devin-Adair, New York—is must reading for every thinking American if he is to understand the Soviet Union and its imperial Russian base.

Authored by Dr. Lev E. Dobriansky, professor at Georgetown University, the work provides both perspectives and insights which are truly different and new to most Americans.

Some pertinent excerpts from Chapter 1, "Is It a Lost Cause?" follow:

CHAPTER 1.—IS IT A LOST CAUSE?

To most Americans the cause for a free and independent Ukraine is as remote and unknown today as was the cause for a free and independent South Vietnam back in 1960. As in the latter case, far too many would be hard pressed to even locate the area geographically, let alone discuss it historically or in any other way . . .

Several lessons of Vietnam and certain broad perspectives provide the answers to this insular question. First, if Vietnam has taught us anything, it is the fundamental interrelationship and impingement of forces underlying the chief conflict in the world at large. Plainly, the independence of South Vietnam assumed tremendous importance because of the objectives of both Sino and Soviet Russian imperio-colonialism. Without the aid given by the United States—the most powerful nation in the Free World and, therefore, morally and politically committed to prevent the further expansion of the Red Empire—all of Asia would certainly be today under the shadow of Red domination. . . .

In fact, our present course of confetti diplomacy, growing acquiescence to Moscow's empire, and aimless rantings about "American militarism," "the American policeman of the world" and other publicity-studded phantasms will lead to an inevitable clash with Moscow's intrinsic expansionism and thus, unless we choose to be Red than American, to a nuclear conflagration. Drivel such as "America has become a militaristic and aggressive nation" circulates in some quarters without critical rejection. . . .

Regrettably, this and other insights have escaped our leadership because of the protracted prevalence of myths and misconceptions concerning the USSR and its relations with the U.S. We'll consider later a few essential illusions that continue to grip our leaders and literati, but these are sufficient to demonstrate the weak, underlying bases of our foreign policy formulations. . . .

Both to successfully combat Soviet Russian imperio-colonialism and to lay the foundations for a long, global peace, it is imperative that the U.S. abet and harness the force of nationalism throughout the Red Empire, and in the USSR in particular. As stated earlier, due to a tragic convergence of circumstances, the Russian Empire escaped the fate of other continental empires in the period of World War I and after; it was revived in the form of the USSR. . . .

From the American viewpoint, there is nothing sacred about the Soviet Union. An empire, Soviet Russian imperio-colonialism, totalitarian rule, and a frightful negation of freedoms, both national and individual, are the very opposite of the values and achievements of the never-ending American Revolution. The values and aspirations of Ukrainian nationalism, as well as that of every other captive non-Russian nation in the USSR, are fully in accord with our principles and philosophy of national existence. . . .

CHINA'S U.N. ADMISSION OPPOSED

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, while it appears that our own policy with regard to Communist China is undergoing a reassessment, it seems that the change is only on our side.

In October 1967, Mao Tse-tung loudly declared in his "Great Strategic Deployment" that the mainland of China would remain as an arsenal as well as a political-military and technological center of the "world revolution," that his regime would continue openly to supply the various countries of the world with weapons marked "made in China," thereby making it possible for the people to carry on their armed struggle.

Again, in April 1969, Lin Piao made it amply clear in his political report to the Ninth National Congress of the CCP that the Maoist regime would continue to commit itself fully to a foreign policy of "three antis"—"against the U.S. imperialism," "against the Soviet revisionism," "against the reactionaries of all countries." Stated specifically was their support for the Vietnamese people in carrying on their war of resistance against U.S. aggression and for national salvation to the end.

More recently, on May 20, 1970, Mao made a statement calling on people of the world to rise and fight for the overthrow of the United States. This was followed immediately by the launching in all mainland provinces of an uninterrupted series of anti-United States mass movement and demonstrations. Mao declared his desire to "bury U.S. imperialism and capitalism."

Despite the unchanging nature of Chinese communism, somehow our own leaders are considering a change in our policy against the admission of Communist China to the United Nations and against its recognition.

Fortunately, many citizens and organizations are speaking out vocally against such a change in our policy.

Recently, the national board of directors of Young Americans for Freedom, representing more than 50,000 college students and other young Americans, adopted a resolution setting forth its policy on this subject.

YAF Chairman Ronald Docksai, a New York University graduate political science student, declared that—

The Nixon Administration must not give respectability to the totalitarian clique of Red China. American policy must continue its support of the rightful government of China, the Republic of China.

I wish to share this resolution with my colleagues, and insert it into the RECORD at this point:

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF YOUNG AMERICANS FOR FREEDOM—RE: RED CHINA

1. Whereas the foreign aggressive policies of Communist China as well as its totalitarian domestic policies remain unchanged;

2. Whereas Communist China is the single greatest threat to freedom and peace in Asia, and the Pacific; and

3. Whereas the admission of Communist China and/or its recognition as a legitimate, sovereign government will only strengthen that government and allow it to continue to be that threat; and

4. Whereas a strong and determined opposition by the United States against the admission of Communist China to the United Nations is the greatest bulwark against that outlaw nation being admitted.

Therefore be it resolved, that Young Americans for Freedom is opposed to admission of Communist China to the United Nations and opposed to any American movement toward recognition of Communist China.

Be it further resolved, that YAF realizes that in the interests of freedom, peace and stability the United States government must continue its traditional policy toward Communist China and that the Nixon Administration must not be deceived by the "illusions" of a "ping-pong" diplomacy which does not take into account the realities of Communist Chinese aggressive designs.

And be it further resolved, YAF urges continuing support and recognition of the Republic of China as the single legitimate government and the rightful sovereign of the Chinese people.

VIETNAM WITHDRAWAL

HON. PAUL FINDLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, the United States has irrevocably embarked upon a course of withdrawal from South Vietnam. The question before us now is only how fast that withdrawal will take place.

We are all united in our desire for peace in that troubled part of the world. We differ merely upon the means with which that peace should be attained.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend our distinguished colleague, ROBERT MCCLORY, who has sponsored an imaginative new approach to extricate the United States from Vietnam and bring about peace. Mr. MCCLORY testified before the Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and his thoughtful statement follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MCCLORY BEFORE THE ASIAN AND PACIFIC AFFAIRS SUBCOMMITTEE, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS, JUNE 22, 1971

Mr. Chairman and fellow colleagues, I greatly appreciate this opportunity to appear before you to testify on behalf of H. Con. Res. 334 on which 20 of our colleagues have joined with the hope of providing some impetus for our President and negotiators in Paris to bring an early and complete termination of our military involvement in South Vietnam.

These hearings are very timely, Mr. Chairman. We have just concluded debate on several attempts to cut off funds for American troops in Indo-China after the end of this calendar year. In discussing the Nedzi-Whalen and other such amendments. I stated my opinion that while Congress shares responsibility for finding ways to end this tragic war, it is preferable at this time to meet the problem directly and deliberately.

Mr. Chairman, H. Con. Res. 334 provides for withdrawal of American forces from South Vietnam by November 30, 1971. It expresses our opinion that American involvement in Vietnam can indeed be ended before Christmas of this year, and that in order to bring this about, three preconditions must be met.

First, it goes without saying that a cease-fire is a sine qua non to the ending of any form of hostilities. Secondly, by agreeing to withdraw all U.S. forces by November, we might hope to convince the government of North Vietnam to release all American prisoners by September 1. I am not persuaded that precedent is on the side of those who insist that all military involvement must cease before prisoners of war can be returned. Furthermore, what better way for North Vietnam to insure that all American forces depart on schedule than by returning those prisoners we are morally obligated to redeem. Third, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that many people throughout the world would have the President of the United States name the date by which all American forces will be withdrawn, it seemed reasonable to me to suggest that all other belligerents—North Vietnam included—likewise agree to withdraw their troops by the same date. It goes without saying that the greatest burden would be on the United States from the sheer force of logistics.

Section 2 of H. Con. Res. 334 expresses the sense of Congress that once all prisoners have been returned all U.S. forces are to withdraw to the perimeters of those cities and military installations to be designated by the President. The purpose of this proviso is to establish a withdrawal cease-fire (in contrast to an in-place cease-fire). Also, it is intended to avoid cease-fire violations. This confinement to certain specified enclaves would also demonstrate our good faith and our sincere intention to remove American forces from combat in South Vietnam.

In Section 3, my cosponsors and I are suggesting that many of the substantive questions which are an inevitable outgrowth of this war should be referred to the United Nations. I would emphasize, however, that by passing this Resolution Congress would only be expressing its corporate opinion that such a disposition of responsibility would be desirable. Also, Mr. Chairman, it is important to note that Section 4 of H. Con. Res. 334 is merely a restatement of a Constitutional truth that the President's duties as Commander-in-Chief and his power to make treaties with the advice and consent of the Senate cannot be abridged.

Mr. Chairman, to be totally withdrawn from South Vietnam by the end of November would certainly be a monumental task, but I am convinced that such speedy withdrawal from that bloody conflict is within the realm of possibility.

Mr. Chairman, one of the revealing disclosures to come out of the recent printing of classified documents relating to the war in Southeast Asia was the ranking of American objectives in that part of the world. First, on the list was the assertion by an Assistant Secretary of Defense that our goal was "70 percent—to avoid a humiliating U.S. defeat." Mr. Chairman, I was not aware that this was so, but now that it has been made public I am powerfully convinced that we have more than fulfilled our obligation. Mr. Chairman and fellow colleagues, it is my opinion that a nation as great as America might better survive a humiliating defeat than a shameful victory. But my cosponsors and I are not suggesting that we subject ourselves to a humiliating defeat. We are saying, though, that to continue this war with all the military might it would take to win it would lead to a shameful victory—and we cannot stand that.

In order for the people of South Vietnam to remain independent of the tyranny and inhumanity of a communist dictatorship, the people of South Vietnam—themselves—will have to win the victory. It is my hope and expectation that South Vietnam will, indeed, continue the struggle to remain free of those who would oppress and subjugate her.

Mr. Chairman, the American people are a peace-loving people, and they have become offended by this war which has cost so many human lives and shattered so many more. Therefore, I ask you to report favorably on H. Con. Res. 334, and thereby lend the authority of your voices to the proposition that this war has persisted long enough, and that the provisions of this measure offer a reasonable, honorable and possible method for effecting a final termination of United States military involvement in the Vietnam war.

THE CASE FOR CONTINUED FEDERAL SUPPORT OF HUMAN RESOURCE SERVICES AND SOCIAL WORK TRAINING

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, while the Congress continues its annual charade of approving systems of destruction and death, real problems affecting human beings get shortchanged. The scare-merchants never fail to find means of having their programs fully funded; crucial social problems are left to fester.

One such critical social issue is that of providing education for those persons who provide social services to our communities. The Nixon administration asks for a significant budget cut of some $19 million in student stipends and training grants currently funded by the Social and Rehabilitation Service of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

As a social worker myself, I know of the importance of these educational programs. All of us here have just concluded an exhausting debate on the levels and adequacy of welfare needs, and I think it is very evident that demands for trained social workers are increasing at a rapid pace.

I cannot understand the rationale behind the proposed cut in funds. The quality of any service depends upon the personnel who plan, administer, and provide it. These budget cuts will seriously affect the availability of competent social work personnel needed now and in the future.

If we are serious in our commitment to solving human problems in our society, then I can envision no value in the proposed budget reductions. Compared to the daily costs of death and destruction the United States wastes everyday in Southeast Asia, $19 million is a trifle. Compared to problems of young, aged, ill, unemployed, disabled, and mentally ill Americans, $19 million is huge.

Bluntly speaking, we cannot afford this sort of budget cut. I am shocked at the administration's cavalier attitude which considers reducing this important program at the same time it asks $260 million for Lockheed, windfall billions for other industrial giants, and for such questionable boondoggles as the SST, the ABM, and the myriad of nonfunctioning, nonsensical weapons systems.

Perhaps the issue here is best presented in the following study prepared by the Council on Social Work Education. It points out the disaster which would follow implementation of the administration's request. I now include the study in the RECORD at this point:

HUMAN RESOURCE SERVICES AND SOCIAL WORK TRAINING[1]: THE CASE FOR CONTINUED FEDERAL SUPPORT

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET PROPOSALS

For a number of years, the Federal government has recognized the need to provide a base of support for the training of social workers. This year, however, the President's budget proposes drastic reductions in this support. These cuts are both unexpected and abrupt and can only result in confusion and uncertainty among students and facility, and, in the long run, serious harm to people and the nation.

These cuts are described in the Appendix to the Budget, Fiscal Year 1972, in the section on the Social and Rehabilitation Service beginning on page 457. In this budget, a new consolidation of research and training items is described on pp. 466–67. This consolidated approach obscures the real magnitude of the cuts. A cut of $19,100,000 in the training grants of the Social and Rehabilitation Service of HEW is proposed: from $39,600,000 available in 1970–71 to $20,500,000 for 1971–72. The cuts affect the Rehabilitation Services Administration (teaching grants and student stipends provided under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act); the Community Services Administration (child welfare, student stipend and faculty grants under Section 426 of the Social Security Act, and graduate and undergraduate faculty and curriculum grants under Title VII, Section 707 of the Social Security Act); and the Administration on Aging (under Title V, Older Americans Act). While these proposed cuts of training grants for all fields in SRS average 48 percent, preliminary HEW plans for future support of social work education suggest an even greater reduction.

The cuts in the Rehabilitation Services Administration are scheduled to become effective July 1, 1971. This would provide very short notice to educational institutions which have already made commitments to faculty and to students who are in the middle of their education and had assumed that support for their second year of graduate study was assured. The cuts in training grants of the Community Services Administration and the Administration on Aging will not become effective until July 1, 1972, since funds in the 1970–71 budget are used to make grants in June 1971 for the new academic year beginning July 1, 1971.

II. THE IMPORTANCE OF SOCIAL WORK EDUCATION

Most people growing up, going to school, working, marrying, raising families and growing old—at some point in their lives—find they need some form of help. They become ill, encounter financial difficulties, or develop family or other personal problems. The need for medical, counseling rehabilitation and other services is not restricted to persons with little or low income.

But, programs need staff to plan, administer and provide services. And the people who do this need to be trained. Without enough trained people, neither existing social services nor future innovations and improvements can be effective or economic. Social work education is the basic source of those people.

Social work staff today require much knowledge and a great variety of skills to deal with many problems of increasing complexity. Graduate schools of social work and undergraduate programs in social welfare have demonstrated their capacity to adapt to the changing times. By providing training geared to today's problems, they are contributing, together with other professions, to the national objectives of reducing the economic and human costs of a host of social problems, such as drug abuse, alcoholism, discrimination, and poverty. More and more, social workers are integral parts of the professional teams which are attempting to deal with juvenile delinquency, crime, and rehabilitation. Social work is a key element in caring for the disabled, the young and the aged and in programs dealing with family breakdown. The increase in population, its urban concentration, the rise and intensification of social problems, all indicate the need for more people with even better training in the helping professions.

III. HUMAN NEEDS AND SOCIAL WORK MANPOWER

Social services are concerned with the entire spectrum of human needs as experienced both by individuals or families and by communities. Sometimes in collaboration with other professions, sometimes carrying primary responsibility, the social services are directed toward rehabilitation and care of vulnerable population groups, toward prevention or reduction of social problems and toward change and improvement in dysfunctional systems.

Social workers are involved both in the direct delivery of social services and in the planning, administration and coordination of these services. Programs in graduate schools of social work have sharply increased their emphasis upon preparation for administration, supervision, and other leadership roles. The level of education, however, does not necessarily determine the nature of a social worker's job assignment. Direct services can be provided by a technician without an academic degree or by a social worker with a baccalaureate or a master's degree. The latter is, of course, likely to be doing the diagnosing of the problems and providing highly specialized service in complex situations.

Social work education, on a'l levels, prepares practitioners who can function in a wide variety of settings. Though the examples cited refer to particular programs, social work training is geared to provide social workers with the basic skills necessary to provide the help needed.

Physical illness: social workers, working together with other health personnel participate in developing national and regional policies and programs for the physically ill; administer and plan programs designed to cope with the immediate and long-term problems of the physically ill; help the patient or his family make the kind of plans and obtain the necessary resources to manage while he is hospitalized; help with plans for discharge including specific arrangements for after-care or long-term living arrangements in sheltered settings; supervise direct service personnel in after-care institutions.

Children: social workers plan and administer institutional and community-based programs to cope with immediate and long-term needs of children; design and program a range of services to provide equalization opportunities for disadvantaged children, including pre-natal and post-natal services for their mothers; participate in the development of national and regional policies and programs for children; supervise caretakers in institutions for delinquent and neglected children; provide foster home placement and supervision service; undertake investigation of child abuse and recommendation to courts concerning removal of abused children; work for rehabilitation of families in order to protect children from serious and irreparable damage; supervise and train a variety of child care personnel.

Mental illness: in addition to the roles described above for the physically ill, social workers head, or serve as key staff, for, community mental health centers; carry responsibility for working with family members so that they may aid in, or at least not interfere with, treatment efforts; locate and supervise foster homes for patients who are able to live in the community; train and supervise caretaker personnel; develop alternate facilities for the long-term care of those not ready for independent life.

Aged: social workers participate in the development of national, regional and local policies and programs for the aged; assist the aged person or his relatives in defining the problem for which help is needed and in locating or developing suitable resources; recruit, train and supervise personnel to work with the aged, both in the community and in institutions; plan and administer a variety of different programs, both in the community and in institutions, to cope with the varied problems of older people who no longer are able to care for themselves.

While the specifics of what the social workers do in relation to any given population group may differ, their responsibilities and tasks follow, in general terms, the examples cited.

The majority of social workers with graduate education are employed in planning and policy development, administration and supervision, teaching and research. It has always been the typical employment found among master's degree holders within a period of three to five years after receiving the degree. Increasingly, however, students are entering such positions immediately upon receiving their master's degree.

Direct services are provided by social workers from all levels of educational preparation. Broadly speaking, their efforts may be classified along several dimensions. In terms of goal, social workers provide services which are designed (1) to effect a reasonably satisfactory adjustment of the person in the community, thus minimizing the cost and trauma of institutionalization, (2) to rehabilitate the person so that he can lead an independent and productive life, or (3) to provide long-term care in as humane and effective way as possible for those who cannot be expected to function on a more autonomous level. In terms of target the efforts of social workers are generally directed at the victim or clients, but frequently their work is primarily with others, such as, members of the family, employers or potential employers, school, police, etc.

Different kinds of preparation and education are needed for workers at different levels of work. For many of the problem areas in which social workers are active, a degree of expertise is needed that requires intensive study and the development of a high degree of skill. Though social workers with a minimum of education or with only agency training can successfully function at an appropriate level of service, all fields require some personnel with a high degree of expertise to plan and administer services. There is a particular and continuing need for social work personnel at the highest policy development level and at the middle management level.

IV. SOCIAL WORK AND PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

One of the most critical issues facing governments in 1971 is the ever growing welfare cost. Many people regard "welfare" or "relief rolls" as synonymous with social work. There is a distinction between provision of social services and provision of income maintenance. No amount of professional service—social work, medical, nursing, or education—can provide the dollars needed to pay rent or buy food or have prescriptions filled or buy the shoes needed for a child to go to school. The necessity of meeting basic economic needs must be distinguished from those needs that require additional care and service and use of a variety of resources to help people who can, to become self maintaining. It must also be recognized that many of the aged, some of the ill, and all of the children (until they grow to adulthood) on public assistance cannot become self-sufficient.

V. SOCIAL WORK EDUCATION PRODUCES NEEDED PERSONNEL

Qualified social work personnel required to plan, administer and provide social services are prepared through various educational programs. The social work education system in the U.S. consists of: 70 graduate schools of social work in major universities which grant 5,000 master's degrees and about 90 doctoral degrees each year; over 200 undergraduate baccalaureate programs in social welfare with over 7,000 graduates; close to 100 two-year community college programs offering associate degrees which prepare community and social service technicians; and hundreds of continuing education programs conducted by educational institutions and agencies which reach thousands of social workers each year.

There is general agreement in social work and in most other professions that there is need for training programs to prepare professional, paraprofessional and technical personnel. The challenge is to identify and distinguish tasks so that manpower with different levels of education will be effectively used. Social work education has played an active leadership role in this effort. In the past few years, social work education has developed new programs at the baccalaureate and associate degree levels in addition to existing master's and doctoral degree programs.

Innovative curriculum developed to deal with contemporary problems

During the past decade social work training has been making a major shift in the focus and content of its curriculum. Changes were made to respond to new and persistent problems, to the needs of specific population groups and to the shifts that were occurring or were being planned in the organization of services. Schools developed new courses related to certain population or problem groups, the aged, the mentally retarded, the juvenile and adult offender, the physically handicapped. Major changes in social work education also occurred with changes in the organization of services, e.g., the emphasis upon community mental health programs, service to residents in public housing projects, multi-service centers in local neighborhoods, and "grass-roots" community groups. These changes reflected a growing concern for inner city populations, the rural and urban poor, and the major ethnic minorities.

In the past few years there has been a major shift in social work education toward the preparation of generalists as well as planners and administrators. The generalist social worker is equipped to deal with a variety of tasks at the neighborhood and community level. The proportion of graduate students training for administrative and organizing tasks has also increased. Undergraduate programs have begun to prepare their graduates for beginning practice in a variety of settings instead of only serving as aides in specific fields. The preparation of technicians at the community college level is a recent development but already growing rapidly.

People trained in social work are employed by public and voluntary agencies to provide needed social services. About 90 percent of master's degree graduates enter full-time employment, the majority in public agencies and mostly in child welfare and mental health. About two-thirds of the baccalaureate degree social work graduates enter employment mostly in the public social services in their local area. Over 10 percent go on directly to graduate education. It is rare for social workers to leave human services. Women do leave employment for marriage and motherhood, but large numbers later return to full-time work.

Social work training offers special opportunities for minority groups

The proportion of minority groups is greater in graduate social work than in any other discipline or professional educational program. Social work education has been in the forefront of efforts to open opportunities for minority groups. In the 1970–71 academic year over 25 percent of master's degree students and 10 percent of doctoral students in graduate schools of social work were from the following five major minorities: American Indians, Asian Americans, Chicanos (Mexican Americans), Blacks and Puerto Rico. Also about 20 percent of all faculty in graduate schools of social work are non-white. The social work curriculum, at all levels, is being enriched to help all students to learn more about the life styles, strengths and problems of minority groups and to be able to work more effectively with them.

VI. THE COST OF REDUCING FEDERAL SUPPORT

Continued federal support for social work education is necessary:

The proposed cuts will cause serious and irretrievable damage. Many graduate schools and undergraduate programs will be forced to reduce radically or to discontinue their educational efforts.

During the past decade the capacity of the social work education system expanded rapidly and decisively at the request of the federal government to meet urgent human needs. Cutting support now will undermine our nation's capability to meet its social goals.

Currently, more than fifty percent of all graduate students in social work receive stipends funded directly or indirectly by the federal government; in awarding these stipends emphasis is given to students coming from low socio-economic, disadvantaged and minority groups. Cutting support now will hurt these groups especially since neither they nor universities they attend have access to alternate support sources.

It has taken the better part of a decade, with the help of federal funds, to build up the kind of quality faculties found in graduate and undergraduate social work programs today. Cutting support now will reduce the schools' ability to maintain quality education and develop innovative educational programs. The consequences will be felt in fewer students, less adequately prepared to face the tasks of the future.

Since the alternate support sources for social work education from local and state government and individual or corporate giving are not available, the consequences of reducing federal support will be disastrous. The cost incurred by providing fewer trained social workers will surely be far greater than any economies achieved through the proposed reductions:

Needs are met best and with least expense when they are identified early; unmet and unserved "little" problems soon develop into more expensive "big" problems. Trained social workers, educated at various levels, are needed to identify problems, develop strategies and deliver the intervention services necessary to counteract these problems or reduce their impact.

Unless those who man direct service positions receive training and on-going supervision, costly mistakes resulting in more expensive service will be made. A reduction in the number of social work students now, predictably will make available fewer, not more trainers and supervisors for the public service in the next decade.

The reduction of federal support for social work education will hinder, not help, the development of new and more effective social service delivery systems necessary to help children, adults, and families to become self-sufficient, healthy, and productive citizens.

HON. DOMINICK V. DANIELS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. DANIELS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced two bills which I believe will go far to alleviate the parking congestion that is currently strangling the Nation's cities and suburbs. H.R. 9360 and H.R. 9361 will correct an inequity in the law which has poured millions of automobiles into the cities without providing adequate places to put them when they get there.

This strangulation has resulted in lost time for businessmen as well as shoppers and tourists. Commercial enterprises are questioning whether to do business in what used to be vigorous and exciting shopping and theater districts. The reasons are obvious: Customers no longer want to engage in the duel by auto for limited parking facilities. Nor do they wish to risk parking fines for overparking or parking in illegal zones when they can find no other alternative.

If we are going to revitalize our cities, we must find a place for the automobile to which people have become accustomed to using and which in many instances is more legitimately convenient than other means of transportation.

Parking must be considered an essential ingredient in modern urban planning and in the design of an urban transportation system. A system of highways and mass transit facilities requires suitable parking. Indeed the transportation system of a city can be crippled by inadequate parking facilities as well as inadequate mass transit service.

Moreover, the very character of a city is affected by the kind of parking system which it offers and by its cost and convenience. For business areas to flourish, they must be accessible to people who travel by car. Traffic congestion exacerbated by inadequate parking contributes to the decline of business districts affecting both downtown as well as older suburban commercial districts.

Parking facilities are an integral part of the highway system. When we construct an Interstate System in our urban areas without providing for the storage of cars at the end of the highway, we are defeating one of the prime purposes of the highway system: to move people from one place to another for commerce and recreation. Overall transportation systems have been described as a triangle with three sides necessary to function; the sides are highways, mass transit and parking. Underdevelopment of either will cause a breakdown of the other two.

The Department of Transportation has reported that the number of registered passenger cars in 1970 rose to 89,309,101, an increase of 2.8 percent over 1969. As the population in the United States increases, the motor vehicle population will increase correspondingly. I am told that the average vehicle is actually moving only about 400 hours per year or about 5 percent of the time. We must, therefore, be concerned about the 95 percent of the time that these vehicles must be parked.

Local governments have provided almost three-quarters of a million off-street parking spaces for the motor vehicle. Yet the problem still grows. The opportunity for relief can be found through the legislation which I have introduced. When you consider that all of the funds in the highway trust fund are derived from the motor vehicle user in the form of use taxes, it is not inconsistent or unreasonable to return some of these funds to municipalities to be used for the most vexing of the motorist's problems at the end of his trip.

A bill to amend the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 to authorize grants and loans for parking projects and facilities

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (a) of section 3 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 (49 U.S.C. 1602) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this Act and on such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to make grants or loans (directly through the purchase of securities or equipment trust certificates, or otherwise) to assist States and local public bodies and agencies thereof, including authorities and public corporation, in financing the acquisition, construction, reconstruction, and improvement of facilities and equipment for use, by operation or lease or otherwise, in mass transportation service and parking projects and facilities in urban areas and in coordinating such services with highway and other transportation in such areas. Eligible facilities and equipment may include land (but not public highways), off-street and on-street parking projects and facilities, buses and other rolling stock, and other real and personal property needed for an efficient and coordinated mass transportation system. No grant or loan shall be provided under this section unless the Secretary determines that the applicant has or will have

"(1) the legal, financial, and technical capacity to carry out the proposed project; and

"(2) satisfactory continuing control, through operation or lease or otherwise, over the use of the facilities and equipment.

The secretary may make loans for real property acquisition pursuant to subsection (b) upon a determination, which shall be in lieu of the preceding determinations, that the real property is reasonably expected to be required in connection with a mass transportation system or parking projects or facilities and that it will be used for that purpose within a reasonable period. No grant or loan funds shall be used for payment of ordinary governmental or nonprofit operating expenses. An applicant for assistance under this section for a project located wholly or partly in a State in which there is statewide comprehensive transportation planning shall furnish a copy of its application to the Governor of each State affected concurrently with submission to the Secretary. If, within thirty days thereafter, the Governor submits comments to the Secretary, the Secretary must consider the comments before taking final action on the application."

A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to authorize parking projects by local authorities and agencies designed to ease traffic congestion and expedite traffic safety and flow

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Parking Facility Aid Act of 1971".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. The first paragraph of subsection (b) of section 101 of title 23, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"It is hereby declared to be in the national interest to accelerate the construction of the Federal-aid highway systems and parking projects and facilities in connection therewith or in connection with urban area traffic operations improvement programs as set forth in section 135 of this title, including but not limited to the National System of Interstate and Defense highways, since many of such highways, or portions thereof, and parking projects or facilities in connection therewith or with urban areas, are in fact inadequate to meet the needs of local and interstate commerce, for the national and civil defense.

"It is the finding of Congress that the lack of adequate off-street and on-street parking facilities has reached a crisis stage in urban areas that creates serious traffic congestion, impedes proper and safe flow of traffic in, through and from such areas and rapid and effective firefighting, disposition of police and security forces, utilization of existing and projected mass transit facilities and endangers public health, safety and welfare and the national and civil defense. It is therefore in the national interest to promote, foster, assist and aid in the development of urban area parking projects and facilities undertaken by local government authorities and agencies."

REVISION OF DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 101 of title 23, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) The definition of the term "construction" is amended to read as follows:

(2) The definition of the term "county" is amended to read as follows:

"The term 'county' includes corresponding units of government or authorities established thereby under any other name in States which do not have county organizations and likewise in those States in which the county government does not have jurisdiction over highways or parking projects and facilities, it may be construed to mean any local government unit or authority vested with jurisdiction over local highways or parking projects and facilities.

(3) The definition of the term "highway" is amended to read as follows:

"The term 'highway' includes roads, streets, and parkways and off-street and on-street parking projects and facilities and also includes rights-of-way, bridges, railroad-highway crossings, tunnels, drainage structures, signs, guardrails and protective structures, in connection with highways and such projects and facilities. It further includes that portion of any interstate or international bridge or tunnel and the approaches thereto, the cost of which is assumed by a State highway department including such facilities as may be required by the United States Customs and Immigration Services in connection with the operation of an international bridge or tunnel."

The Secretary shall act upon programs submitted to him as soon as practicable after the same have been submitted. The Secretary may approve a program in whole or in part but he shall not approve any project in a proposed program which is not located upon an approved Federal-aid system or any parking project which is not reasonably related thereto or any extension thereof or to an urban area traffic operations improvement program."

If such project is located in an urban area of more than 50,000 population, such project shall be based on a continuing comprehensive transportation planning process carried on in accordance with section 134 of this title. The sums apportioned for such projects including the off-street and on-street parking projects and facilities shall not be limited by or combined with but shall be exclusive of any expenditures for demonstration fringe parking facilities outside a central business district as provided by section 11 of the Federal-aid Highway Act of 1968."

THE NORTHWEST ATLANTIC FISHERIES CRISIS

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I insert into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an excellent but terrifying paper published by the Director of the Division of Marine Fisheries, Department of Natural Resources of the State of Massachusetts.

This paper chronicles the most dangerous and irresponsible fisheries action of the Soviet Union in overfishing the fisheries resources of the American Continental Shelf off New England. The so-called pulse fishing technique documented deals with taking a fish resource down to the point of near extinction and then moving on to the next most available and numerous species in that area or elsewhere.

The future of our traditional fisheries in the banks off New England is in severe jeopardy from this kind of action and it appears that present international devices are grossly inadequate to halt this kind of irresponsibility or to protect the interests of America, America's fishermen, or indeed the world, in this priceless biological resource of the high seas.

The article follows:

THE NORTHWEST ATLANTIC FISHERIES CRISIS

For several years now, those concerned with the extensive fishery resources of the Northwest Atlantic, and especially those of the Georges Banks area off Massachusetts, have looked with growing alarm at the ever increasing exploitation of these prolific grounds. Traditionally, these areas have supported the bulk of landings of groundfish such as haddock and cod, which contributed substantially to New England's economy and development. In addition to the harvest of these groundfish species, other species such as mackerel, flounder, redfish and herring abounded and were utilized to varying degrees by United States and Canadian fishermen. Besides their value as commercial species, some of these fishes are also important to the food supply of sport fish sought by the millions of Atlantic Coast anglers. Although landings of these several species varied over the years and fluctuations in abundance undoubtedly occurred, there was little indication of over-fishing and many experts felt that the supply was inexhaustible.

In less than 10 years the situation has changed completely. Early in the 1960's the Soviets moved into these waters in large numbers and were followed by other Communist bloc and free nations from Europe. These government-subsidized fleets consisted of everything from small, obsolete side trawlers to huge support ships capable of complete servicing of the catching vessels. By 1970 it was estimated that the foreign fleet consisted of over 1,000 vessels which spent at least part of the year in the Georges Banks area.

The consequences of this fantastic increase in fishing effort are now becoming clear. One by one the most abundant and economically important species of fish have been systematically exploited by "pulse" fishing. "Pulse" fishing consists of directing intense effort to a particular fishery until it is no longer economically feasible to continue. When that point is reached the fleet switches to another fisheries or species and the exploitation proceeds again.

Unfortunately, with the present state of knowledge, biologists cannot predict whether various species, after being subjected to such intense exploitation, can adequately reproduce and thus replenish their diminished population numbers. There is the certain knowledge that terrestrial or aerial species such as the American bison, the passenger pigeon and the whooping crane have never regained their population size after similar over-exploitation.

Although it may seem inconceivable, the most seriously threatened fishery resources are those which have been the most prolific. Only those species whose sheer numbers provide a huge source of available protein are sought by these mobile harvesters. Through fleet communications the catching vessels are homed in on fish concentrations after special scout vessels have systematically plotted their abundance. In this manner, constant pressure is applied to the schools of fish as they go through their normal seasonal movements or migrations. No longer are the fish safe from capture if they follow their food supply up off the bottom into the mid-depths or surface waters. These fleets have effectively developed the mid-water trawl which can be used at whatever depth the fish are present. When coupled with electronic gear which can pinpoint fish concentrations, the capability for almost complete annihilation of each school is realized.

In the spring of 1971 biologists from the National Marine Fisheries Service estimated that the formerly enormous stocks of sea herring off our Atlantic Coast had been reduced by 95 percent of their abundance in just a few years of intense fishing. This exploitation has occurred so rapidly that no management controls have been implemented by the only commission charged with resource responsibilities in these international waters. Thus it is apparent that "pulse" fishing is capable of and has in fact drastically over-exploited fish populations before the existing control mechanisms can be applied.

The International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries (ICNAF) was set up in 1949. This Commission now consists of 15 member nations who have a direct interest in the fisheries of this area. The Commission is charged with the responsibility of ". . . Investigating, protecting and conserving the fisheries of the Northwest Atlantic Ocean in order to make possible the maintenance of a maximum sustained catch from these fisheries. . . ."

Within the convention area no other jurisdiction with regard to fisheries exists. The United States claims a territorial sea of three miles with an additional nine mile contiguous zone in which foreign fishing is controlled. Canada has recently moved unilaterally to control fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy but apparently will abide by ICNAF regulations in these former international waters.

When ICNAF was originally chartered, "pulse" fishing was unknown in the Northwest Atlantic and no one perceived the vast buildup of foreign fleets which subsequently occurred. Since ratification by the member nations, an adequate system of fishing controls has been extremely difficult to develop. Initially, minimum net mesh sizes to control the harvesting of undersized haddock were imposed in 1952. Thus this species was the principal recipient of management measures in the convention area. It has continued to receive the most attention and a variety of conservation measures for haddock have been adopted in recent years. It is not unreasonable then to review the present status of this most managed species.

In the spring of 1971 United States biologists recommended that no haddock be taken in the ICNAF area in order to preserve the dwindling remnants of this fishery which had produced 547 million pounds in 1965. So reduced are the numbers of haddock now that there is a strong possibility that this species will disappear from these waters in the next few years.

The cause for this ecological disaster has been clearly documented. In 1965 the Soviet fleet reported landings of 283 million pounds of haddock. This corresponded to average annual landings by United States fishermen of 113 million pounds. Most of the haddock taken by the Soviets were young fish from an unusually abundant year class which was spawned in 1963. This huge year class would have sustained the normal US fishery into the 1970's and at the same time provided ample breeding stock for future generations of haddock. Compounding this tragedy is the fact that the immature haddock taken by the Soviets in 1965 and 1966 were too small to be of high market value.

Thus a review of the most studied, most managed and most valued species in the ICNAF area clearly shows that the existing international controls were not adequate to preserve it for the future. Unfortunately, there is no indication that what has happened to the haddock is an isolated situation.

On the contrary, we can fully expect it to happen with herring, yellowtail flounder cod, mackerel, sea scallops, lobsters and other species of sufficient abundance to make them economically important. It will happen because ICNAF is not capable of acting in time to prevent it, and, in fact, only reacts after the tragedy has occurred. The international machinery involved is so time-consuming that it cannot hope to keep pace with the technological capabilities of the fishing nations involved. In addition, the Commission has not even addressed the real issue, which is total fishing pressure.

Through its species management approach ICNAF is forced into imposing regulations for a particular species after it has been documented that that species has been overfished. In actuality, those regulations have come about after the "pulse" fishing has already transferred to another victim. Until some control can be exerted on the total harvest capability of the nations involved, no effective management will exist. Supporters of ICNAF will point out that the international procedures are being changed and improved and that eventually controls will be adequate for effective management; however, even the most optimistic supporters of ICNAF will admit that truly effective management is at least several years off.

It is ecologically irresponsible to know that these valuable protein resources are being over-exploited without sounding an alarm. No one knows what the ultimate result of extinction of these species would be on the total marine ecosystem. One distinct possibility could be the replacement of these valuable fish with species of much less value to man. The consequence of man's activities on the land are painfully apparent almost everywhere now. Must we also rape the resources of the ocean to satisfy short-sighted economic gains?

Possibly there is still time if the public, through its federal agencies, shows its immediate concern by instituting emergency controls on the total fishing effort in these waters. Realistically, this could best be accomplished by unilateral or bilateral action by the nations most traditionally involved, the United States and Canada. The argument that such action would run counter to international law can best be answered by the fact that a lack of appropriate action disregards an even more fundamental law—that of conservation of living resources.

We therefore call upon the Governor and the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to request the President and the Congress of the United States to appoint immediately a spècial panel of fishery resource experts who will report their findings together with recommendations for appropriate action to the Congress of the United States within six months. We owe at least this much to these living resources which have sustained us so ably in the past.

HON. BENJAMIN S. ROSENTHAL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. ROSENTHAL. Mr. Speaker, I introduced yesterday H.R. 9350, to provide for a study mission to the Vietnam elections, and for other purposes. This bill embodies the Mansfield amendment as passed earlier this week by the Senate as part of the extension of selective service legislation.

I hope that this bill will be considered by the House Foreign Affairs Committee which is now holding hearings on similar legislation—without the Mansfield amendment—to provide for a study mission to the October elections in South Vietnam.

It is important that the House of Representatives also have an opportunity to vote on this amendment which passed the Senate by a strong majority of 57 to 42. It is also important that the House consider this disengagement proposal as a matter of foreign affairs policy, with careful and thorough deliberation, and not only in the context of a House-Senate conference on extending the draft law.

The Washington Post and the New York Times both commented this morning on the importance of this amendment. I include these editorials below, together with the text of the amendment:

THE MANSFIELD AMENDMENT

In the Mansfield amendment, the Senate has finally found an appropriate form in which to express its attitude toward the war. Unlike earlier war-policy amendments of the McGovern-Hatfield sort, this one does not promise a result—ending the war—which is beyond the power of Congress to deliver, given the real powers of the Presidency. Nor does the Mansfield amendment force upon reluctant legislators the embarrassment of a direct confrontation, during hostilities, with the Commander in Chief. It was these bows to substantive and political reality, we surmise, which helped the Mansfield amendment to sail through the Senate by a broad 57–42 margin. The impact of the Pentagon papers, disclosing how politically and morally questionable was the process of our involvement in Vietnam, may also have played a role.

The significance of the vote is that for the first time a majority of the Senate is on record with an expression of views which reflects the prevailing public judgment on the war, as the polls have made that judgment plain for some time. Never before have the two been in phase. Their common ground is that the single reason for the United States to keep military forces longer in Indochina is to secure lease of American prisoners of war. Under the Mansfield amendment, the President would be directed to (1) establish a withdrawal date within nine months, contingent upon release of POWs, (2) negotiate an immediate ceasefire, and (3) negotiate parallel troop withdrawal and prisoner release.

Doubtless the presidential press secretary's comment on the vote—"it states what 57 senators think our policy should be"—accurately reflects his understanding of—and his respect for—the Senate. It is stunning, nonetheless, to find the White House dismissing the considered decision of a majority—a majority created by the vote of 12 Republicans—as a straw poll of no particular consequence. Aside from the political inadvisability of such a dismissal, it ignores the central fact that most senators—like most citizens—reject the President's view that the United States must fight on in order to improve prospects for the Saigon regime. The White House may be right in expecting the Mansfield amendment to receive rougher handling in the House, though for ourselves we are not so certain of that. But surely the White House is wrong in portraying the amendment as a nuisance it can safely ignore.

Instead of reacting with kneejerk combativeness to the Senate's war-policy statement, Mr. Nixon ought, we believe, to welcome it. The Senate's heavy vote should ease his fears that a "nightmare of recrimination" would result from a quicker and more complete withdrawal than the one he has so far planned. The nine-month withdrawal period anticipated by the Mansfield amendment would take the Nixon administration well beyond the October elections in Saigon, so that Mr. Nixon would not have to abandon his effort to launch President Thieu on a second term.

What Senator Mansfield and 56 colleagues have done is to construct for Mr. Nixon a careful and responsible argument for winding up American participation in the war under circumstances that will enable him to share with Congress and the Democrats the risks inherent in our disengagement from the fighting. This is a boon of the first order if only Mr. Nixon will accept it as such.

SENATOR MANSFIELD'S COMPROMISE

The Administration narrowly escaped a direct constitutional confrontation with Congress Tuesday when the Senate defeated by only one vote an amendment to the Selective Service Act aimed at cutting off funds for United States military operations in Indochina in nine months if North Vietnam agreed to free American prisoners of war.

But Congress may yet feel obliged to order some such drastic measure as a means of reaffirming its constitutional role in the war-making process if the White House persists in its initial negative response to a milder, compromise proposal introduced by Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield and adopted by a vote of 57 to 42.

The Mansfield amendment, though it has the same goal as the defeated proposal, refrains from invoking the ultimate Congressional power—the power of the purse—to impose a withdrawal schedule on the President. Rather, it "urges and requests" President Nixon to establish a final date for withdrawal, not later than nine months from the date of enactment. It also calls on him to negotiate an immediate cease-fire and to negotiate with Hanoi for "a series of phased and rapid withdrawals of United States military forces from Indochina in exchange for a corresponding series of phased releases of American prisoners of war. . . ."

The immediate White House reaction to this constructive proposal from a majority of Seantors was to brush it aside as "not binding" and not representative of the views of Congress as a whole. A White House spokesman said the President would cling to his present policy of Vietnamization, adding that establishment of a withdrawal deadline would "inhibit negotiations" in Paris.

What negotiations? As Tuesday's Senate vote clearly testifies, more and more legislators are persuaded that the President's policies will not lead to an end of the American involvement in Indochina. There is a growing conviction that a new policy, based on a fixed withdrawal date of the kind advocated by Senator Mansfield and other members of both parties in both houses, is needed to break the long deadlock at Paris and to assure the safe and orderly withdrawal of American troops and prisoners.

By continuing to ignore this rising public and Congressional sentiment while advancing no new peace initiatives in Paris, the President invites increasingly restrictive legislative action and further bitter division within Government and nation. The wiser course would be active Administration moves along the lines indicated by the Senate, thus enlisting the Congress in a bipartisan partnership for peace.

TITLE V—TERMINATION OF HOSTILITIES IN INDOCHINA

SEC. 302. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to terminate at the earliest practicable date all military operations of the United States in Indochina, and to provide for the prompt and orderly withdrawal of all United States military forces not later than nine months after the date of enactment of this section subject to the release of all American prisoners of war held by the Government of North Vietnam and forces allied with such Government. The Congress hereby urges and requests the President to implement the above expressed policy by initiating immediately the following actions:

(1) Establishing a final date for the withdrawal from Indochina of all military forces of the United States contingent upon the release of all American prisoners of war held by the Government of North Vietnam and forces allied with such Government, such date to be not later than nine months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) Negotiate with the Government of North Vietnam for an immediate cease-fire by all parties to the hostilities in Indochina.

(6) Negotiate with the Government of North Vietnam for an agreement which would provide for a series of phased and rapid withdrawals of United States military forces from Indochina in exchange for a corresponding series of phased releases of American prisoners of war, and for the release of any remaining American prisoners of war concurrently with the withdrawal of all remaining military forces of the United States by not later than the date established by the President pursuant to paragraph (1) hereof or by such earlier date as many be agreed upon by the negotiating parties.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY WOMEN'S DIVISION OF THE NEW YORK DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE

HON. EMANUEL CELLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, in order that members of the Democratic delegation may be informed of the action taken by the conferees of the 20th annual Political Conference of the Women's Division of the New York Democratic State Committee, held in Albany, April 25 and 26, 1971, I include the resolutions adopted by the conference. The resolutions follow:

I. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that as Democratic women most concerned with the lives and well-being of our children and the children of our fellow citizens, we urge the Congressional delegation from New York to vote to withdraw all American troops from Indochina immediately and, in no event, no later than December, 1971.

II. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that we strongly endorse the programs of the Democratic legislators to restore budget cuts in the New York State budget, and to review administrative priorities in order to fulfill the desperate social needs of the citizens of New York State.

III. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that we call upon the New York State Legislature to ratify the proposed twenty-sixth amendment to the Constitution which will enable 18-year-olds to vote in all elections. We also urge the approval of the New York State proposed amendment to give the 18-year-olds the right to vote in all elections.

IV. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that all members of the New York State Congressional delegation are urged to use their utmost efforts to secure passage of legislation which would prohibit discrimination in the employment and pay of women.

V. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that because of the vast amount of talent among women in the Democratic Party in the State of New York, and because such talent has not been utilized, and women have been discriminated against in the selection and nomination of candidates for party, public and judicial office, the State Chairman and the Vice-Chairmen should require that all such elections and nominations be equally divided among all men and women within the Democratic Party in the State of New York.

VI. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that we urge that the Democratic National Committee reconsider the formula for delegate strength at the 1972 National Convention, which it adopted in February, 1971, so that the State of New York will not suffer from such a discriminatory rule reducing our delegate strength.

VII. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that we urge the Democratic National Committee to reconsider its action taken in February, 1971, appointing its members as ex-officio delegates to the 1972 National Convention, thereby violating two key guidelines of the McGovern Commission, which were, respectively, (1) a requirement for timely selection of delegates; and (2) prohibition of ex-officio delegates.

VIII. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that because officers of the Democratic Party in New York are spokesmen and representatives of the entire party rather than private individuals, no officer of the State Committee, nor National Committee members representing New York State, should be permitted to take an open or official position on a candidate for public office until the party has made its nomination. Should a party officer desire to endorse or support a candidate prior to the nomination, his or her resignation from the party office should be automatic.

(It was not intended that this resolution preclude officers of the State Committee or National Committee members from running for the position of delegate to the National Convention, and at that time taking a position on an individual candidate).

IX. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that because of the plight of our cities and the desperate social needs which face the citizens of our State and Country, and because one of the major financial burdens is the overwhelming cost of welfare in the United States, the Democratic Party of the State of New York strongly endorse and work for the Federal assumption of welfare costs.

X. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that because of the desperate condition of a large part of our existing housing stock, and the absence of decent, reasonable and habitable housing in many of our urban areas, all members of the New York Congressional delegation and the Democratic Party in the State of New York use their utmost efforts to secure the declaration of a housing emergency in the State of New York, the freeing of Federal funds to our cities now specifically earmarked for housing which are being withheld by the President, and the release of $800,000,000 to the cities, now available but which are being withheld by the State of New York.

XI. On motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was resolved that the Federal government guarantee every American family a guaranteed annual income sufficient to meet human needs.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, medical care in this city—the Nation's Capital—is inadequate, whether one is rich or poor, white or nonwhite, educated or illiterate. The Washington Post today, tells us what we have long known. The number of doctors with private practices in this city is decreasing causing a lowering in the quality of medical care as illustrated by the fact that the District had in 1970 the highest infant mortality rate of any major U.S. city and one of the higher mortality rates for tuberculosis, pneumonia, and cirrhosis.

We are told that the physicians are leaving the city for a number of reasons—crime, rents, tax breaks, clientele, and sometimes because of the difficulty in securing hospital privileges.

Part of the answer lies in the need for an uncategorical commitment by the Federal Government to provide excellence in health care in this city and this Nation. There is no reason that Washington, D.C., ought not be a model for health care. Surely we can devise incentives to entice physicians to remain in this city and serve not only the rich, but everyone in every section and every community. It is patently ridiculous and a national scandal that in this city, the capital of the greatest nation in the world, we can have a neighborhood with one doctor per 1,000 persons as is indicated in the Post article.

I think that this article is clear and thorough and sets out many of the reasons that doctors leave:

DISTRICT IS LOSING DOCTORS TO SUBURBS: EXODUS HASTENED BY CRIME, LURE OF MORE MONEY

(By Henry Aubin)

The city of Washington, with one of the poorest health records in the country, has the lowest proportion of doctors for patients of any city of comparable size in the East, an analysis of American Medical Association data shows.

Doctors often cite crime and urban problems as reasons for not practicing in the city, while the suburbs offer them such inducements as cheap rents, tax breaks and a clientele that can better afford to pay.

The shortage of physicians is dramatically apparent in such black, low-income sections of Washington as the area east of the Anacostia River, where there were 67 doctors' offices in 1969 for a population of 217,000, according to the most recent city records. By comparison, the white, prosperous area west of Rock Creek had 347 doctors' offices for a population of 86,000.

The doctor shortage and poor environmental and social conditions in low-income neighborhoods contribute to this grim health situation: Washington's infant mortality rate was the highest of any major U.S. city in 1970, and its mortality rates for tuberculosis, pneumonia and cirrhosis were among the highest. Mortality rates are highest in neighborhoods where doctors are the fewest.

The three-year-old Medicaid program, which reimburses doctors for treating the poor, has encouraged a few doctors to settle in disadvantaged areas.

But Medicaid payments are low, the disadvantages of these areas are many, and not enough doctors have come into these areas to compensate for the greater number who have left or are leaving.

The shortage of doctors is most dramatic among general practitioners—the traditional family doctors and first line of defense for health.

The city has fewer of these doctors than any other city in the 400,000 to 1 million population range in the country.

"General practitioners and some other kinds of physicians, with the notable exception of super-specialists, can count on getting more affluent faster outside the city than in it," says one local authority on medical finances, John C. Post, head of Professional Business Management, Inc., a consulting firm for doctors.

In 1963, AMA records show, there were 335 general practitioners with offices in Washington. By the end of 1969, only 185 were left, a decrease caused by death and retirement as well as the lure of the suburbs.

Dividing that total into the 1970 census figure for the city, that means there was only one GP for every 4,130 Washington residents.

In Cleveland, by contrast, there was one family doctor for every 2,300 residents; in San Francisco, one for every 2,900; in Boston, one for every 3,100; in Baltimore, one for every 3,500, and in St. Louis one for every 3,900.

Washington has been losing its GPs at a rate of 25 a year, and not just for economic reasons.

Dr. Richard E. Cook, a 43-year old GP, used to have a family practice at Maryland Avenue and 8th Street NE, not far from where he used to shine shoes as a boy.

He wanted to work in his native city, but in 1967 he left, discouraged.

Because of their relative affluence and their handling of narcotics for medical reasons, doctors in the inner city were falling prey to burglars and muggers. One colleague, he recalls, even was beaten and robbed when he made a house call; his head injuries required 19 stitches.

"I was never robbed, but there was always that fear in the back of my mind. I was always agitated and anxious about it," says Dr. Cook.

"That was my main reason for leaving," he says, "but there were other things too."

One of them was his failure to get hospital privileges—that is, permission to put his patients in the hopsital personally and to care for them there.

Indeed, notes the president of the D.C. Medical Society, Dr. Marvin C. Korengold, it's generally tougher for physicians to obtain privileges in Washington hospitals than in suburban ones. The main reason, he says is that there are more new or expanding hospitals in the suburbs than in the city. Thus suburbs have vacancies for doctors while the city has waiting lists.

Cook is still bitter about not being given privileges. "Most city hospitals think a general practitioner is an idiot. The medical community screams about not having enough GPs, but at the same time it doesn't give them the kind of status they deserve.

And it's doubly difficult for a Negro practitioner to get hospital privileges," adds Cook, who is black.

Another reason for "up and leaving," he says, was the long hours and heavy patient load. He estimates he saw 60 to 70 patients a day, "a horrible load for any GP."

From that, he had a net income of only about $15,000 a year.

Today Dr. Cook has a practice among the poor in Annapolis.

"It's a quiet little town. In Washington the atmosphere is hurried, and I've enjoyed medicine here (in Annapolis) much more," he says.

"It's more lucrative," he pointed out. Now, he sees only about 30 patients a day, half his load in Washington, and he's making more than twice as much money. "My net income is about $35,000."

Also he's had no trouble getting hospital privileges.

Professional respect and income, he says, are a lot easier to acquire outside the Washington ghetto.

In interviews with doctors who still remain in low-income areas of Washington, crime was frequently mentioned as their prime concern. The depth of that concern was often evidenced by their insistence that they not be identified.

A Southeast Washington physician said he had been shot at after he resisted a mugger several weeks ago. "Already I've abandoned evening office hours," he says, "and right now I'm considering changing locations."

"If I get held up just once, that's it, I'm leaving," says another physician who asked to be identified only as having a practice in a part of the Shaw neighborhood in the model cities area.

That blighted area could ill afford to lose him. D.C. department of human resources records for 1969 show that the model cities area had 81 physicians' offices and a population of 80,000, one-fourth as many doctors as west of Rock Creek on a per capita basis. It also had eight times as many deaths from tuberculosis and twice the infant mortality rate.

The internist has, to a degree, been replacing the vanishing GP.

Some physicians, like internist Dr. Stanley Talpers of downtown Washington, argue that this improves the quality of medical care. Talpers points out internists can treat ailments that fall within their specialty better than generalists can.

But others, like Dr. Korengold of the medical society, disagree, saying that the problem remains of matching the right ailment with the right specialist.

"Internists haven't adequately replaced the GP," says Korengold, "because internists are only specialists of the internal organs of the body; the GP, on the other hand, can still stitch up lacerations, deliver babies, set broken legs, treat heart failures. There's a very definite need for the GP in Washington."

One reason it's always tough to find different kinds of doctors is that Washington has only one doctor of any kind seeing patients—surgeons, internists, other specialists and GPs—for every 330 people. No other city east of the Mississippi of comparable size has fewer doctors per capita.

Pittsburgh, for example, has one for every 210 people, Boston for ever 205, Cleveland for every 220 and Baltimore for every 300.

These figures are extrapolated from an AMA statistical category called "nonfederal patient-care doctors." Doctors engaged in administration, research or teaching are excluded.

(The federal government keeps no count of how many federal doctors involved in patient care are in this area, according to officials at the National Institutes of Health. But, say these officials, there are not enough of them involved in caring for patients "to make any appreciable difference" in the above comparisons on the availability of patient-care doctors among cities.)

While the shortage of doctors is most acute in low-income neighborhoods of the city, the Washington area as a whole has fewer patient-care doctors than most metropolitan areas.

Between 1962 and 1969 the number of patient-care doctors grew by 56 per cent in Washington's suburbs, from 1,388 to 2,171, an annual increase of about 130.

But because of the area's phenomenal population growth, there is still plenty of room for more, Korengold stresses. In the last decade, the number of people—and potential patients—soared by 37.8 per cent, the highest growth rate of any of the 12 U.S. metropolitan areas with populations greater than 2 million.

Washington's own population remained about static during the decade. So did its number of patient-care doctors. While the city lost about 30 doctors between 1963 and 1969, it gained about 30 hospital doctors.

Many of the doctors who left for the suburbs or who retired or died were replaced by foreign-trained physicians. Their quality, while often excellent, tends to vary widely.

"As a generalization," says Dr. Henry Ecker, local head of the American College of Physicians and chairman of the D.C. Medical Society's executive board, "the foreign-trained physician is not as well trained as the American physician."

Ralph Nader's study group on the quality of medical care reaches this conclusion: ". . . foreign physicians with lower qualifications and much less competence and ability are presently assuming a major portion of the responsibility for the care of patients in the U.S."

The proportion of foreign doctors in Washington is above the national average. One Washington doctor in seven was foreign-trained in 1964; one in five in 1967, and the trend continues.

Dr. Sidney Wolfe, a young Washington internist, has this rule of thumb to explain the exodus of doctors from the city's low-income areas: "As the socio-economic character of a neighborhood changes, the doctors leave."

As Korengold points out, some of the medical society's members had established medical practices in "changing" neighborhoods. They saw their clientele going to the suburbs and they followed, sometimes keeping many of their old patients.

Others, who remained in deteriorating neighborhoods, complained about the schools and about the gap in social and public services. So they, too, left, and the gap widened.

Also, says Korengold, most young doctors just out of training are now settling in the suburbs.

Many of these young doctors are anxious to help disadvantaged people in the city. But they are discouraged from practicing there, especially if they are white.

Dr. Frederick Washington, a young black physician who heads a public health clinic in Anacostia and also has a private practice there, puts it this way: "It's not a good idea for a white physician to be out here. Most of the white physicians have left and you can't blame them.

"Since I came out here (in Anacostia), in 1966 I've been held up at gunpoint inside my office four times. I've been burglarized three times," and, he adds, several white visitors and a nurse have been subject to "racial attacks."

"I don't know how many nurses I've had who've quit my private practice because of the robberies," says the doctor. "I would leave myself if I didn't feel something for the people."

"Every now and than I get thoroughly disgusted at the vandalism and at the people's attitude. They think you're here at their beck and call. They don't give you the respect you should get.

"No one seems to care about the people out here. Sometimes I say they don't even care for themselves . . . But I say that in the heat of anger."

If the young physician looking for a place to settle decides on a low-crime section of Washington, he finds the going tough. He or she has two areas from which to choose:

downtown or the area west of Rock Creek, and both are already heavily booked.

To the ambitious young doctor, the downtown office area around 18th and I Streets NW is especially attractive because of its proximity to several hospitals, to the business and government areas where many well-off patients work, to George Washington University Medical School where many teach, and because of the referrals from all the other doctors.

Dr. Talpers, who is well established downtown, gives little encouragement to prospective newcomers. "It takes doctors longer to get started downtown because of the sheer number of other doctors. A new doctor can have quite a struggle here for a number of years, whereas in the suburbs he can be busy rather quickly."

Says Dr. Korengold: "A pediatrician can open a practice in, say, an apartment complex in the suburbs, a place where young couples with children often live. And he'll have a going practice his second day."

The medical society president is well acquainted with the lure of the suburbs. Four months ago he opened an office in Bethesda in addition to his K Street office. A neurologist, Korengold divides his day between the two offices, an increasingly popular custom among doctors.

Doctors are also finding it's easier to save money outside the city.

Rent, for example, which may cost $8 a square foot in a downtown building may run only $4 or $5 in a well-located suburban building.

And surprisingly large sums can be saved by eliminating parking expenses. One downtown doctors' office reports it spends $300 a month on parking fees for its four doctors, two nurses and a receptionist. The doctors pay for their employees' parking.

Many nurses and receptionists live in the suburbs and doctors have to pay them more to work in the city than near their homes.

More important savings, however, can be derived from a new kind of tax shelter that is legal in Virginia, Maryland and every other state in the union. But it is illegal in the District of Columbia, and, says Korengold, some doctors here are moving to the suburbs as a result.

These tax shelters are in the form of doctors' corporations. They first became popular around the country during the 1960s, when states began passing legislation allowing them.

Their popularity in the Washington suburbs is attested to by John Post's clientele. Three years ago, says Post, there was only one corporation among his 1,500 clients. Now there are about 70.

Their prime tax advantage, Internal Revenue Service officials acknowledge, concerns retirement funds. In the District of Columbia doctors are allowed to put aside no more than $2,500 a year into tax deductible retirement savings, while in Virginia and Maryland there is no ceiling on the money that can be saved without paying taxes until after retirement, IRS officials say.

The D.C. Medical Society is supporting legislation now before the House District Committee to permit these corporations in Washington.

Testifying last month on behalf of the society's 2,600 members, Korengold said the corporations would "serve to improve the distribution and quality of medical services" to Washington residents.

He and Dr. Ernest Hardaway, a city health official, agree the corporations might lead to the establishment of "health maintenance organizations" in low-income areas. The corporations, Hardaway says, might obtain contracts from the city to provide prepaid health care for Medicaid patients.

He says the potential profits would be higher than for most ghetto practices. He acknowledges, however, that probably few such groups would settle in the inner city, and says, "Many guys (in the health field here) are looking at it (the corporation legislation) only for the tax benefits."

There is growing desire among some local doctors to augment government programs like Medicaid by donating more of their own time to care for the poor. In a profession with a generally conservative view of social problems, the D.C. Medical Society has become known as being relatively "socially involved."

Korengold points to an article he wrote this spring for the medical society's journal as evidence of this increasing interest by doctors to help the disadvantaged. In the column, he suggested that doctors take a "close look at our own city's problems" and make a "small sacrifice."

Despite their already long workdays, doctors, Korengold wrote, should try to give more physical examinations to the poor and take part in clinics, narcotics treatment programs and other voluntary health projects.

"The facts are that there are just not enough (doctors) to go around, and it is going to be a long time before the number of physicians catches up with the population spiral."

One activist member of the local medical community, Dr. Robert N. Butler, a Northwest Washington psychiatrist, is also skeptical of any big changes in the situation.

"Like many other comfortable Americans," he says, "Washington doctors have, as a whole, remained comfortably oblivious to reality. Now they're acting, but still not enough."

WHO OWNS AMERICA?—THE SECRET NOMINEE LIST

HON. LEE METCALF

OF MONTANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, Aftco, Byeco, Cadco, Bebco, Ertco, Fivco, Floco, Forco, Gepco, Ninco, Octco, Oneco, Quinco, Sevco, Sixco, Tenco, Treco, Twoco.

Mr. President, the above names may sound like a space age counting system. In reality, each is part of the corporate code. Each of these names is a nominee—a front name—used by the Prudential Insurance Co. of America to hide some of its interests.

Use of nominees, also known in the securities trade as "street names" or "straws," to hide beneficial ownership of stock is a common corporate practice today.

I submit, Mr. President, that this widespread practice is a compelling reason why the Judiciary Committee and the Senate should approve Senate Resolution 113, which would establish a Special Senate Committee To Investigate Concentration of Economic and Financial Power.

Law enforcement and Government regulation in crucially important areas, including energy, communications, transportation, antitrust and environmental protection, are lax because responsibility for illegal and unethical corporate behavior cannot be easily determined. Government and corporate computers compile dossiers of hearsay on millions of individuals. Yet, neither these computers nor conventional files store factual data on corporate ownership.

Regulatory commissions' questions regarding ownership are grossly inadequate. They will ask for the names of the 10 largest stockholders, for example, or ownership amounting to 5 percent or more of total shares outstanding. In response to such questions the typical corporation will not name the owners. Instead, it lists some name and address or box number.

How does one find out that Aftco is really Prudential, that Kane & Co. is really Chase Manhattan Bank, that Cede & Co. is the Stock Clearing Corp., which is a wholly owned subsidiary of the New York Stock Exchange?

The answer is simple, if you are a select insider. The answer is difficult or impossible to find out if you are an outsider, even a party to a case in which corporate ownership is an important issue.

Many answers are found in the "Nominee List." It is published by the American Society of Corporate Secretaries, 9 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10020. The executive director of the society is John S. Black, Jr.

Last month the managing editor of a string of suburban newspapers, W. J. Elvin III, of Globe Newspapers, Vienna, Va., asked the society for a copy of the "Nominee List." His request was denied. Mr. Elvin was told that distribution is limited to the membership.

Mr. Elvin then asked for a copy of the society's membership list. That request, too, was denied. Its distribution was also limited to the membership, he was told.

Earlier this year a Tucson attorney, Stuart Herzog, requested a copy of the "Nominee List." Mr. Herzog represents consumers in the Tucson Gas and Electric rate case. He wanted to ascertain whether any large industrial consumers of the utility, who enjoy much lower rates than residential customers, were among the company's owners. Mr. Herzog's request was denied. He, too, was told that distribution was limited to the membership.

At my request the American Society of Corporate Secretaries promptly furnished me a copy of its February 1971, edition of the "Nominee List." The society had provided me with a copy, on request, on previous occasions. I appreciate the society's cooperation. But the information in this publication, nowhere else available to the best of my knowledge, belongs in the public domain. The press, counsel for the public and, indeed, Government regulators and administrators as well as the Congress and public generally need to know who owns America.

The "Nominee List" will, as the society's Executive Director Black says in his introduction to the February 1971 edition, "be invaluable in proxy solicitation." Proxy solicitation is not a prerogative only of insiders who receive a restricted publication. Public access to the "Nominee List" will help the fine young members of the project for corporate responsibility and similar groups break the corporate code, help them work within the system, even though that system is so weighted against them. It will be of help to the small groups of volunteers around the country who are trying to protect consumers from multi-billion dollar increases in rates regulated by commissions.

The "Nominee List" includes first, an alphabetical list of nominees, second, the names of principals with nominees—listed by State—and third, an alphabetical list of investment trusts, mutual funds and foundations, with nominees.

This list could be most useful to the U.S. Senate, were it to establish a Special Committee To Investigate Concentration of Economic and Financial Power, as provided in Senate Joint Resolution 113.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the 20th edition of the "Nominee List," issued in February 1971, along with the correspondence which Messrs. Elvin and Herzog had with the American Society of Corporate Secretaries.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOMINEE LIST, 20TH EDITION,
FEBRUARY 1971

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CORPORATE SECRETARIES, INC.,

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE SOCIETY:

This Nominee List is for the benefit of members and will be invaluable in proxy solicitation and stock transfer work.

Every few years it is necessary to recheck all names on the List. In the latter part of 1970 The American Bankers Association cooperated by mailing our recheck inquiry to all its members, and this office has received and continues to receive large numbers of responses. As many of the changes and additions as possible appear in this edition and the remainder will appear in the 1972 edition.

Part I contains the alphabetical listing of Nominees and, where known, Employer Identification Numbers. Part II shows the Principals with Nominees by States, and Part III lists alphabetically Investment Funds and Foundations, etc., with Custodian Banks and their Nominees.

Some banks use different nominees for various departments and relationships. The Society, in an effort to increase the value of the Nominee List has endeavored to learn the purposes of a given nominee. The areas of relationship are: (a) Estates; (b) Living and Testamentary Trusts; (c) Pension Trusts; (d) Investment Management Accounts; (e) Corporate Trust Accounts; (f) Safekeeping or Custody Accounts (Domestic); (g) Safekeeping or Custody Accounts (Foreign); (h) Legal and Common Trust Funds.

The identified nominees are keyed to the alphabetical reference.

Through the cooperation of many of the Banks, Investment Funds and members of the Society, we have been able to learn the names of the Nominees used by Custodian Banks for these Funds and in some cases Foundations, etc. In many, if not most cases, Custodian Banks use these Nominees for other beneficial owners and they should not be considered an exclusive nominee for the Fund listed. These Funds and Foundations showing the names of the Custodian Banks and their Nominees, have been set up in Part III. It is intended to continue efforts to obtain the names of the Nominees of Investment Funds, etc.

It is to the benefit of all concerned to eliminate the use of duplicate nominee names. It is suggested that before a nominee is formed the Society be contacted to see whether a proposed name is in use.

Every effort is made to verify the listings and in order to keep this List up-to-date, members should report in writing all changes, additions and deletions to the National Office of the Society.

If any members note any new nominee names, it would be appreciated if they are sent to the National Office for confirmation.

JOHN S. BLACK, JR.,
Executive Director.

WILLIAM HOLMES McGUFFEY

HON. FRANK T. BOW

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, today I am submitting a petition from the General Assembly of the State of Ohio urging the issuance of a commemorative postage stamp to honor William Holmes McGuffey, a great Ohio educator. I trust the Postmaster General and the Philatelic Commission will take note of his lasting contributions and will take the proper steps in establishing this memorial to him.

William Holmes McGuffey devoted his entire life to the principle that every young person is entitled to at least a minimal education. He was one of the three cofounders of the common school system in the State of Ohio as well as the author of the "Eclectic Readers," a strong influence in the literary tastes and ethnical standards of generations of students who used them.

In his capacity as president of Cincinnati College from 1836–39, followed by the presidency of Ohio University from 1839–43, William Holmes McGuffey continued making outstanding achievements in his role of educator to the people of Ohio.

I feel it would be an appropriate memorial to both the man and his contributions to issue a commemorative postage stamp in his honor.

JACK DEMPSEY

HON. WM. JENNINGS BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, today is Jack Dempsey's birthday. Every Member of this Congress will join me in congratulating Mr. Dempsey on his birthday and join me in wishing for him many more happy birthdays with every success and the very best always. I know of no one who is held in more affection and higher esteem throughout our country and indeed the world over than Jack Dempsey. Mr. Dempsey was the greatest world champion in history. The "Manassa Mauler" was a tiger in the ring who fought with courage, determination, and with the most devastating punch ever experienced in the world of boxing. He brought to boxing and to sports, the golden era with its million-dollar gate. Jack Dempsey's career was truly a saga of "rags to riches" in the great American tradition. He rode the freight trains, worked in the fields and mines—he graduated from the university of "hard-times." He became a millionaire, respected and revered as a gentleman and as a kind-hearted human being with compassion, understanding, and love of his fellow man. Jack Dempsey was and is idolized literally by millions, but especially by the children. When I left South Carolina, Monday morning, my son, age 14, said, "Daddy, please write Mr. Dempsey and congratulate him on his birthday. He is a great American." Yes, Mr. Speaker, Jack Dempsey is a great American and a great patriot. He has influenced the lives of young America and influenced them for good, more than any American of our time including many of our great political leaders.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Jack Dempsey today for his genuineness; for his devotion to America; and for his devotion to those great principles and ideals of true Americanism—that is, that the youth from the most humble beginnings can rise in the United States to the heights of adoration, honor, and achievement.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my people, and I am sure of the Congress, I extend to Mr. Dempsey on this very special day, our love, high esteem, and best wishes always.

SOVIET ANTISEMITISM: A CALCULATED DEVICE

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, on June 3, I had the pleasure of speaking at Temple Beth Zion in Buffalo at a meeting sponsored by the United Jewish Federation to protest the plight of Soviet Jews in Russia. Also on the platform was Robert F. Leonard, district attorney of Flint, Mich., who related his frustrating experiences in attempting to get information on the recent trials in Riga.

Eugene Gold, district attorney of Brooklyn, N.Y., traveled with Bob Leonard and their story is told in the May issue of the ADL bulletin. I include their report at this point:

TO SEE FOR THEMSELVES

A woman in Kishinev placed a pillow over her telephone and advised the two American visitors to speak softly because "I am sure that the apartment is bugged."

A young girl insisted on talking only while walking in the streets "so we won't be overheard."

A woman in Riga communicated mostly by writing on a cellophane-type pad—the words disappear when the cellophane is pulled up. The interview took place in her bathroom, with the water running loudly from the turned-on faucets.

A former professor at Moscow University, who had been jailed for "hooliganism" when he attempted to submit petitions to the Soviet government, gave them a poem he had written during his incarceration. It was entitled "Hear, Hear, Oh Israel."

"You must help us, you must help us," they were told repeatedly.

And a propaganda official of the Central Committee of the Moldavian Soviet Socialist Republic denied that anyone had been placed under arrest.

These were some of the experiences of two American law officials who went to the Soviet Union "to see for themselves" the condition of Soviet Jews. At a press conference held at the national headquarters of the Anti-Defamation League in New York under the auspices of the American Jewish Conference on Soviet Jewry, Eugene Gold, district attorney of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Robert Leonard, prosecuting attorney of Flint, Michigan, told their story. Gold is Jewish. Leonard, a Roman Catholic, said he was concerned about things he's read about the plight of Soviet Jews and wanted to make his own factual determination.

They went as tourists. They spent a total of two weeks in four cities—Moscow, Kishinev, Riga and Leningrad. Despite the fact that Soviet Intourist guides were evasive or flatly refused to take them where they wanted to go, the attorneys managed to make their own arrangements and spoke to the families of Soviet Jews who were under arrest, and to government officials in each of the cities. The shadow of the Soviet Secret Police pursued them but did not interfere. On several occasions they were followed by a car with KGB markings.

From their interviews a pattern emerged of threats, harrassments and discriminations against Jews seeking to leave the Soviet Union, culminating often in official persecution, false arrests, denial of open hearings and legal defense—all in clear violation of the U.S.S.R.'s own Constitution. They found 18 violations of the code of criminal procedure of Soviet republics.

To the two American attorneys, it was not the Jewish "activists," but the Soviet legal authorities, who were guilty of breaking Soviet laws. They made the point over and over again in their conversations with Soviet officials—in Kishinev, with Mr. Burlanchenko, a Central Committee official; in Moscow, with Nicolai Tsibulnik, a high aide to Roman A. Rudenko, the procurator-general (attorney general) of the U.S.S.R.; in Riga, with Uldis Krastinys, chief of criminal complaints of the Latvian Soviet Socialist Republic; in Leningrad, with Aleksander Barulin, deputy manager of the Leningrad Soviet, with Mrs. Kotchakova, prosecutor of all political trials in the city—including those of the Jews under arrest there, and with Mr. Slonim, assistant city prosecutor.

Gold and Leonard said they arrived at the following inescapable conclusions:

—There is flagrant violation of the Soviet Constitution and Soviet law which specifically guarantee a trial within nine months from the time of arrest. Many Soviet Jews have been imprisoned without a trial for much longer periods.

—In city after city, imprisoned Soviet Jews are held incommunicado despite repeated attempts by their families to see them. There is strong indication that they will eventually be tried in secret proceedings.

—In most cases, subtle threats and intimidations have interfered with the rights of prisoners to obtain lawyers of their own choice. In some cases, where families were able to get their own lawyers, indirect pressures forced the lawyers to withdraw.

—There has been a systematic refusal to inform the families, and often the prisoners themselves, of exact charges, making it impossible to prepare a defense.

Soviet officials confirmed privately that charges against the Soviet Jews consisted of anti-Soviet propaganda and activity based on such things as teaching the Hebrew language, printing Hebrew materials, teaching Jewish history and heritage, printing excerpts from a book called "The Aggressor," written by a Czechoslovakian Communist writer, Ladislas Mniacko, which depicts Israel as the non-aggressor in the Six-Day War, and from a classical book on Jewish history written by the great Jewish historian, Dubnov. There was no response to Gold's and Leonard's contention that none of these activities violate Soviet law.

The stories of the Soviet Jews they spoke to confirmed the bravery of those who are prepared to continue to risk persecution by speaking out. The woman who placed the pillow over the phone talked about her son, who had been spirited off to a Soviet military hospital for alleged treatment of an imaginary ailment. He was kept in confinement for ten days. She permitted herself to be interviewed despite the fact that she thought she would subsequently receive a call from the KGB. The important thing was to "tell the outside world."

In Riga, a woman named Revke Alexandrovich told the Americans that she had neither seen nor heard from her daughter in ten months. The girl was in prison on an unspecified charge and was being held incommunicado. The woman explained that all the members of her family had expressed the desire to go to Israel. A KGB member informed them that she, her husband, and her son could obtain exit permits, but the daughter would have to remain. Forced to make a bitter choice, it was decided that the mother would leave with her son, who would soon be subject to army draft. The father would stay behind to do what he could for his daughter. (At this writing the trial of the daughter and other Riga Jews was to begin May 24.)

The former Moscow University professor, Michael Zand, had been released from prison after a 15-day hunger strike. In his opinion, the Soviet Union is becoming increasingly sensitive to world opinion and was divided within itself on the subject of anti-Semitism. He said that this sensitivity and the pressure of world opinion were responsible not only for the mitigation of the harsh sentences passed upon the Leningrad defendants accused of attempting to hijack a plane, but also for the recent stepped-up issuances of visas for Soviet Jews seeking to emigrate to Israel. In his view, hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews want to leave. He said Jews are seeking to establish their true identity; that on Simchas Torah thousands of young Jews flocked to the Moscow synagogue, that there is a hunger for the Jewish heritage, culture and tradition which has been denied them for so long.

Professor Zand gave Gold and Leonard a copy of the poem he had written in prison. In rough translation from the Hebrew, it reads in part:

"Within prison walls a Jew awaits a miracle,
Dreaming of the land of his fathers,
The land of milk and honey.
If only he could extend greetings to his dear land.
But the walls are thick, the bars are strong.
Guards stand everywhere.
Lord of the Universe
Liberate my voice,
Send me a miracle,
So that my greetings of peace may pierce these walls
And reach my land—and Thine, dear Lord."

Gold and Leonard said the reception they received from Soviet officials was polite and not unfriendly. Interpreters were used with those officials who did not speak English. (Yiddish and English were used in the meetings with Soviet Jews.) The Soviet officials, the men said, listened to what they had to say on violations of Soviet Jewry's civil rights. Replies were evasive, but the attorneys were told that their arguments would be forwarded to higher authorities.

They left the Soviet Union determined to spread the word that world pressure must not stop.

"Professor Zand said it best," according to Gold. "He told us that all good men are friends. He said the intellectual community, the scientific community, the academic and the professional must rise in protest—with demonstrations, conferences, any and all decent protest which will, unquestionably, have an impact."

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Communist anti-Semitism is a calculated technique of scapegoating which is used to release the tensions, conflicts, and struggles within the system. Communism needs the purges and the artificial revolutions to release and absorb the strains within it. The "outs" of Stalin have now been replaced by the new "ins" including antisemitism.

An excellent article by Paul Lendvai, in the same issue of the ADL Bulletin emphasizes this point. I call this to the attention of my colleagues by inserting the article for the RECORD:

SOVIET ANTI-SEMITISM: A CALCULATED DEVICE

(By Paul Lendvai)

The troubled history of the Jews under Communism shows that the Jewish Question has never existed in a void. If it is true that the fate of Jewry has always been embedded in the structure of Soviet society, then the rekindling of latent anti-Semitism is a concomitant of the rise of social tensions in a conservative society which for a variety of reasons in periods of insecurity whips up party discipline and heroic traditions, nationalism and xenophobia, racialism and the hatred and fear of the alien.

Because of the nature of Soviet Communism, the technique of scapegoats, in this case anti-Semitism, is applied as a calculated device to release the tensions, conflicts, and struggles within the system. Recent developments in Soviet political life—the rising tide of chauvinism, militarism, and retrogression—have provided an additional stimulus to the emergence of the Soviet Union as the international center of an increasingly overt political anti-Semitism.

Both modern and political anti-Semitism and Communism need an integrated belief system. This, in turn, possesses a logic of its own, leading inevitably to a conspiracy theory with absolutist trappings. Hannah Arendt has pointed out the decisive significance of the notion "objective enemy" for the functioning of totalitarian regimes: "He is never an individual whose dangerous thought must be provoked or whose past justifies suspicion, but a 'carrier of tendencies' like the carrier of a disease." The entire history of the Communist movement is a line of plots, conspiracies, and treason, the ferreting out of imagined or potential enemies. Regardless of the forms of coercion and the techniques of terror (show trials and wholesale summary executions under Stalin, demotion, deportation, or imprisonment under his successors), this kind of system needs the purges, those "artificial revolutions" to release and absorb the strains within it, to preserve its inner dynamism.

Take, for example, the "Doctors' Plot." The case is now officially a "frame-up" fabricated by "despicable adventures." Yet years after the "fabrications" a strikingly similar "hate campaign" focuses attention on the espionage activities and political and ideological subversion engineered by "Zionism" against "the socialist countries." If we compare the hair-raising absurdities in the indictment at the Slansky trial or the web of inventions in connection with the "Doctors' Plot" with the recent spate of allegations about the omnipotent "international Zionist Corporation," we see the same spirit and the same methods.

These "outs" of the old script have now been replaced by new "in," such as the previous collusion between Zionists and Nazis which has culminated in the present alliance between Zionism (which is said to have "all the characteristic attributes of Fascism"!) and the German "revanchists and militarists."

Many of the updated legends are so remote from reality that some Western observers tend to dismiss the Soviet diatribes as crude excesses of everyday political propaganda. One may recall, however, the notorious Protocols of the Elders of Zion which purported to reveal the text of twenty-four lectures delivered at a secret meeting of world Jewry. This blatant forgery prepared at the turn of the century by agents of the Tsarist secret police alleged that the "Elders of Zion" sought to foment wars, discontent and chaos, to infect people with frightful diseases and to use subway stations to blow up modern cities in order to bring about a messianic age in which Jews would rule the world. Following its publication in the wake of World War I, this collection of phantasmargoria became one of the most widely read books in the world.

Soviet tales of the invisible but all-powerful world Zionist conspiracy have the odor of the "Protocols" and were born in the same underworld. The fact that refurbished "classical," Nazi or Stalinist anti-Semitic myths are freely used today is politically more important than the fact that most of them are gross falsehoods. Arthur Koestler's perceptive insight into the Soviet system is as valid today as it was almost two decades ago: "They believe everything they can prove, and they can prove everything they believe." The stubborness with which the Soviet propaganda continues to cling to its lies compels us to reassess old assumptions about the "Black Years" of Soviet Jewry and about the temporary or incidental character of anti-Semitism as a political weapon.

We tend to forget that even in the age of spaceships totalitarian propaganda by its very nature must strive to fit selected elements of reality into another, entirely fictitious world. The Soviet system, striving to keep itself pure of hostile contamination, manufactures dangers that become facts of life for the population. Under these conditions, there is no effective defense or counteraction against such practices as anti-Semitism, for the ruling regimes maintain that these ills do not and cannot exist. Consequently, critics are almost automatically regarded as petty-bourgeois trouble-makers who have fallen prey to foreign ideological penetration. If they persist, they are treated as potential foes who "objectively" act as the accomplices of hostile external forces.

The very fact that anti-Judaism or anti-Zionism must be presented in impeccable "Marxist-Leninist" terms as something completely different from anti-Semitism forces Soviet propaganda to dress up the essentially unchanged legend of a world-wide Jewish "plot" in orthodox ideology. The corporate Jew becomes a corporate "Zionist" who stands for corporate imperialism. Regardless of top-level intentions, in certain historic situations the fantasies produced by systematic lying may become a political force that sweeps along a divided leadership worn out by living in a constant state of crisis. This, then, is another extremely serious risk factor. The massive and incessant "anti-Zionist" propaganda has gradually constructed a theoretical basis that is in some ways worse and more coherent than even the pathological fabrications of the Stalin era. There is more than ample evidence that the Soviet Union has bred a climate ominously propitious for institutionalized and virulent racial discrimination.

Ever since late 1948, the Kremlin, for different reasons and to varying degrees, has engaged in the export of covert or overt anti-Semitism. In addition to the dual threat posed to the survival of Israel and the position of the Jewish community in the Soviet Union itself, there is this third dimension of Soviet policy toward the Jews. And it is this export of first anti-Zionism and later anti-Semitism that has had a major impact on the fate of Jewry in Eastern Europe.

One can distinguish two major phases in Soviet influence on the Jewish Question in Eastern Europe. The first phase (1948–53) coincided with Stalin's lifetime, when a single political system with a single line and a single discipline was imposed on the entire Soviet sphere of influence. The Soviet Union and the United States were the midwives at the birth of the State of Israel, Stalin having decided that military and political support of the Israelis would undermine British influence in the Middle East. Then, on September 21, 1948, Ilya Ehrenburg's famous anti-Zionist article in Pravda heralded an abrupt change of line. In accordance with the traditional Bolshevik view, Zionism became a heresy throughout the Soviet sphere of influence. It was not so much the "ingratitude" of Israel—that is, its alignment with "imperialism"—but the emotional upsurge among Soviet Jewry, raising the suspicion of a rival allegiance, that tipped the scales and convinced Stalin that the Jews were an unstable, unreliable element.

Nothing could illustrate the irony of changing historical situations better than the fact that the same regime that had saved the life of countless Jews in the closing stages of World War II, only a few years later suddenly and seemingly inexplicably emerged as the chief foe of the survivors of the Holocaust who had set about to recreate a life for themselves.

The death of the dictator transformed uniformity to diversity all over Eastern Europe, a tortuous transition punctuated by upheavals in 1953, 1956, and 1968. The same process of differentiation has been evident in regard to both the Jewish communities in Eastern Europe and the attitude of the ruling parties to the Jewish Question and to Israel.

Yet we can detect the same distressing thread in Soviet policies in moments of acute crisis: the deliberate encouragement of anti-Semitic projudices thinly disguised as "anti-Zionism." It was no accident that both in 1956 in Poland and in 1968 in Czechoslovakia the Kremlin consciously played the Jewish card. On both occasions hatred for Soviet domination was to be channeled into hatred for an insignificant minority—the Jews.

The export of anti-Semitism as a by-product of Soviet efforts to contain the drive for independence and freedom in Eastern Europe, to stir internal discord, and to drain off anti-Soviet popular discontent is by no means a spent force. If this consistent pattern of abetting racial prejudices beyond the Soviet borders is linked to other facets of Kremlin policy toward Israel and its own Jewish problem, it becomes clear that the Soviet Union exerts a negative impact—in this special context too—on the process of change going in in Eastern Europe.

SIOUX FALLS—CITY OF THE MONTH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. DENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to announce to my colleagues that Sioux Falls, S. Dak., has been honored as the City of the Month by Toastmasters International.

Toastmaster International selects five cities each year, after reviewing many applications from cities, to be honored in the Toastmaster International magazine. I am pleased that a city in my district and in the State of South Dakota has been selected for that honor.

I commend Mayor M. E. Schirmer, the members of the city council, the five Toastmasters Clubs, the Chamber of Commerce and all organizations in Sioux Falls for contributing to the honor through sound planning and foresight by creating an overall master plan for the continued development, growth and progress of Sioux Falls.

I include the article from the Toastmaster, June 1971 at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

SIOUX FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA

Sioux Falls, South Dakota, is a growing agribusiness community with a metropolitan population of nearly 100,000. Sioux Falls residents are proud that their hometown is the largest community in five states—Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming—and that it is growing at a rate of 1,000 families a year.

Sioux Falls boasts a 70-piece symphony orchestra, a civic fine arts center, two colleges, a business school, and the Great Plains Zoo. A new air terminal was dedicated in late 1970 to serve flights to the east and west coasts. It accommodates 39 flights a day.

John Morrell and Company, meat packers, and Raven Industries, a balloon and parachute manufacturing firm, are among its principle employers.

An EROS (Earth Resources Observation Satellite) data receiving center is being constructed near the city and will be completed in time to process earth photographs from a satellite to be launched by NASA in 1972. The center's principle function will be to probe the earth's resources, agriculture, geology, hydrology, and pollution.

Downtown Sioux Falls currently is undergoing a massive remodeling. When completed, the 60-acre renewal project will feature a convention center hotel, high-rise apartment buildings, a library, and office building.

Mr. Speaker, the State of South Dakota is the home of the "Shrine of Democracy" carved on the peak of Mount Rushmore in the beautiful back drop of the Blackhills, S. Dak., is said to be the pheasant capital of the world—and I am proud that it is the home of Sioux Falls and all of the people that live there. I am proud of the people there—and every member of this distinguished assembly can be proud of what the local and State governments have done and are in the process of doing with programs enacted by you the Members of the U.S. Congress. I commend the people of Sioux Falls for national honors but, more importantly, I commend our people, our cities, mountains, prairies, plains and open skies to each of you.

PROPOSED EMPLOYMENT OF FORMER JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL

HON. CHARLES A. VANIK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, it has recently come to my attention that Mr. William J. Tomlinson, the Justice Department's chief of the Organized Crime Task Force in Cleveland, is considering employment with a company which is reported to be the world's largest manufacturer of slot machines and other gambling devices.

I am shocked and dismayed that a Justice Department official would accept such an appointment and the Justice Department's rules governing the employment of personnel would permit it.

Following is a letter which I have today addressed to Attorney General John Mitchell on this matter:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., June 24, 1971.

Hon. JOHN N. MITCHELL,
Attorney General of the United States, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: It has been reported in my community that the Justice Department's Chief of the Organized Crime Task Force in Cleveland, Mr. William J. Tomlinson, will resign on June 30, 1971, to accept employment with a company which is reported to be the world's largest manufacturer of slot machines and other gambling devices.

I am shocked and dismayed that Mr. Tomlinson would accept such an appointment, and that the rules of your Department governing the employment of personnel would permit it.

It appears to be a matter of grave impropriety for a high-ranking employee of your Department to accept a position with a company engaged in an enterprise which manufactures a product which is illegal in all but one State of the Union.

As I understand Title 18, Section 207 of the Federal Code, it disqualifies former officers and employees of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government from accepting employment connected with their former duties or official responsibilities. Are there rules within your Department which permit a high-ranking employee to accept a position of this kind immediately upon his resignation from your Department?

Are there rules in your Department which prevent such an employee from accepting employment from an employer whose normal business activities would have been under the normal scrutiny of the employee?

There is a distinct possibility of harm to the government when a supervisory employee may sever connections with the government one day, and come back the next day seeking an advantage with a private interest in the very area where he has just had supervisory duties.

Is your Department satisfied that no conflict of interest detrimental to the public or the government of the United States will occur from this situation?

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES A. VANIK,

HON. LOUIS C. WYMAN

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. WYMAN. Mr. Speaker, amidst all the talk of changing national priorities it is well to remember that if we are to survive in freedom and liberty our national defense must remain this Nation's first priority. This is not to sanction waste nor condone cost overruns, but rather to declare that within the requirements of careful legislative oversight, our appropriations for national defense must remain at a level that will insure a deterrent force in being for the United States in both conventional warfare capabilities and nuclear deterrent.

In this connection the following editorial comment from a New Hampshire civil defense newsletter is significant:

THE THOUAND YEAR NIGHT

Prior to the Punic Wars, ancient Carthage, which also had luxury standards of living, failed to provide an adequate defense against Rome, and did not survive.

Carthage was an affluent society which persistently deluded itself about Roman intentions of glossed over Rome's capabilities. Carthage grew bored with the cold war of its own era; it became impatient with its raucous allies; it failed to sustain its great general, Hannibal, who perceived the threat clearly.

Across the Mediterranean, an old Roman senator ended all of his speeches with the words "Carthago delenda est," which translates as "We will bury you."

The Carthaginians, however, preoccupied with business-and pleasure-as-usual, refused to believe that Senator Cato really meant what he said.

And so their civilization was swept into the dustbin of history.

Rome, in her turn, arogant in her splendor, entertained with bread-and-circuses, did not survive the challenge of the Vandals and Visigoths.

Neither Roman law nor Roman architecture held back the barbarian horde. Nor did Rome's gross national product protect her. The Vandals had no gross national product whatsoever. They had weapons, will power, leadership and what, to Roman civilization must have seemed an "irrational" lust for conquest.

Is Roman history irrelevant to the Space Age? We will soon be celebrating the 200th anniversary of the birth of the American experiment with liberty and opportunity.

Looking backward in the context of national defense we may conclude that America, alone of the great powers, has been incredibly fortunate in its geography. And that fortune has created a dangerous illusion—the notion that war is an abnormal phenomenon.

TRIBUTE TO ARNOLD ORDMAN, GENERAL COUNSEL OF NLRB

HON. ROMAN C. PUCINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Speaker, today marks the completion of the 8 years of tenure of Arnold Ordman as General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. Ordman is well known to the Members of this House and to our colleagues in the Senate. As General Counsel, he has put in years of overtime attempting to fulfill the functions and obligations of this highly sensitive position with integrity and a genuine commitment to reason and to the spirit as well as the letter of the law.

His career has concerned itself almost entirely with the administration of labor law. He became the sixth NLRB General Counsel since the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947 and the first two-term General Counsel since that office was established in the NLRB.

As a graduate of Harvard Law School in 1936, he practiced law in Salem, Mass., before entering the Navy in 1942. In 1946 he joined the NLRB and began a lifetime of service to resolving the labor disputes that came before the Board.

He was appointed by President Kennedy as General Counsel on April 24, 1963, an appointment that was wholeheartedly concurred in by the Senate and he was sworn in on May 9, 1963.

Arnold Ordman is one of the working patriots of this Nation. He cares what happens to people and to the institutions of our society. Above all, he cares very deeply about justice, particularly where it is tempered and transformed by the compassionate spirit of the law.

He and his wife Evelyn and their two sons, Edward Thorne and Alfred Bram, are people who bring to this Nation's Capital a zest for living, a willingness to shoulder heavy burdens and demands on their time, and who return to this country of ours a full measure of devotion. Arnold Ordman has been an outstanding General Counsel and his record will amply reflect the depth and extent of his service to the country. The Congress will miss him. Hopefully we will be able to call upon him often in the future.

NATIONAL TEACHER OF THE YEAR

HON. WM. JENNINGS BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Martha Stringfellow is one of the truly great teachers of all times in American history. This year she was selected the National Teacher of the Year in the United States.

Recently, Mrs. Stringfellow visited with her distinguished Congressman, the Honorable TOM GETTYS, President Nixon, and many friends here in the Nation's Capitol. Mrs. Marjorie W. Young, a great and distinguished journalist, wrote a splendid article concerning Mrs. Stringfellow's visit to Washington. This splendid article appeared recently in the Anderson Independent, and I commend it to the attention of my colleagues and the people of our country:

TEACHER OF YEAR GIVEN HIGH HONOR

(By Marjorie W. Young)

WASHINGTON.—When Mrs. Martha Stringfellow, National Teacher of the Year, receives all of the gifts presented to her in Washington, D. C., her husband will need to add another room to their home in Chester, S. C.

Her first award came from Mrs. Richard N. Nixon at a ceremony in the Blue Room of the White House. Here she received an inch square gold brooch which Mrs. Nixon pinned onto the collar of her dark blue jumper dress. This was followed by a large, framed citation, presented by the First Lady, announcing the 1971 National Teacher of the Year Award.

Among the guests invited for the ceremony were Mrs. Stringfellow's husband, William, and two of her daughters, Marion and Ann, who accompanied her to the Capital. Marion, the older daughter was dressed in a tailored suit of beige twill. She is married to Thomas F. Price, Personnel Manager for Springs Mills, Monroe, N. C.

The youngest daughter, Ann, a vivacious long haired blond, wore a red and white checked gingham dress, attends Massey College in Atlanta. A third daughter, Edith, now Mrs. Haskell Brown of Columbia, was not present.

Mr. Stringfellow told me at the White House they live on a 1,250 acre dairy and beef cattle farm a few miles out from Chester. He also raises all of the grain and grasses for his cattle. Mrs. Stringfellow was the former Martha Marion Carroll of Winnsboro in Fairfield County.

While the guests, including South Carolina Senators and Congressmen, school department heads and friends from South Carolina were enjoying orange juice and coffee, the press and radio people gathered about Mrs. Nixon, asking her all kinds of questions and one about her early school days. She said she could read before she went into the first grade and was always called upon when the school inspectors came to visit.

Although Mrs. Stringfellow is the first South Carolinan to win the national title, which is presented by Look Magazine, previous national finalists from South Carolina named to the Honor Roll were James Knox Braboy of McColl in 1970, Dr. Agnes Hildebrand Wilson, of Sumter, 1969, Ruby Padgette Herlog of Saluda, 1967, and Mary A. Mace, Columbia, 1964. Runner-up this year for National Teacher of the Year was Genella Barton Allison, an English and Journalism teacher in Hickory, N.C.

In the afternoon a large reception and press conference held in the House Banking and Currency hearing room in the Rayburn Building was hosted by Congressman Tom S. Gettys of Rock Hill who also served as chairman for the pleasant gathering. A light lunch was served before dignitaries took their court-room like seats.

On a table along the wall were many examples of Mrs. Stringfellow's educational planning and researched materials along with wooden cut-outs painted in bright colors for the school children to identify objects easily. These were the handiwork of her husband who spends many hours preparing her teaching aids.

Rep. Gettys, in the chairman's chair, with Mrs. Stringfellow on his right, and on his left were Sen. Strom Thurmond, Edgefield, Congressmen John L. McMillan, Florence, Wm. J. Bryan Dorn, Greenwood. The editor of Look Magazine and William Arthur, whose publication has sponsored the National Teacher of the Year program for the past 20 years. Many promiment educators from outside the state were on hand.

In the audience were Cyril B. Busbee, South Carolina's state Superintendent of schools, who had nominated Mrs. Stringfellow for the National Award of Teacher of the Year, Charles Dalton, of Pickens and Ron Owenby, Gaffney, State President of South Carolina Jaycees, plus press, radio and interested educators.

A graduate of Winthrop College, Mrs. Stringfellow will be completing credits toward her Master's degree this fall. She also finds time to teach reading, one hour a week, in an all-black children's school in Rock Hill. She is counselor for her neighborhood Youth Corps, and teaches in the two-member team in Lewisville's integrated grade school.

As National Teacher of the Year she is automatically commissioned to act on the annual Presidential Scholar selection this spring, which has, since 1964, annually designated high school seniors from each state.

During the meeting Mrs. Stringfellow received over a dozen gifts, ranging from subscriptions to national educational magazines, modern teaching books and visual aid tapes. The mail man will need a new truck to deliver all of the gifts to the farm and to the Lewisville school.

STUDENT'S CONCERN

HON. DONALD M. FRASER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, recently I received a most thoughtful letter from one of my young constituents in response to our congressional questionnaire. She tells of the troubles young people have today trying to work their way through college. She also reflects the deep concern many young people have about our national priorities. I commend this letter to my colleagues as an excellent example of the kind of questions young people are asking today:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Congressman DONALD FRASER,
House Office Building,

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FRASER: I approve of your congressional survey, but there is not enough room for further comment, which is what prompted this letter.

I am greatly disturbed about paying more and more in taxes, college tuition, and living expenses yet I see no improved programs in education and welfare. Who is making the money?

I am a university student and worried about even obtaining a small loan for next school year. The tuition is sky rocketing and next fall the university is going to raise it again. It is so hard to find a job in the summer that I could only find two part-time jobs, but I was lucky. My roommate has not even found one. Why is this state constantly building highways and reluctant to give money for human needs? It certainly is a fact that our cities cannot handle this burden alone, New York City is a perfect example. This is the reason I enthusiastically approve of federal funds being allotted to the states and especially the cities.

But, before the federal government can do anything we must get out of Vietnam. I am sick and tired of having my tax money spent on an unjust war! I would gladly pay twice as many taxes for better schools, poverty programs, anti-pollution programs and many other needs for our people. Yet, I see none of this.

Sincerely yours,

DONNA JEAN PUSUSTA.

PRESIDENT RELEASES FUNDS FOR NUCLEAR FUEL PLANTS

HON. JOE L. EVINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, President Nixon recently announced the release of $16 million in funds for expansion and improvement of the uranium enrichment plants of the Atomic Energy Commission in Oak Ridge, Tenn., Paducah, Ky., and Portsmouth, Ohio.

These funds had been impounded and frozen by the Office of Management and Budget.

I had strongly urged and appealed for the release of these funds to expand these nuclear plants which are vital and important to the production of electric power by nuclear powerplants throughout the country.

Because of the interest of my colleagues and the American people in this most important subject, I place in the RECORD herewith an editorial from the Nashville Tennessean.

The editorial follows:

AEC EXPANSION IS GOOD NEWS

President Nixon's release of $16 million in impounded funds for expansion of the Atomic Energy Commission's nuclear fuel plants is encouraging news for the nation and particularly for Tennessee. It is the first step in a long-range program.

The expansion project for Oak Ridge and two other gaseous diffusion plants will cost $525 million over the next decade, and of this amount, more than $300 million will be spent at the Oak Ridge installation.

Of the initial $16 million to be released this fiscal year, $12.5 million will go to Oak Ridge and the rest to the plants at Paducah and Portsmouth, Ohio.

Ultimately the Oak Ridge expansion will provide more than a thousand jobs, although at first it will not have many to offer. But the major importance will be the effect on the production of nuclear energy by providing the "fuel" for reactors.

Energy needs in the nation are climbing rapidly, but power expansion has not kept pace, and the situation is further complicated by rising costs of conventional fuels which feed generation plants.

The new emphasis on nuclear plants is thus a hopeful step, and it is good to know that Oak Ridge is going to be even more important to the future of nuclear energy.

EQUAL JUSTICE FOR RICH AND POOR

HON. OTIS G. PIKE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Speaker, recently I had the opportunity to hear a speech prepared by the commissioner of police of my own county of Suffolk, Long Island, N.Y. Mr. John L. Barry. Commissioner Barry was unable to be present on the occasion, which was a memorial service for policemen killed in the line of duty, in the service of the Suffolk County Police Department. The speech was eloquently delivered by Deputy Commissioner Eugene R. Kelley, and it impressed me so much I told Commissioner Kelley I would like to see it have the wider distribution afforded by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

What impresses me most about the speech is that it shows police not as they are too often caricatured today, as brutal oppressors of the poor and underprivileged, but as I have always known them to be, as human beings who know better than most human beings not only the occasions of crime but also the causes of crime.

For 7 years before I came to Congress I worked as a smalltown justice intimately with the police of that small town, and with the State Police of the State of New York. I drove in their cars on night patrols and presided over the court to which they brought those accused of crimes. During those years I found them to be almost universally honest, dedicated, and understanding. They showed compassion where compassion was due, and risked their lives when they had to do so. They know about the slums which breed crime, not by reading about them in the papers, but because they have been in and are intimately familiar with every one of those slums.

The speech delivered by Commissioner Kelley that day is dedicated not simply to the preservation of law and order but to the recognition of the need for change and the capability of peaceful change in a democratic society. It is dedicated not merely to preserving an uncompromising status quo, but as Commissioner Kelley said:

To the ideal of equal justice for rich and poor alike.

For that reason I am delighted to call it to the attention of the other Members in the hope that it may help put all our police in proper perspective:

REMARKS OF JOHN L. BARRY, COMMISSIONER OF THE SUFFOLK COUNTY POLICE DEPARTMENT AS DELIVERED BY DEPUTY COMMISSIONER EUGENE R. KELLEY AT THE PBA MEMORIAL SERVICE AT POLICE HEADQUARTERS, MAY 14, 1971

Reverend Clergy, Congressman Pike, Presiding Officer John Klein of the County Legislature, Deputy County Executive Ames, Members of the Suffolk County Legislature, other county officials in the audience, presidents of the various line organizations represented here today, Sgt. Murphy and his delegation of Irish Police who are visiting with us today, widows and members and friends of the Suffolk County Police:

Commissioner Barry has asked me to express his regrets that he could not be present at this service today. As Inspector Gardiner has pointed out, this is the first time in nine years that the Commissioner has missed these services.

As most of us here today are aware, the Suffolk County Police Department began to function as an operating police department on January 1, 1960. Since that time, the country has passed through more than a decade of turmoil, violence, protest and discontent on a scale perhaps unparalleled in history. We have seen not only open disrespect for our existing laws, but also a proliferation of unprovoked assaults upon our law enforcement officials.

Men of national stature have been senselessly assassinated and our college campuses have been the scene of discord and death. We have witnessed attempts to impair and frustrate the administration of justice by deliberate disruption of trials, by flagrant disrespect of the courts, and by actual physical assaults upon judges and police officers alike. In recent weeks, we have observed unparalleled efforts to bring the government of this nation to a grinding halt. Policemen have been brutally murdered in the performance of their duties. Riots, assaults and deaths in our jails have occurred with alarming frequency.

We as policemen are not blind to the many social injustices that exist. Admittedly, there is just cause for unhappiness and even despair among a large segment of our people whose hopes and aspirations must eventually be recognized and satisfied. Responsiveness to society's needs is the responsibility, basically, of those who are charged with the duty of governing. Policemen can only enforce the laws as they then exist.

The genius of our system of constitutional democracy, however, is that it is designed to provide reasonable alternatives in a changing society to unlawful conduct and violent protest. It is significant to note that the most notable advances which have been made in such diverse areas as civil rights and criminal law have been achieved through resort to the traditional legislation, executive and judicial processes. It has been said that change is the immutable first law of nature and governments reveal themselves most in the manner by which they provide for change. Our forefathers established our government and founded a free nation on that lofty principle. They gave us laws that could be changed by orderly process so that the nation and its people might remain free.

It was in the decades of the sixties that this violence and unrest occurred in this country. It was also in the decades of the sixties that the fledgling, Suffolk County Police Department grew from infancy, maturing into a full-fledged municipal police organization, second to none in the country, and it was in that service that the men we came here today to honor died, the most recent death being that of Ptl. George Frees who was 29 years old when he was shot and killed on April 6, 1971, in the performance of his assigned duties.

It seems fitting at this point to observe that assaults on policemen are rising, not only in the nation but also right here in Suffolk County. The latest figures available to me reveal that 59 assaults on police officers in Suffolk County occurred in 1969, 61 assaults in 1970 and as of May 11, 1971, 29 assaults have occurred, not including the death of Patrolman Frees.

Since John Klein mentioned the attempted bank robbery in West Islip yesterday afternoon, let me just refer to that incident for a moment to illustrate a point. The perpetrators had in their possession four hand grenades. Late yesterday, when our bomb experts had a chance to look over these devices, we then found out for the first time that one of the grenades had been reworked and rewired so that there was no longer any delay from the time the pin was pulled until detonation. In other words, the mastermind of this bank job gave to one of his cohorts who I am certain did not know how it was wired a hand grenade which would explode immediately on the pulling of the pin. It illustrates two points—firstly, that there is no honor among thieves and, secondly, it illustrates the inherent danger that faces our police officers each day they are on the street performing their duties. Luckily, no police officer or civilian was harmed on this occasion although one of the perpetrators was killed.

We can only assume that such assaults on policemen will continue and that other deaths in the line of duty will occur. We accept this fact as part of our professional responsibilities we undertook when we agreed to become Suffolk County Police Officers.

In remembrance of these departed police officers whose memories we are here assembled to honor, may I suggest that we in the police profession and, more importantly, we in the Suffolk County Police Department use this occasion to dedicate ourselves anew to the preservation of our democratic institutions, to the ideal of equal justice for rich and poor alike and to our continued service in the best interests of all citizens of Suffolk County.

WATER AND SEWER FACILITIES

HON. ELLA T. GRASSO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mrs. GRASSO. Mr. Speaker, I supported the Stephens-Widnall amendment to the Department of Agriculture, environmental and consumer protection programs appropriations bill. This amendment added $350 million to the 702 program of the housing bill for a total of $500 million to be used for grants for the construction of water and sewer lines.

The administration has not requested any new funds for these programs, despite the crying needs of our local communities for water and sewer lines. Localities are told that money for sewage treatment plants will only be granted when the town or village has workable plans for sewage lines. The construction of lines is impossible without money, and without lines there can be no plant. This means continued water pollution and health hazards.

Mr. Speaker, there is much talk about eradicating water pollution. The rhetoric sounds good, but where is the money to back it up? Treatment plants, water lines, and sewer lines are desperately needed, if we are to eliminate the water and sewage problems of our localities.

Full funding of this program will not only benefit the environment; it will also help to stimulate our sagging economy. The construction of needed sewer and water lines will provide new jobs and boost many economically weak areas. I represent a district in which one city has over 21 percent unemployment and two others have over 12 percent. Surely none of us have to be reminded of the gravity of the unemployment problem in this country.

This amendment does not provide all the needed funds for water and sewer lines, but it is a start. That is why I supported the effort to increase the water and sewer facilities appropriation by $350 million.

ANOTHER REASON WHY THE VIETNAM WAR CANNOT BE WON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I have been against the war in Vietnam for a long time and for many reasons. Col. David H. Hackworth, a 25-year-man, is about to quit because he is fed up. In an interview with Richard Pyle and Rick Merron of the Associated Press, he eloquently explains another reason for failure in Vietnam and how, from the very start, this war was unwinnable. It is impossible to fight a guerrilla war with conventional tactics, he says. There are many men who made mistakes in Vietnam strategy. What I cannot understand, though, is why they become national heroes, and worse why we still listen to them. Colonel Hackworth speaks with the voice of experience. For that reason, I am including his interview in the RECORD for my colleagues.

The interview follows:

RETIRING OFFICER BLAMES TOP BRASS FOR VIET DEBACLE

(By Richard Pyle and Rick Merron)

SAIGON.—"We had all the assets to win this war; we had half a million troops, unlimited amounts of money and the backing of the administration. No doubt we could have won if we'd had commanders who knew how to use these assets instead of these amateurs, these ticket-punchers, who run in for six months, a year, and don't even know what the hell it's all about. . . ."

Col. David H. Hackworth, who expresses those views, is about to quit the Army.

"In the land there's 30,000 Jeeps, driven by 30,000 Vietnamese," Hackworth went on. "Why the hell do they need 30,000 jeeps? Every captain and above has two, four, five flunkies, houseboys. Multiply that by the number of captains and above, and you've got probably four more divisions. How many guys you got out packing a rifle? . . .

He also expressed the view that by 1973 the situation in Vietnam will be similar to the tough days of the 1963–65 period.

Hackworth is full of praise for the GIs and middle rank American officers.

"Damn good men. The Army has never had better kids than it has today. They're smarter, stronger, far sharper than when I started out 25 years ago.

"Some of the captains and majors over here now, on their third tours, who could do a good job of running the Army, I'm afraid they're all going to leave. They're leaving in droves."

With 25 years of service behind him at age 40, Hackworth is in excellent position to make general; a cinch. Although the Pentagon says it can't prove it, he is widely believed to be the most decorated U.S. officer now on active duty.

Wounded four times in Korea and four more times in his 5½ years in Vietnam, Hackworth holds two Distinguished Crosses—the nation's second highest award for valor—nine Silver Stars, nine Bronze Stars with V for valor, and eight Purple Hearts.

For an officer like Hackworth to resign is a blow to an Army beset by crises. And quitting is no small decision for an orphan boy who went to sea at 13, enlisted at 15, won a battlefield commission in Korea and never has had any home town except "fort somewhere." He didn't say how he managed to join the Army at 15, but presumably he didn't look his age.

"The cities should have been off limits and the troops told, 'forget about rotation, forget about creature comforts, you're not going to town for a year, you're not going to have these big logistical depots behind you, so be prepared to do like your father did from '41 to '45, island after island without one goodie.'" This was a reference to the U.S. Pacific campaign in World War II.

In Hackworth's view the Vietnam war was always a guerrilla war, even after the North Vietnamese entered the battle in force.

"We came in with a conventional army, led by conventional people, and all the tactical concepts, if there were any, were conventional," he said. "We thought we would steamroll our way through this war as we have every other war, World War I, World War II, Korea. We've won by the output of the assembly line, not by any tactical skill on the ground. And you have this tremendous grouping of shallow dilettantes who were running the Army. I'm talking about battalion and up, who didn't know anything about the situation.

"We should have come with real professionals, absolutely nothing but, who would stay until the thing is over, all volunteers. There are many guys who felt like me, who would have stayed over here, who didn't care about going home in a year."

"How a man is rated generally as a commander from company up is by how many enemy he killed. Great pressure was placed on this, one of the key things for advancement.

"Down below the company, at platoon and squad, the troops don't give a damn about body count. But with so much pressure passed down the line, down to the kid with a rifle, to get them off his back he'd say 'the hell with it, eight dead.' And his platoon leader, young West Pointer, would tacitly pass this on, compromising himself—he knows it—but it gets them off his back, too."

A few years ago Hackworth was one of a small group of officers whose views were solicited by Gen. William C. Westmoreland after he became Army chief of staff.

"Westmoreland? . . . He was so steeped in management, if he had known what was going on, how this war should have been fought, he wouldn't have gone into this huge—what he called—battle of attrition, a search and destroy mission, which I always thought was a huge waste . . ."

Hackworth scorns the idea that the Americans' ability to fight and win has been limited by political restrictions. Rather, he contends, it was the "misuse of assets" in the big multi-battalion search and destroy operations of 1965–68.

"You always came in there with such tremendous firepower, such tremendous preparation, that by the time you got located and were ready to meet the enemy he was gone. He only fights to win. It's a principle of Mao Tse-tung's strategy that when the enemy moves in, he falls back; when the enemy withdraws, he attacks, harasses.

". . . It seems to me that Westy thought: 'Our strategy is attrition, we're going to kill more of them and wear their army out.' Well, you can't wear out a guerrilla army, not one that's working out of sanctuaries in Cambodia, Laos and North Vietnam, who's got a population base of 18 million, producing over 300,000 young studs a year. There's just no way of killing or wounding that many people.

"Take a look, at one time we had more than 550,000 people over here, I'd say not more than 40,000 at any one time out in the bush . . . If you're looking at this from the standpoint of Mr. Robert McNamara working on a systems analysis program, is this an effort that's working?"

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, this past Memorial Day, as in other years, America honored its war dead. Services were conducted in practically every city and town in this Nation. The haunting notes of muted trumpets sounding "taps" and the sharp crack of rifle volleys echoed from coast to coast. They were heard at the grave of the Unknown Soldier in the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va. They were heard, too, at the grave of Frank Puzo in Versailles Cemetery at McKeesport, Pa.

You might ask "Who was Frank Puzo?" Ironically, many of us who thought we knew him discovered 2 years after his death we had not known him at all. We knew him as the quiet, friendly barber who exchanged greetings with us almost every day outside his shop. We did not know him as a war hero. We never knew how deep a love he had for the land he adopted as his own many years before.

We learned about this side of Frank Puzo from an article published in the Daily News of McKeesport a few days prior to this year's Memorial Day observance. Until that time his story had never been revealed.

Frank came to the United States from Italy when he was a lad of 11. He was working as a barber when World War I broke out and was among the first contingent of young men from McKeesport to enlist. When the fighting ended, he returned home, resumed his trade and led a quiet, unobstrusive life. After his death an envelope was found among his personal belongings addressed to his employer and closest friend, Mr. Thomas Sacsek of West Mifflin, Pa. It contained some of Frank's cherished possessions: the Silver Star medal awarded him for "bravery in the Meuse Argonne offensive" of World War I, a Victory Medal with four battle stars, his old dog tags and a religious medal he carried during the war. Until then, Mr. Sacsek, who knew Frank for more than 20 years, never suspected his friend was a hero.

Frank died 2 years ago, alone in the land he had come to love. He had no family, no relatives. But, through the efforts of Mr. Sacsek, Frank Puzo was given a military funeral. Now all McKeesport, thanks to Mr. Sacsek and the Daily News, knows who Frank Puzo really was—a true American in every sense of the word.

I submit this article for the RECORD as an example of the true patriotic spirit which still exists in this great Nation of ours.

The article follows:

BARBER RECALLS "UNSUNG HERO"

Memorial Day, a day set aside to pay tribute to the honored war dead, will have special meaning to a McKeesport barber, whose closest friend died an unsung hero.

Now, Thomas Sacsek, who practices his trade at the Elks Barber Shop on Market St., has a daily reminder of the deeds his friend, Frank Puzo, a fellow barber, accomplished in World War I.

The reminder is in the form of a large framed display containing discharge papers, a photo in uniform, a Victory Medal with four campaign stars and—the prize—a Silver Star awarded to Sgt. Frank B. Puzo "for bravery in the Meuse-Argonne offensive" in France during "The War to End All Wars."

FOUND IN ENVELOPE

In relating the story, Mr. Sacsek, who lives at 1710 Pennsylvania Ave., West Mifflin, talks of his immigrant friend, with whom he worked for nearly 20 years, with fond remembrance.

Mr. Puzo, who died July 29, 1969, at the age of 78, was not one to boast about his war duty, but on his death, an envelope was turned over to Mr. Sacsek containing the "treasures."

The heroic deeds were a personal pride of Mr. Puzo, but he told very few, Mr. Sacsek said. He had been a "friend" of many area residents who conversed with him on city streets and in his shop, which he operated with William Steganius above the Coney Grill for many years.

He had come to the United States from Italy at the age of 9, stayed a year and went back to Europe with his father. At the age of 11 he returned to this country and got a job in a Braddock bakery for $3 a week pay. He became a U.S. citizen at the age of 25 "and was always proud of his country and his flag for which he fought," Mr. Sacsek said.

"He even saved his dog tags (military identification tags), a whistle, a map of France and a religious medal which he carried during the campaigns," Mr. Sacsek related.

PROUD OF COUNTRY

"He thought the world of the service and the uniform it represented. A customer couldn't say anything derogatory about the service or the nation," he added. "He himself talked little about his military duties, but was very proud to have fought for his new-found country."

Frank Puzo died alone—he had no family or relatives here—but, through the efforts of his friend, was given a military funeral at McKeesport and Versailles Cemetery.

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE DEBATE

HON. MARTHA W. GRIFFITHS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, you all know my concern with our health care system, and my efforts to seek reform. The problems are well recognized, and many solutions have been offered. I am concerned, however, that the rhetoric of some of these proposals may be mistaken for substance.

The Nixon administration's bills, for example, pay lipservice to the need for reform of the health care delivery system, the importance of prepaid group practice, and other necessities for an improved health care system. But the bills will not bring about the needed changes. For example, funds requested by the administration for health maintenance organizations are inadequate to develop new HMO's.

Most significant, the bills are a financial windfall for the same private health insurance companies that have contributed to inflation and failed to control the quality and cost of health care. They cannot, for a reasonable price, cover all Americans with comprehensive health insurance. For this reason, the Nixon program would continue the varying standards of health care we have today—an inadequate one for the poor and a quality one for those few who can afford it. And for many, no coverage at all.

My bill, the Health Security Act—H.R. 22—would create the controls and incentives vital to true reform.

Recently, AFL-CIO Social Security Director Bert Seidman was interviewed on the public affairs program, "Labor News Conference." In the interview he discussed many of the contrasts between the administration's bills and my proposal. The following is a transcript of this very informative interview:

HEALTH CARE—THE NIXON PLAN

Guest: Bert Seidman, director of the AFL-CIO's Department of social security.

Reporters: Judith Randal, medical writer for the Washington Evening Star; Tom Foley, Washington correspondent for the Los Angeles Times.

Moderator: Frank Harden.

MUTUAL ANNOUNCER. The following time is presented as a public service by this station and the Mutual Broadcasting System.

HARDEN. Labor News Conference. Welcome to another edition of Labor News Conference, a public affairs program brought to you by the AFL-CIO. Labor News Conference brings together leading AFL-CIO representatives and ranking members of the press. Today's guest is Bert Seidman, director of the AFL-CIO's Department of Social Security.

For more than a year, comprehensive health care has been a major issue in Congress. The Nixon Administration has long talked about the need to improve health care in America, but only recently did they submit to Congress specific legislative proposals to accomplish that goal. In the view of the AFL-CIO, President Nixon's proposed health care legislation falls far short of meeting realistic needs to assure that all Americans receive all of the best quality health care they need. Here to question Mr. Seidman about the Nixon Administration's health care legislation are Judith Randal, medical writer for the Washington Evening Star, and Tom Foley, Washington correspondent for the Los Angeles Times. Your moderator, Frank Harden.

And now, Mr. Foley, I believe you have the first question?

FOLEY. The Nixon Administration estimates the cost of the National Health Security bill, which is co-sponsored by Senator Kennedy (D-Mass.) and Congresswoman Griffiths (D-Mich.), at about $77 billion. Now, you people support the Kennedy-Griffiths bill, and I believe the cost projected by the sponsors is around $53 billion. The Administration's estimate is thus almost 50% higher. How do you account for this?

SEIDMAN. Well, we don't know exactly how the Administration arrived at their estimate.

The actual cost of the bill, if it were to go into effect in 1974, is higher than the 53 billion that you talk about. The reason for that is, it's been about a year since these bills were first placed, and the cost of medical care is rising rapidly. So, any bill which goes into effect in the future—the cost of any such bill—is rising rapidly.

The Kennedy-Griffiths bill would cover 70% of health care costs. Administration experts have raised their estimate of the cost of medical care in 1974. So the cost of that bill, when it first takes effect, is also going up.

But, we don't know why the Administration came up with a higher figure—$77 billion. Our best estimate is that the bill would cost approximately $68 billion when it goes into effect.

But, I hasten to add, that's not all new costs—by any means.

FOLEY. The sharpest rise in medical costs over the long period seemed to follow passage of Medicare a few years ago, presumably, because it permitted so many persons who could not afford medical care before to have it. Won't the Kennedy-Griffiths plan result in a similar increase and thus, possibly, justify the Administration's estimate?

SEIDMAN. Well, Mr. Foley, in the first place, the cost of medical care has been rising twice as fast as the cost of living—not just since Medicare went into effect, but for a long time before Medicare.

Secondly, as far as the Kennedy-Griffiths bill—the Health Security bill—is concerned, there are various kinds of built-in cost controls, which will mean that in the future, the cost of medical care will be far less than it would have been, if the bill had not been enacted.

RANDAL. Mr. Seidman, you said that by no means would all of the cost of the Kennedy-Griffiths proposal be in "new money." I wonder if you would explain that?

SEIDMAN. Yes, Miss Randal, we are now paying billions and billions of dollars for medical care; the entire cost of medical care in this country—medical cost—was $70 billion last year alone.

The Kennedy-Griffiths bill would cover 70% of what is called "personal health expenditures," which are the bulk of that $70 billion.

Now, we are already paying that—we are paying it out of our own pockets. We are paying for it through payments to insurance companies, and to Blue Cross and Blue Shield, and the federal government is paying a considerable proportion of that, as well as state and local governments.

The Kennedy-Griffiths bill, at the outset, would start where we are in medical care costs, and would cover 70% of those costs. But the financing of the program would be by a method different from the one now used to finance medical care. And it would be fairer and more effective.

RANDAL. Could this method be expected to slow the inflation rise? If so, would it slow it any more effectively than what the Administration has proposed?

SEIDMAN. Yes, we think, as I said before, that there would be effective cost controls in the Kennedy-Griffiths program—controls which would slow the rise in medical care costs. They may not stop the cost rise altogether—all kinds of prices go up.

But, we think that medical care costs could be kept level with the rise in the cost of living generally, instead of rising twice as fast, as is the case.

It provides for pre-budgeting the costs of medical care, for example, for hospitals and nursing homes.

It provides for encouragement of prepaid group practice plans, which the record shows, are able to control costs.

It puts the emphasis on preventive care and care at the early stages of illness, rather than during the later stages—when hospitalization and surgery would be required—which is the most expensive kind of care. It would tend to hold down the cost of medical care in various ways.

RANDAL. The Administration, too, is on record in favor of prepaid group health plans—what they call "health maintenance organizations." What is the difference between the Kennedy-Griffiths approach and the Administration approach?

SEIDMAN. Well, there are two major differences.

In the first place, the Administration would provide far less funds for the development of such programs—the health maintenance or prepaid group practice programs—than the Kennedy-Griffiths bill.

A second major difference is that the entire Kennedy-Griffiths approach is based, in large part, on the experience of the prepaid group practice plans—that is, payment in advance for medical care costs, and control of medical care costs, and incentives for quality medical care—all of which we have been able to achieve in prepaid group practice programs. None of these are in the Nixon proposal.

FOLEY. Cost controls, I'm sure, are something that the nation's doctors won't like too well. Have you had any evidence of how the AMA—the American Medical Association—plans to attack the Kennedy-Griffiths proposal? I have in mind the long struggle they waged against Medicare. Will they be able to hold up this proposal for as long a period?

SEIDMAN. I doubt very strongly, Mr. Foley, that they are going to be able to hold up this proposal for as long as they held up Medicare.

But, they are girding for a fight.

The American Medical Association has engaged one of the top advertising agencies of the country, with a budget of $1.5 million, to push the kind of program they are talking about—their own proposal—and to fight the proposal we are supporting. I have no doubt that the American Medical Association will fight this proposal as strongly as they can.

But, I think that the American people want the kind of program that the Kennedy-Griffiths bill would provide. Proof of that is shown by a recent poll by the Louis Harris organization. When people were asked whether they favored the kind of program that fits the description of the Kennedy-Griffiths proposal, or the kind of program that is similar to the Nixon proposal, they favored the Kennedy-Griffiths-type of bill by 55% to 30%.

They also indicated that they were very dissatisfied with the kind of medical care that they are getting, and favor the prepaid group practice-type approach, by an even higher majority.

FOLEY. Well, even given Congressman Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.), considerable legislative talents, do you really believe it possible for him to win approval for such a sweeping program as Kennedy-Griffiths? Have you talked to him? Does he favor it?

SEIDMAN. So far as I know, Congressman Mills, who is the chairman of the very powerful House Ways and Means Committee, has not, in any way, indicated what his position would be on the Kennedy-Griffiths proposal, or any of the other proposals which have been introduced.

He has indicated that he is going to hold hearings in the very near future on the whole range of proposals. I have no reason to think, at this time, that he is opposed to the Kennedy-Griffiths approach. He hasn't said what his position will be.

If he decides to come out in favor of it, we will have a very powerful ally. But, whether he does or not, the AFL-CIO intends to spare no effort whatsoever to secure enactment of the Kennedy-Griffiths bill.

RANDAL. I wonder if we could get down to some specifics for a moment. Under the Nixon health plan, would different categories of people get different levels of benefits? Would anybody be left out?

SEIDMAN. Miss Randal, as a matter of fact, to call it the "Nixon health program" is a misnomer—it's really four different programs, with four different levels of benefits, four different standards of eligibility, and four different administrative agencies.

One program is intended for workers. It would require both employer and employee contributions.

Another program is intended for the poor. That has a lower level of benefits, and covers people with very low incomes. They would be required to pay considerable amounts of money.

There would be still another program—the continuation of Medicare for the elderly.

The Medicaid program, which we now have for poor people, would continue for some poor people—that is, for the elderly, the blind and the disabled.

But, many people wouldn't be covered at all.

Part-time employees would not be covered.

The unemployed would not be covered.

Migratory workers would not be covered.

These groups are obviously in particular need of health care coverage, but they would be completely outside all of the Nixon programs.

RANDAL. Would it be a situation where the more you were able to pay into the plan, the greater the benefits? And, how adequate is the coverage in each of these four groups?

SEIDMAN. Well, in a way, the more you were able to pay into the plan, the greater would be the benefits.

For an example, an employee at very low wages would be required to pay, first of all, 35% of the cost of the premium. This would all be under private insurance, incidentally—private insurance companies. He'd have to pay 35% of the cost of the premium, which might run $100 or so. Then, for each member of his family—up to three—he'd have to pay $100, as a deductible. And then, he'd have to pay 25% of all the other costs. He'd have to pay the first two days of hospitalization out of his own pocket, and so on. This gets to be a very sizable amount.

Well now, he'd get no benefits at all, unless he can pay these amounts. If he can't afford to pay these amounts, he gets none of these benefits.

So, even though there is supposed to be a uniform level of benefits for everyone, if people can't pay these out-of-pocket costs—very heavy out-of-pocket costs—which the Nixon proposal requires, then they are just not going to get the benefits at all under his proposal.

FOLEY. In labor's support for Kennedy-Griffiths, are you at the point where you know, for instance, how many Republicans you may need in the House, in order to offset the Southern Democrats you will undoubtedly lose?

SEIDMAN. In the first place, we are not conceding we're going to lose the Southern Democrats—certainly not all of them.

FOLEY. Well, be realistic—you probably will.

SEIDMAN. As I say, we're not conceding the loss of Southern Democrats.

We're not conceding the loss of Republicans either, at this stage.

I think the fact that such a large majority of the American people favor this kind of program is going to have an effect on Congressmen, who have to be re-elected.

But, in specific answer to your question, Mr. Foley, we have not tried to make such an estimate.

However, we do know that there is bipartisan support of the bills—in both houses. At this early stage, more than 100 members of the House and Senate, from both parties, are cosponsors of this legislation. This shows a considerable measure of support in the Congress, even before any hearings have been held—or at least, any hearings that might be considered legislative hearings. There have been some preliminary hearings.

RANDAL. Isn't it true, though, that a lot of sponsors are hedging their bets, by signing in as sponsors of other health insurance proposals too?

SEIDMAN. I think that a few members of Congress have sponsored more than one piece of legislation in this area.

But, most of the sponsors of the Kennedy-Griffiths bill are sponsoring only that bill, at the present time.

FOLEY. Have you any idea what Senator Long's (D-La.) attitude is toward the Kennedy-Griffiths bill? It's a tax proposal, and must start in the House, under the Constitution. Does Senator Long intend to have his Finance Committee hold hearings any time soon?

SEIDMAN. Well, Senator Long has held some preliminary hearings—three days—just a week or so ago.

I don't think he will hold hearings that might be called legislative hearings, until after the House Ways and Means Committee holds hearings—perhaps, not until the House passes a bill.

Senator Long has had some things to say, which are quite critical, about the Kennedy-Griffiths bill. The only thing that he said he's in favor of is what he calls "catastrophic health insurance," which is a way of covering the very high costs that some people have.

The Kennedy-Griffiths bill, incidentally, covers that. But, it also covers the day-to-day, month-to-month costs, which are indeed, very catastrophic, for most workers and their families, when they have to face them.

Therefore, Kennedy-Griffiths is a much more comprehensive approach to the needs of Americans.

At this stage, I would say that Senator Long's position is by no means absolutely fixed.

RANDAL. I wonder if we could go back to the role of the insurance companies? The Kennedy-Griffiths bill, as I understand it, would not utilize insurance companies as go-betweens for payment—or fiscal intermediaries—but would use a Social Security-type arrangement, whereas the Nixon health plans, if enacted, would utilize private insurance companies. What is the weakness of this? Would the private insurance approach not control costs as effectively, in your view, as the Social Security-type approach?

SEIDMAN. Miss Randal, the private insurance companies have been in this business for a long time.

So far as we can see, they have not exercised any control over costs.

They have done nothing whatsoever to provide incentives for quality care. They have simply taken the money provided by employers and employees and passed it on to the providers of care—the hospitals, the doctors and the other providers of health care—without any controls whatsoever.

We see no reason to think that their record would be any better under the kind of national program President Nixon has proposed. Moreover, that program—in the bills that have thus far been introduced—provides no controls whatsoever over the insurance companies themselves. The President says he will be recommending such controls, but I haven't seen them—I don't know what they will be.

I have no reason to be very confident that they will be very effective controls, especially in view of the fact that the bills that have been introduced provide the same method of reimbursement of both hospitals and doctors—methods which have proven so inflationary, under both private insurance and under the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

FOLEY. If the doctors have a $1.5 million kitty worked up, I wonder what the size of the kitty of the insurance companies against the health insurance plan is?

SEIDMAN. Well, Mr. Foley, you'd have to ask them. My guess is they have some money set aside for this purpose.

RANDAL. Recently, the AFL–CIO Executive Council charged that the coverage that would be provided by the Administration package would be "shockingly inadequate." I wonder if you could document this for us, in terms of, say, a typical family of four, with an income of say, $6000 to $10,000 a year—something of that kind?

SEIDMAN. Well, I have looked at this, in terms of a family with $8,000 income, under the Nixon proposal.

If they had a $5000 medical and hospital expense—and many families do these days—a hospital bill in the thousands of dollars is by no means unusual—they would have to pay out, in the premium for the insurance, in the deductibles, and in the co-insurance—and all of this is out-of-pocket expense for the worker—they would have to pay about $1,800.

That same family, under the Health Security bill, would be paying, out-of-pocket, $80.

Now, that's the difference of coverage under the two programs.

The poor people, who would come under the special program that the Nixon Administration has worked out—the "Family Health Insurance Plan,"—would have to pay sizeable amounts of money, particularly in relation to their very limited income.

Their hospitalization, for example, would be stopped altogether after 30 days, no matter what their condition was; and, they would be entitled to only eight physician visits a year, no matter what the condition of their health.

Whereas, under the Kennedy-Griffiths bill, there is one standard of care for everybody in the country—the same comprehensive health services would be available to rich and poor, employed and unemployed, people on welfare and wealthy people.

There would be the same standard of benefits—comprehensive benefits—for all.

FOLEY. What position is the Kennedy-Griffiths bill on the AFL–CIO legislative priority list?

SEIDMAN. President Meany said, as long ago as last Labor Day, that enactment of the Health Security program—the Kennedy-Griffiths bill—was the number-one legislative objective of the AFL–CIO. I know from my own experience, because I'm personally involved in this, that from President Meany on down, we're all very much committed to making sure that we do everything possible to achieve enactment of the Health Security bill—the Kennedy-Griffiths bill—in this Congress, before it goes home in 1972.

HARDEN. Thank you, Miss Randal, and thank you, gentlemen. Today's Labor News Conference guest was Bert Seidman, director of the AFL–CIO's Department of Social Security. Representing the press were Tom Foley, Washington correspondent for the Los Angeles Times, and Judith Randal, medical writer for the Washington Evening Star. This is your moderator, Frank Harden, inviting you to listen again next week. Labor News Conference is a public affairs production of the AFL–CIO, produced in cooperation with the Mutual Broadcasting System.

SUCCESSFUL BLACK WOMEN

HON. DONALD M. FRASER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend two news stories about successful black women to the attention of my colleagues. In my own district, we are most pleased that Josie Johnson was elected to the University of Minnesota board of regents. Mrs. Johnson will, I know, make an excellent regent. But I agree with her that it is hardly cause for glee that it has taken over 100 years to get a black member of the university's board of regents.

A second article from the New York Times' business section of Sunday, June 6, details some solid records of accomplishment and presents some very honest, straightforward opinions about the status of women—white and black.

The articles follow:

REGENT JOHNSON DIDN'T EXPECT APPOINTMENT, WANTS RELEVANCY AT U

(By Bill Lemke)

By Thursday night Josie Johnson had pretty much given up hope of becoming a Regent.

The Conservatives, with a six-vote majority, had cut her from their preselected slate. Attempts in committees to add her to the slate had failed.

Moreover, in this vintage year of partisan politics, it was generally felt that the governor's blessing (he'd recommended Mrs. Johnson) spelled certain defeat.

So while the Senate and House met in joint convention fo.· a predicted rubber-stamp of the slate, Josie Johnson went out to a school program involving one of her daughters.

The next morning she was sworn in as a new Regent.

"The strategy the night before was a surprise to me," she said. "I didn't expect to win." It was a surprise to almost everyone. When she got home from the school program she was informed by telephone of her election to the Board of Regents.

With several dramatic changeover votes by three Conservatives, the minority DFLers skillfully were able to elect Johnson.

The next morning Gov. Wendell Anderson said, "By electing Mrs. Josie Johnson to the Board of Regents, I believe that the Minnesota legislature significantly broadened one of the most important policy-making bodies in our state."

Anderson said, "Our elected officials must do everything in their power today to provide proof that our democratic institutions can indeed be made responsive. I believe Mrs. Johnson's election yesterday does that."

Johnson agreed. "I've heard a lot of people say it's renewed their faith in the democratic process," she said.

The newspaper headlined that morning: "First Black Elected to Board of Regents."

To that, Johnson did not agree.

"It's kind of late for us to still be identifying 'firsts.' I'm just not sure that we, 100-plus years after freedom, can be considering 'firsts' as an honor. I think that it just speaks poorly for our society."

Nevertheless, Johnson is the first black person elected to the Board of Regents. And as such she hopes to make a contribution.

"I think that if the board is serious about responsiveness to the needs of the students and the future of our society, they will have to be faced," she said in an interview yesterday.

Johnson isn't worried about being in such a minority among the often conservative-minded Regents. She's used to that from her past political work.

"I have a feeling that if there are the inputs, I will be able to bring an experience and philosophy perhaps not experienced at this level before," she said.

And the new Regent wants relevancy at the University.

"There is a need to resurface some positive attitudes about higher education. If education has a real spirit of relevancy, there doesn't have to be a real-life practice-University learning gap," Johnson said.

The Board needs another minority member, she added—a student.

"I feel very strongly about involving a student Regent. This is the populace (students) for whom we work. Students should not be just advisors, but actually involved," she said.

Johnson has distinguished herself over the years with political participation for minority rights. She was an active lobbyist for the 1965 and 1967 state open housing legislation.

She has also been vice-president of the National Council of Negro Women, a member of the League of Women Voters' national board and other organizations. She is now an instructor in the Afro-American Studies Department and is working toward an advanced degree in education administration.

Now that she is a Regent, she has decided to resign her position as instructor because of the possible conflict of interests she might encounter as a Regent with broad policy-making powers.

BLACK AND FEMALE: ASSET TO BUSINESS, COMBINATION IS TWICE AS BEAUTIFUL

(By Marylin Bender)

Two minuses add up to a plus these days. Or, in the eyes of big business, being black and female is twice as beautiful.

Last month, Patricia Roberts Harris, a Washington lawyer, former dean of Howard University Law School and ex-Ambassador to Luxembourg, was named to the boards of directors of Scott Paper and International Business Machines.

Six years ago, when President Johnson appointed her to the diplomatic post, Mrs. Harris remarked, "When I'm around, you get two for the price of one—a woman and a Negro."

At the other end of the scale, those incubators of corporate management, the graduate schools of business, have suddenly been sending their first black women M.B.A.'s into the tight job market with conspicuous success.

"In the last two years, black women have made inroads in the business schools. All of ours have been placed with major corporations in jobs paying $14,000 plus, says Hughie Mills, assistant dean of admissions and student affairs at the Columbia Graduate School of Business. Three just received their M.B.A.'s and 18 will be studying there next semester.

Three black women will receive M.B.A.'s June 17 from the Harvard Business School. Cecelene Cover has been hired as an administrator for project development for the Kaiser Development Corporation in Jamaica. Joyce Guthrie is going with Filene's as an assistant buyer at $15,000 a year.

Eight black women are enrolled in Harvard's '72 class, six in the Wharton Graduate School.

Both Miss Cover and Mrs. Guthrie had at least four attractive job offers from which to choose as did Mary Kate Bush who just received her M.B.A. from the University of Chicago Graduate School of Business.

Miss Bush, a Phi Beta Kappa with a B.A. in economics from Fisk, has narrowed her list to two New York banks competing for her attention.

"At this time, it's kind of a double plus to be black and female," Miss Bush says. "Getting into jobs is relatively easy. The main problem I probably will face will be when it comes to promotions higher and higher up."

Delores Bowens, an operating systems specialist with Caltex Petroleum Corporation agrees that "it's killing two birds with one stone" for a company to hire a black female. But although she has not encountered either sex or race discrimination in the technical sector of business, she isn't so sure about the corporate managerial side. "Nobody has offered me a job managing anybody. If I were a man, I might have an option," says Miss Bowens, 27, an M.B.A. from the University of Massachusetts.

Between Patricia Harris in the board rooms and the new crop of M.B.A.'s is an increasingly visible number of young "to young to middle-aged black women in professional and lower managerial positions in big business. They tend to be equipped with impressive credentials.

Take Shirley Barnes Kalunda, an account executive at J. Walter Thompson who couldn't get a job in advertising when she graduated from Baruch College in 1959. After nearly a decade in the non-profit field as an African specialist, she went to Columbia for an M.B.A. and emerged a year and a half ago with five good offers in advertising and marketing.

Or Ida Scott, a senior group representative in systems design with I.B.M. in Chicago, Juanita Johnson, supervisor of scientific applications in the management sciences program at Mobil Oil, Audrey Burns Jackson, a special agent who has passed the million-dollar sales mark at the Prudential Life Insurance Company, Silma Wallace, assistant manager of the Chase Manhattan Bank branch in Barbados, Sanjeanetta Harris (also a Columbia M.B.A.), an analyst in the corporate research department at Morgan Guaranty, Evelyn Beasley, a C.P.A. in three states who is a senior financial analyst with Polaroid, and Dr. Esther Hopkins, a chemist with four degrees who is a scientist in Polaroid's special photographic research division.

Most of them concur with Dr. Hopkins that "it's a bigger handicap being a woman than being black. Having to be a woman, it's better to be black."

"People are recognizing the seriousness of the problem of what's happening with the black person. People are not recognizing what's happening with women as persons," Dr. Hopkins says.

Mrs. Harris cites several reasons for the promising futures for black women in mainstream business. "White men are less threatened by black women than by black men. It's one of the horrors of life but it's true," she says.

Then there is historical necessity. "Because of the nature of discrimination, black women have had to help eke out the living for the family," she continues. "Black women who were bright or privileged or both have gotten as much education as they could, to do as well as they could economically or to have social standing."

As a consequence, she says, "black women have no identity crisis as women. We know we count as persons. Black women have not been playthings, idols on pedestals. That's why black professional women tend to have ease of movement."

Some women of her generation did make their mark in the professions of teaching and law from which a few found their way into business. Louise Prothro, associate account executive in the Farley Manning Associates public relations firm has an M.A. in home economics from Columbia. She taught the subject before Pet Milk hired her to develop an educational public relations program, which served as a prelude to her present job.

Barbara Scott, vice president in charge of legislative matters for the Motion Picture Association and believed to be the ranking black female business executive in the New York area, practiced law after graduating from Yale Law School and before joining the Motion Picture Association.

Black women have long been leaders in non-white, usually small business. Among the black business peeresses are Rose Morgan, whose enterprises include a Harlem beauty shop and a cosmetics line, and Marion K. Bradford, president of Bradford Funeral System and the Bradford Industrial Insurance Company, a three-quarter-million dollar burial insurance company in Birmingham, Ala.

In 1903, Mrs. Maggie Walker started the penny savings bank that survives today as the Consolidated Bank and Trust Company of Richmond, Va. A recent survey by the National Bankers Association, an organization of minority banks, showed that two-thirds of its member banks had women officers.

Despite their tradition of economic accomplishment, black women feel that there is sex discrimination within their community. "We find as much male chauvinism among black men as white men," Mrs. Harris says.

"In black companies, you're a sex object, in white corporations there's less chance of being put in that category," declared Doris Asantewa, who has been surveying the attitudes and achievements of black professional women for a thesis for an M.B.A. she hopes to get from Baruch College in August.

Miss Asantewa, who has a masters degree in library science from the University of Wisconsin has worked for I.B.M. and the Bedford-Stuyvesant Development Corporation.

"In the white corporation, you can talk professional talk to a man and he listens, trying to compete with you. In black companies, they say, 'she's only a woman,'" Miss Asantewa maintains.

At least one black female executive dissents. For example, there is Dolly Christian, an employment supervisor for the Sperry & Hutchinson Company who is also a member of the Council of Concerned Black Executives.

"In entering the corporate world, the greatest support I got was from my brothers in the council," says Mrs. Christian, who crossed into business three years ago from the Police Athletic League where she had been administrative assistant to the executive director.

Mrs. Christian describes herself as over 35, "grass roots and a norm in terms of the system" in contrast to what she terms the "Super-Nigger," or supremely endowed black that business is now courting.

"I graduated from Central Commercial High School," she says. "I was an outstanding student but as a product of the system I was put in the general course and graduated as a secretary at 16. Because the corporate world was closed to me, I went into the nonprofit field. I had no choice."

"I worked like hell to get where I'm at. But now opportunities for black women are entirely different," Mrs. Christian says. "So what I tell young black women is, 'Please don't do it my way.'"

GEN. MAXWELL TAYLOR INTERVIEWED ON PENTAGON DOCUMENTS

HON. JOEL T. BROYHILL

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my friend and constituent, Father Theodore H. Chelpon of St. Katherine's Greek Orthodox Church of northern Virginia, called my attention to a CBS–TV television interview on June 17 between Martin Kalb of CBS and Gen. Maxwell Taylor, concerning the classified Pentagon documents on Vietnam recently appearing in the New York Times. Father Chelpon believes that the general showed great restraint in the face of essentially hostile questions, and members of the American public who may have missed the broadcast would benefit from reading the full text. I insert the text of the interview in full at this point in the RECORD.

CBS MORNING NEWS WITH JOHN HART

HART. Good morning. There may be an answer this morning to the question, "Who gave the Pentagon reports to The New York Times?" A man in New York says he knows it was a professor at Massachusetts Institute of Technology who got them from the Rand Corporation, a "think company" that does a lot of secret government work. The professor is Daniel Ellsberg, a former Assistant Secretary of Defense. We can't find Ellsberg for comment now. The man who says Ellsberg's the one is Sidney Zion, who used to be a legal reporter for The New York Times, and more recently published Scanlons Magazine which is now out of business. The Rand Corporation was given two copies of the report, we're told. The Justice Department is going to court today, asking the Times be forced to give back the papers.

Another accounting of the war is out today—the body count. Twenty-five Americans died from the war last week; 199 were hurt in it. 45,275 Americans killed altogether now, and more than 300,000 wounded in all. The South Vietnamese lost 322 men last week.

We have an interview this morning with one of the main people who appear in the Pentagon papers as printed by The New York Times—General Maxwell Taylor. He's retired now and writing his own book on the war. He was our ambassador to Saigon during many of the events mentioned in the papers.

Bernard Kalb led off the questioning as it was taped yesterday.

KALB. General Taylor, do you yourself have a copy of that secret Pentagon study of the war?

TAYLOR. No, indeed. I—In fact, I never—never have seen a copy of it.

KALB. Did you know that it existed?

TAYLOR. I had heard references to it . . . that Secretary McNamara was putting together some of the documents for historical purposes.

KALB. Are some of those documents that have been published in The New York Times . . . are they a surprise to you?

TAYLOR. Well, they're surprised to find them in The New York Times. Obviously, some were no surprise because I wrote some of them. Others I had seen. But, of course, many others are simply work sheets They're work memoranda within the office which would never come to my attention as Ambassador.

KALB. General, you say it was a surprise to see them in The New York Times. What are your own feelings about the government's action to stop publication of those documents?

TAYLOR. Well, of course, I would think it's most regrettable that they were ever—ever published in the first place. Hence, the action of the government, if indeed it stops this kind of thing, I would favor. What the legality is in that aspect of it, I obviously have not qualified to comment.

KALB. You would like to see that the remaining documents in the hands of The New York Times not be published?

TAYLOR. Well, I say this, not because of what's in them. I don't know what's in them. It's the principle of the thing, that we're—have here a deliberate betrayal of government secrets. And I—I'm—I obviously have to be against that, as a citizen.

KALB. Well, what do you make, General of the principle of the people's right to know when decisions of this dimension are taken?

TAYLOR. I don't believe in that as a general principle. You have to talk about cases. What's—What is a citizen going to do after reading these documents that he wouldn't have done otherwise? A citizen should know those things he needs to know to be a good citizen and discharge his functions . . . not to get into secrets which simply damage his government and indirectly damage the citizen himself.

HART. General, who is to decide what a citizen needs to know?

TAYLOR. It has to be decided by the responsible man what classifications should go on these documents.

HART. Who is the——

TAYLOR. I am the first to admit that they're usually over-classified. But that simply does not allow us on the outside—you and me—to decide that classification's wrong, and to ignore it.

HART. On the secondary level, who is to decide what the Congress should know, in relation to the President's responsibility to the Constitution? I'm thinking of the covert warfare that went on for seven months prior to the Gulf of Tonkin.

TAYLOR. That, again, is a very important matter, to be worked out between the President and the Congress—but not to be published in the papers or for us citizens who know nothing about the relationships, to try to interfere as go-between, so to speak.

HART. Referring to the second report published by the Times, in which it says that a "general consensus" was reached at the White House on September 7th that North Vietnam would probably have to be bombed. . . Now, this was during the period of the 1964 campaign, in which Barry Goldwater was advocating this, and President Johnson was putting himself in the position of a peace-maker, opposing this kind of thing, or at least letting everyone think he was. May we ask that question, as to morality and the people being fooled in that case?

TAYLOR. This—The people certainly shouldn't be told in advance of military operation. That's simply destructive to the entire purpose, destructive to the objection of the campaign, and highly dangerous to your own troops.

HART. Well, do the people have any voice in whether or not we go to war, General?

TAYLOR. They do. They have it through a Congress who had just encouraged us to do all these things just 'til August of 1964.

HART. And was the Congress informed of that covert slipping into war. . . . our attacks on North Vietnam?

TAYLOR. I can't answer that. I was in Saigon. I did not have any relations with Congress on that point.

KALB. Well, General, what about the projection of an image by the Johnson administration of this country not going into war, and—at the same time—engaged in deep and detailed plannings for the possibility of the US going to war.

TAYLOR. I think the planning was indispensable, because one cannot control what the enemy is going to do. It's the enemy that forces escalation on you—many times—in fact, in all cases I can think of in Vietnam.

KALB. That the enemy forced the escalation?

TAYLOR. Forced escalations . . . They—The whole—The situation in 1965—The introduction of our troops and the initiation of the bombing campaign goes back to the very violent offensive the enemy mounted after the overthrow of Diem in 1963. Sixty-four was the year when they were striking, they hoped, for victory.

KALB. General, in reading through the Pentagon papers, we keep coming across your own assessments of these various governments that you dealt with as the Ambassador—that they were tenuous . . . that, I think the word, in one case, was "inept" . . . the fact that they were virtually nonexistent and terribly fragile. And yet the crescendo of imagery that was projected by the Embassy in Saigon and by the Johnson administration was one of a very viable, much stronger government. Don't you think it would have been in the best interests of rallying the support of the American people to have levelled with them, to have talked about the fragility and the tenuousness of that government?

TAYLOR. What would the American people have done that they didn't do?

KALB. Well, what do you think they would have done?

TAYLOR. I think they would have been terribly discouraged, and unnecessarily so.

They were being terribly discouraged by the media then, and have since that time. Certainly, an official—an ambassador credited to a country in time of war—can't go before the press, for example, as I am today and talk about the fragility of the government that he's trying to help.

KALB. Why not?

TAYLOR. Because it destroys it . . . destroys that government . . . destroys the cause that our government's involved with. It's simply disaster to——

KALB. General—?

TAYLOR.—to talk too much.

KALB. General, you use the word "media."

TAYLOR. That's right.

KALB. When you take a retrospective look, who was more honest at that particular time? The media, in reporting what was going on in Vietnam, or the American Embassy or the Johnson administration?

TAYLOR. The American Embassy never reported anything other than the truth, as they saw it.

KALB. Well, I mean what got out?

HART. But what was concealed, though? That's the whole point, General.

TAYLOR. Obviously, because you can't wage war and you can't conduct negotiations and you can't have a very, very weak ally whom you're trying to support, and go before the public and tell everything you know. Disaster! And this country will be destroyed if that's the course of action we're going to follow in the future.

HART. General Maxwell Taylor, who was Ambassador to Saigon during part of the period covered in the Pentagon papers, in a taped interview yesterday.

For those of you who can see the full hour of this broadcast, we'll have more of the interview in about 20 minutes.

KALB. Retired General Maxwell Taylor, who once served as U.S. Ambassador to South Vietnam, is a prominent figure in the secret Pentagon study of the war made public this week by The New York Times. We talked with the General yesterday about the disclosures.

General, getting back to the Pentagon report, one columnist has assessed it in these terms, that in reading that report you get the sickening feeling of deception and betrayal. Now, whether you accept that, reject that or how would you comment on that, sir?

TAYLOR. Are they referring to the Government or the people that published the paper?

KALB. Well, the reading of the Pentagon history, reading of that tragedy without being overtaken by the sickening feeling of deception and betrayal.

TAYLOR. I don't know, of course. If someone says that, that presumably is his subjective attitude. I think this is very bad history that this is contributing—this—it's doing a lot of bad things. One of which is aiding——

KALB. What is that?

TAYLOR. Three bad things: One, it's laying a foundation for bad history. Secondly, it's initiating a practice, if it is a practice, of officials betraying their Government's secrets and a distinguished paper printing them. And, third, it's ruinous to relations within our Government and our international relations abroad.

KALB. Well, what do you think, General, has the highest priority? The three reasons that you've given or the sharing of those secret, momentous decisions taken by an Administration with the American people?

TAYLOR. But this happened five years ago. This—you're publishing ancient history at the present time. And you don't share your secrets with the people if you're going to be successful in doing what you expect to do. We never have in our history!

KALB. Do you share your history with the people when you're taking them into a war?

TAYLOR. Go back and look at American history.

KALB. What about it there? What about——

TAYLOR. Has any course of action, such as you suggest—I think you're suggesting, ever been followed by any American leader?

KALB. I'm suggesting a situation that we have watched in Vietnam, and what we're talking about is this sensitive question—of whether an Administration shares momentous decisions with the people who put that Government in power?

TAYLOR. Certainly. It does by way of Congress.

KALB. Now, do you think the Pentagon papers, on the basis of the decisions taken then, project an image of an Administration walking in one direction, overtly, while simultaneously planning another plan of attack covertly?

TAYLOR. I wouldn't—that has not struck my attention as one way to look at it. Obviously, the Government is planning a lot of things they're not publishing in the newspapers. And obviously they shouldn't be published in the newspapers. They are talking to Congress.

I came back four times, I believe, while Ambassador, and at least three times went on the Hill and had sessions with both the Congress and the Senate. Went over everything that I had on my mind, or expected to do. Obviously, I was not speaking for the White House. But in terms of closeness, of rapport with the Congress, I made every effort to maintain it—and thought I did.

KALB. Were you under any White House controls about—just how much latitude you had in revealing things you knew to the Congress?

TAYLOR. Well, obviously, I was not to go over and tell to the Congress things that the White House hadn't already told them. I was accounting for the programs that were be . . . had—in implementation.

KALB. Were . . .

TAYLOR. I was not qualified to talk about features(?)

KALB. For example, were there things that might have been put to you in question form by members of the Congress that you chose not to reply (indistinct—interruption)

TAYLOR. I can't recall any such situation. This was left, of course, to my own judgment. I was not under any blanket orders, for example. I talked just as frankly as I knew.

KALB. General, do you think, on the basis of the Pentagon report, on the revelations made in that report, that the so-called credibility gap that President Johnson had suffered was well warranted?

TAYLOR. Now, first, when you say "on the basis of the Pentagon reports," bear in mind the Pentagon reports are highly incomplete, sometimes—most times accurate I would suspect, sometimes inaccurate. So that itself is a rather shaky table on which to stand. In terms of the credibility gap, I don't see anything these papers have had bears one way or another. This is simply, as I say, expanding on ancient history; rather interesting to see chip shots between officials and that kind of thing.

KALB. General, take a look back in this year of 1971, to '64 and '65, when you were the Ambassador, and let's think of the intervening years, what do you think went wrong?

TAYLOR. Several—a long list of things. There should be at some point a real analysis, a detached analysis, of the lessons learned from Vietnam. I'm writing a book, I'm going to have a couple of misleading chapters on the subject. But really to do this in a governmental sense across the board would be a very wholesome thing if we could deflate the emotion and take time out and get the facts and then analyze them.

So when you ask me what went wrong, I'd have to take an hour to give you the numbers of things which I thought went wrong and sometimes why. Then I'd also have (?) the things that went right (inter.)

KALB. Absolutely. The right and the wrong. Could you, very briefly, General, do a quick anthology of the right and the wrong as you review them now?

TAYLOR. One of the most serious wrongs, in my judgment, was our connivance at the overthrow of President Diem. Because regardless of what you thought of President Diem, we had absolutely nothing but chaos which followed. And it was that chaos that I inherited—perhaps Homeric justice—in the year I was ambassador. And we—we'd have lost—the place would have disintegrated had not President Johnson made his two very tough, courageous decisions to go ahead at that point. So I would say that was a case of one place I thought we were very badly wrong, and secondly, one place where I think we were right.

HART. Before you go on with that anthology, General Taylor, may I ask you what was our connivance in the overthrow of President Diem? By that I mean who made the decision here? What was our part in the execution of the overthrow, including his death?

TAYLOR. Well, I would say that Government spokesmen here in Washington so clearly indicated their disenchantment of our Government with Diem, that it was open encouragement to the many plotters who had been after Diem for years in the fight in Saigon, that to go ahead, that the Americans would not—certainly not oppose them and, hopefully, would support them.

HART. Well, who decided that those Government spokesmen should encourage this? Was this made at the Presidential level or somewhere else?

TAYLOR. Well, obviously, it has to be approved by the President.

HART. Well, and what about the—any complicity in his assassination?

TAYLOR. I would—I would be sure that no American ever wanted Diem assassinated, you understand. And it was certainly a terrible shock to President Kennedy when that—when that developed. But the organization of coups and the execution of a coup is not like organizing a tea party; it's a very dangerous business.

So I didn't think we had any right to be surprised when—when Diem and his brother were murdered.

HART. What other mistakes then were you about to account?

TAYLOR. What other mistakes?

HART. Yes.

TAYLOR. A general lack of knowledge of these Asian countries. This is not the kind of knowledge, the intelligence that, say, the CIA collects but just the—enough senior people who knew Asia, and enough people who had been living in and around in South Vietnam. particularly, who would know the individuals, the players. We rarely knew any of these men until we had to accept them as colleagues. And we learned the hard way that they frequently could not perform. So that kind of ignorance, which went with simply lack of past acquaintanceship with this part of the world was a very serious handicap.

HART. General, in view of the depredations of this war on the Army, the spirit of the Army, on the spirit of this country, in view of the unknown future of the government and of South Vietnam, in retrospect, was it worth it?

KALB. Was it worth it?

TAYLOR. It certainly has been a very heavy price to pay in many ways. On the other hand, the most—the saddest thing are the points you mentioned—the indications of apparently fundamental weaknesses within the United States. It could just be that this price is worth paying to discover our weaknesses in time to correct them before we're faced with a major crisis.

HART. What weaknesses?

TAYLOR. Division in the minorities, loss of patriotism, degradation and defamation of all the virtues that we have—have made us a great country in the past. The use of our own media to destroy us internally. The acceptance of—of offenses such as betraying our Government's secrets as a perfectly normal thing to do. Many things. Of course, I'm biased on this, but I feel very strongly on the subject.

HART. You believe then that the war did not bring on these conditions, but they were there already?

TAYLOR. I think they were there; they were growing already. And the pressures of war—the treatment of the case on a nation—it then brings forth, or allows forces to come forth, which thus far had been concealed or relatively retained.

KALB. General, do you believe it is a loss of patriotism, to use your phrase, to dissent from the Administration policy on Viet . . .

TAYLOR. No, indeed!

HART. Well, where is this loss of patriotism, to what do you refer?

TAYLOR. Well, the unwillingness to serve your country, for example. The destruction of our flag; the burning of draft cards; the resistance of law; the attempt to impose personal interpretations of law. These manifestations are on all sides, and I think highly disturbing.

HART. If I may phrase the question this way, General, wasn't—weren't those manifestations directed at a specific war?

TAYLOR. I would like to think so. I'd be very, very happy if that's the case. But I don't think that's true.

HART. Then we're back to the original question. If this war triggered that, then was it worth it?

TAYLOR. Again—again, it's worth it today to finish—to finish this honorably and successfully. To answer your other question, you'll have to go back and put a date on it. When was it worth it? It wasn't worth it in '54, if we had known the events which were taking place—were going to take place. Unfortunately, Presidents and governments don't have these crystal balls. And if you look at the evidence and the knowledge available to Eisenhower, to Kennedy, to Johnson at various points, I've always found it very difficult to fault the decisions they made at those times.

HART. Would it have been worth it then to stop it sooner?

TAYLOR. It'd have been worth it never to have started it.

KALB. General, is there any lesson in all this for President Nixon?

TAYLOR. I would hope so. I feel there are endless lessons of enormous value in this experience. And I'm just hopeful that in cold blood, when the emotions die down, we can have an analysis where we'll all come out and say, "Yes, this was right; this was wrong. We'll never do this again." That kind of thing. Something—as President Kennedy did after the Bay of Pigs, which was a much smaller thing, but nonetheless a very wholesome thing to have been done by that Administration.

HART. May I ask you, General, if there is a lesson as to accountability of presidents and Pentagons to the people and to the Congress here?

TAYLOR. Well, the presidents are certainly accountable to the people and the Congress. The Pentagon is accountable to the President. Certainly, responsibility lying on all sides, there's no doubt about it.

HART. Well, the question goes to the accountability at the time when the people and the Congress were ignorant of what was happening, and of the slipping into this mire.

TAYLOR. I would just point out that most of us citizens had ample opportunity to realize we were following this course. Our papers were filled with it for years. I would come back when I was in the Far East as a military commander, disturbed that I couldn't get people to talk about the situation in Korea and in Southeast Asia. We're very slow to worry about things until we're personally hurt. It took the casualty lists of 1967, really, to get us aware of what was going on. So we citizens can blame ourselves to a large extent.

HART. Well, where does it end, General?

TAYLOR. I hope by our becoming a wiser people.

HART. And will Vietnam be a free people ever, in the South?

TAYLOR. I would say that if we allow the President to follow the course he's on now, there's a very strong chance that we can leave a viable state. And certainly no longer fearing an imposed Communist government. What happens after that—whether they can indeed steer a straight course and grow as Korea has—I don't know, but I'm reasonably optimistic.

KALB. General, do you rule out the possibility that, after the United States is in fact out of Vietnam, that the whole thing could still collapse?

TAYLOR. I can't rule it out—obviously can't rule it out. This doesn't have—there's no background of long nationhood in South Vietnam. So it'll take them longer to learn being a state, so to speak, than, for example, in Korea, where there was a unity—a greater basic unity within the society than there is in South Vietnam.

HART. Former Ambassador to Saigon and retired General Maxwell Taylor in an interview tape-recorded yesterday afternoon.

HART. Catching up briefly: A man that used to work for The New York Times says the paper got the secret Pentagon study from a former Assistant Secretary of Defense, now a professor at MIT, Daniel Ellsberg.

And 25 Americans died from the war last week.

MARYLAND COMMITTEE FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH

HON. PARREN J. MITCHELL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen of the House, it is with great pleasure that I insert into the RECORD today the report of the Maryland delegates to the White House Conference on Youth. As you know, young people from across the Nation met last April in Estes Park, Colo., to exchange views and develop positions on the critical questions of our day.

It is generally agreed that this was the most representative body ever assembled for such a conference. The delegation from Maryland represented all political and religious persuasions, every race and social class, including students, dropouts, and the young employed.

Experts from every field provided technical assistance to the youth in formulating their recommendations. The result speaks for itself. Though I do not agree with every position put forward, they certainly merit serious study and consideration by all the Members of the Congress.

It is with great pleasure also that I commend to you the recommendations of the black caucus of the Race and Minority Group Relations Task Force. This group was formed specifically to deal with problems caused by institutional racism in this country. As a member of one black caucus, I can well understand the motivations and objectives of another. Their recommendations show a thorough knowledge of the gamut of problems that affect every aspect of minority life. With many of their suggestions, I concur wholeheartedly. I hope that the Members of this body find time to carefully examine these recommendations:

MARYLAND COMMITTEE FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH

THE PREAMABLE

To the people:

We are in the midst of a political, social and cultural revolution. Uncontrolled technology and the exploitation of people by people threaten to dehumanize our society. We must reaffirm the recognition of Life as the Supreme Value which will not bear manipulation for other ends.

The approach of the two hundredth anniversary of the Revolution which gave birth to the United States of America leads us to reexamine the foundations of this country. We find that the high ideals upon which this country was ostensibly founded have never been a reality for all peoples from the beginning to the present day. The Constitution itself was both racist and sexist in its conception. The greatest blemish on the history of the United States of America is slavery and its evil legacy. The annihilation of Indians, genocide, exploitation of labor, and militaristic expansion have been among the important short-comings which have undermined the ideals to which the people of this country have aspired.

It is time now finally to affirm and implement the rights articulated in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Each individual must be given the full rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, the Bill of Rights must be reinterpreted so as to be meaningful to all persons in our society. In addition the following rights are crucial:

The Right to adequate food, clothing, and a decent home.

The Right to preserve and cultivate ethnic and cultural heritages.

The Right to do whatever is necessary to preserve these rights.

Governments and nation-states are created to secure and protect these rights. Through the acquiescence of its citizenry the government and other power structures of this nation have not fulfilled their responsibilities to the people, seeming instead to be concerned primarily with their self-perpetuation through serving the interests of the powerful at the expense of the people. In so far as any branch, agency, or member of the government or other power structure neglects its responsibility, it forfeits its responsibility, it forfeits its legitimacy. We proclaim the following grievances:

Denial of equal opportunity has led to privation in the midst of plenty.

Repression has denied the free exercise of political rights in a "free society".

The system of justice lacks legitimacy for vast segments of the people, particularly minority groups and the poor.

Free cultural expression is discouraged in a supposedly pluralistic society.

A war which is abhorrent to the majority of Americans and which inflicts inestimable anguish on a foreign people continues.

The government and the people have allowed economic and political power to be concentrated in institutions which are not responsive or answerable to the people, resulting in the waste and destruction of human and natural resources, and the failure to meet the people's needs.

The fear of youth identifying with adults and vice-versa, the fear of people identifying with themselves, the fear of people identifying with their race, the fear of people identifying with a country—all create a climate of fear which permeates this nation.

Internal divisiveness has contributed to a loss of national purpose.

The recommendations which follow we submit to the people as a realistic, positive, fundamental, minimal program for the redress of such grievances and the recognition of these Rights.

We are aware that "commissions," "conferences" and "reports" have often been used as a mechanism to divert the attention and energy of the people, in the guise of furthering "communication". This Conference shall not be so used.

Youth has been seeking reform of political and social institutions. Evidently these institutions are threatened by the basic insecurity inherent in change. The result has been repression which has transformed our struggle for reform into a struggle for survival.

We must recognize that change is not restricted to the realm of history, but is an ongoing process, the central dynamic of life.

We recognize further that while youth is often most receptive to change, they are not alone in desiring it. We affirm our kinship with persons of good will of all generations. This affirmation stems from our appreciation of the indivisible nature of liberty.

We are aware of our responsibility to fight for the rights of all people. We recognize that we in the United States of America have strayed from the fundamental tenet of this nation, that the government is responsible to the people, in whom power resides, and that the people are therefore fully responsible for the policies and actions pursued in their name.

We, as have so many before us, dedicate ourselves to struggle and sacrifice for the realization of the ideals embodied in the program we have set forth.

Out of the rage of love for the unimplemented principles we here assert, we challenge the government and power structures to respond swiftly, actively, and constructively to our proposals. We are motivated not by hatred, but by disappointment over, and love for, the unfulfilled potential of this Nation.

ENVIRONMENT

1. National Priority be given to the actions necessary to improve the quality of the environment of the people of America's inner cities.

2. We believe that every citizen of the United States has the fundamental right to a clean environment, and the duty to contribute to its protection—we therefore strongly support passage of the Hart-McGovern Bill (S. 1032).

3. Abolish the federal highway trust fund and institute in its place a transportation fund, from which monies would be appropriated for all modes of transportation, including, but not limited to, mass transportation.

BLACK CAUCUS OF THE RACE AND MINORITY GROUP RELATIONS TASK FORCE

We, the Black Caucus, unanimously support the Black congressmen in their effort to get the Nixon Administration to respond to their questions concerning its handling of the problems related to Black people.

1. Employment—Institutional racism has manifested itself in the employment of racial and ethnic minority youths. This is evident in the discrimination practices in apprenticeships and labor unions and employment standards set by agencies which systematically exclude minorities because of their socio-economic background. The employment of minority youth is essential to the upward mobility of the Black People.

The Black Caucus on Race and Minority Group Relations resolves that the President of the United States, the Department of Labor, and National employment agencies and Unions be advised by minorities affected by inequitable employment practices and initiate from their recommendation programs to counteract these conditions.

2. Communications—All Federal authorities support the proposition that significant segments of the population are entitled to programing service which meets their needs and interest. The Supreme Court has stressed the public right "to receive suitable access" to ideas and problems of interest and concern to their communities. Be it hereby resolved that the Federal Government recognize and dedicate ½ hour per night of prime network time to the on-going task of reporting and implementation of all resolutions formulated at the 1971 White House Conference on Youth. The total content of all productions will be controlled by minority youth. Programs will be produced by each specific ethnic group.

3. Voter Registration—Institutionally, the electoral process frustrates Blacks and other minorities because of the power structure of the two major political parties. In regard to this, we recommend that:

a. A massive and concerted effort toward implementation of programs be made for greater voter registration as well as voter education.

b. Various federally funded institutions be established to insure adequate safeguards against intimidation and infraction of the rights of voters at the polls.

4. Law and Justice—Since its inception, the United States has maintained a racist and dual system of law enforcement and criminal justice. This has resulted in a disproportionate amount of Black and other minorities being found guilty of crimes and the subsequent more severe sentences. Consequently, depending on the locaier, penal institutions contain from 60% to 80% minorities despite the fact that these comprise less than 16% of the total population. Phrases such as "crime in the street" or "a man's house is his castle," "no-knock" laws and "search and seizure" techniques, have all contributed to making the law and order society and not a just society. The Black Caucus concluded that there can be no law and order today without the right combination of law, order and justice.

In order to implement the above recommendations, as well as those of the minority group caucuses:

We recommend that the President create a cabinet level Department of Racial and Linguistic Minority Group Affairs; that this department be headed by a member of the concerned groups; that its staff be composed of persons in proportion to the representation of these minorities in the national population; binding recommendations to all other departments, offices, and bureaus of the federal government on their aspirations, programs, and staffing as these areas impinge on the rights and privileges of racial and linguistic minorities; that this department translate and interpret the desires and aspirations of racial and ethnic minorities to all other agencies of the federal government; that it develop and submit legislation to the Congress of the United States representing the requirements and demands of its client groups; that it incorporate into its organization a legal staff which will represent minorities in class actions on all levels of the judicial system; that this department be charged with the implementation of the recommendations of the Race and Minority Group Relations Task Force of the White House Conference on Youth as its first priority.

LEGAL RIGHTS AND JUSTICE

1. The 1971 White House Conference on Youth declares its complete abhorrence and repulsion with the unwarranted political surveillance now being carried out by the FBI on American citizens, and we demand the immediate resignation of J. Edgar Hoover as director of the FBI.

2. The Age of Majority should be lowered to 18, granting our young citizens full rights and responsibilities and the opportunity to participate fully in our society.

POVERTY

1. The current welfare system of payments, services, and commodities should be replaced with an income program which guarantees every person in America sufficient cash income for decent and adequate standards of food, shelter, and clothing, supplemented by supportive services.

2. Pre-school education—

a. that a considerable increase be made in funds in the head start program which in its fifth year reaches only 15% of poor pre-schools, and

b. that public kindergartens be financially underwritten by the Federal Government and immediately incorporated into the public school system.

3. Housing—we call upon the President to declare a national state of emergency, and reorient national economic priorities to focus on the housing needs of the poor.

4. Hunger and health care—

a. that the President declare a national hunger emergency and use the authority he has to assure that no American in need goes without Federal food assistance,

b. that the budget request for fiscal year 1972 for food stamp program be increased to 2.75 million dollars.

RECREATION

There is a continuing need for better recreation programs serving poor youth in both urban and rural areas. One of the most immediate needs of poor youth is in recreational facilities in their own neighborhoods to give them "something to do." Adequately funded recreation programs, proposed by poor youth themselves, could yield numerous benefits in areas such as crime, drug abuse, education and the environment.

We recommend there be established in the appropriate federal agency a national youth recreation program which receives funds from Congress to fund youth-originated recreation proposals from young people across the country. There would only be two limitations on the type of project which this agency would fund: (1) that it would be a recreation project proposed by poor youth for their neighborhoods, and (2) that the programs should not compete with or duplicate existing private efforts, unless that effort is not in fact serving poor youth.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

1. There should be total and immediate cessation of (a) U.S. ground and naval operations in Indochina and (b) U.S. bombing in Indochina.

2. There should be total withdrawal of all U.S. Military forces and cessation of logistical support, both overt and covert, from Indochina by December 31, 1971. Such action will best insure the release of all prisoners of war as we see no relationship between military pressure and the release of American prisoners.

DRAFT

1. The draft should be ended and the draft law be allowed to expire June 30, 1971.

2. An all-volunteer Armed Force should be established.

3. There should be no compulsory national service. Young people should be given greatly expanded opportunities to give service voluntarily through an Action Corps which would provide volunteer service projects which are locally conceived and directed. We especially recommend programs of service—learning which are designed not only to meet pressing local needs but which also promote the educational growth of those who serve.

EDUCATION

1. The Federal Government must reorder national spending priorities so that the Federal contribution to primary, secondary and higher education will total 25% of the national budget. Defense spending must be reduced.

2. The government at all levels should place great emphasis on funding experimental and innovative systems, with the Federal Government providing funding assistance.

3. The Federal Government should provide support for school construction assistance to correct deficiencies resulting from de jure and de facto segregation and for bilingual and bicultural programs in the schools.

ECONOMY AND EMPLOYMENT

1. Congress should enact legislation to provide a comprehensive national system of public service employment, funding employment opportunities and related services for one million currently unemployed adults and youth.

2. The national minimum wage should be set at $2.00 and should cover all types of employers and employees.

3. The powers and jurisdiction of both the office and Federal Contract Compliance and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission should be extended so as to assist these agencies in enforcing compliance with non-discriminatory policies in hiring.

4. A national Educational Opportunities Bank should be established by Congress to provide loan funds for higher, vocational and continued education.

DRUGS

1. We recommend that persons who possess drugs for their personal use no longer be subject to the criminal law.

2. We strongly recommend that government at appropriate levels control and license sale, distribution, importation, retailing, advertising, purity, potency, age of user and the tax revenues of marijuana with a view to permitting its general use under reasonable standards. The Drug Task Force has concluded that the social costs of the present legal framework for dealing with marijuana grossly exceed and damage or danger resulting from its use.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The District should be granted the full sovereign rights of statehood.

Finally, there should be a national conference every four years in the middle of each presidential term.

FINAL RECOMMENDATIONS: OF THE BLACK CAUCUS OF THE RACE AND MINORITY GROUP RELATIONS TASK FORCE

We unanimously support the Black Congressmen in their effort to get the Nixon Administration to respond to their questions concerning its handling of the problems relating to Black people.

I. The present institutional structure of racism in America is unable and unwilling to change by itself. Only non-white oppressed people can develop viable opposition and create alternatives to these institutions. The survival of this socio-economic and political system depends upon the federal government and other white institutions making available, on an unconditional basis, financial and technical resources to Blacks specifically, and other oppressed people generally, in programs of self-determination. This investment should reflect at a minimum the annual military expenditure.

II. "Blacknamization": Initiate a domestic plan to counteract the social and psychological disorders among Blacks caused by white racism, i.e., drugs, prostitution, poor housing, etc.

1. Education—Resolved that every school, Black and white, federally funded, require Black Studies and require that Blacks have representatives on the Board, which chooses curriculum and books.

A. Black studies:

1. The incorporation of Black representation in all textbooks at all educational levels.

B. Course structure:

1. Courses which impart the knowledge necessary for daily life (i.e. home management, employment, employment information, etc.) should be offered.

2. Courses should be offered to prepare non-college-bound youths for an adequate family income (i.e. trade schools, vocational studies, etc.)

C. Teaching requirements:

1. "Humanism" incorporated into the rules of teaching.

2. College level:

a. Future teachers required to learn how to deal with the socially deprived, mentally retarded, the exceptional child, etc.

b. teachers should be granted tenure only after evaluation in terms of competence and effectiveness.

c. teaching resources should reflect the needs of all students.

2. Foreign affairs:

A. We recommend that United States Foreign Policy must be guided by the universal principle of "equality" of all peoples:

1. We demand a change in immigration policies to make entrance into the United States from Black and white countries the same.

2. We demand an equality of Foreign Aid and assistance (technical and monetary) for all countries.

3. The United States cease the investment and economic control (and therefore governmental control) which make developing nations of Black and non-white countries become satellites of the U.S.

4. Promote the exchange of Black personnel among diplomatic staff and terminate the promotion of division among blacks and other oppressed peoples.

3. Employment:

A. Institutional racism has manifested itself in the employment of racial and ethnic minority youths. This is evident in the discrimination practices in apprenticeships and labor unions and employment standards set by agencies which systematically exclude minorities because of their socio-economic background. The employment of minority youth is essential to the upward mobility of the Black People.

The Black Caucus on Race and Minority Group Relations resolves that the President of the United States, the Department of Labor, and National employment agencies and Unions be advised by minorities affected by inequitable employment practice and initiate from their recommendation programs to counteract these conditions and that:

1. All employment examinations be designed with questions relevant to the job sought.

2. Creation of labor force minimum quotas for minority labor involved in public works.

3. extensive apprenticeship and on-the-job training with incentive pay be established and expanded among minority youths not enrolled or unable to enroll in school.

4. that the Federal goverment establish programs for summer employment among minority students who depend on these earnings to continue their education.

5. that a proportionate quota of the proposed revenue sharing funds be raised by state governments for establishing apprenticeship and on-the-job training programs among minority youth.

6. that re-establishment and expansion of these programs such as the N.Y.C. be immediately initiated in order to prevent frustration and sublimation of minority youth energies in lawless violence channels.

7. that the Federal and state government influence and solicit the establishment of industrial development in minority group areas which would utilize minorities in all levels of management and labor.

4. Communications:

All Federal authorities support the proposition that significant segments of the population are entitled to programming service which meets their needs and interest. The Supreme Court has stressed the public right "to receive suitable access" to ideas and problems of interest and concern to their communities. Be it hereby resolved that the Federal Government recognize and dedicate ½ hour per night of prime network time to the on-going task of reporting and implementation of all resolutions formulated at the 1971 White House Conference on Youth. The total content of all productions will be controlled by minority youth. Programs will be produced by each specific ethnic group.

5. Voter registration:

A. Institutionally, the electoral process frustrates Blacks and other minorities because of the power structure of the two major political parties. In regard to this, we recommend that:

1. A massive and concerted effort toward implementation of programs be made for greater voter registration as well as voter education.

2. various federally funded institutions be established to insure adequate safeguards against intimidation and infraction of the rights of voters at the polls.

6. Law and justice:

A. Since its inception, the United States has maintained a racist and dual system of law enforcement and criminal justice. This has resulted in a disproportionate amount of Black and other minorities being found guilty of crimes and the subsequent more severe sentences. Consequently, depending on the locale, penal institutions contain from 60% to 80% minorities despite the fact that these comprise less than 16% of the total population. Phrases such as "crime in the street" or "a man's house is his castle," "no-knock" laws and "search and seizure" techniques, have all contributed to making a law and order society and not a just society. The Black Caucus concluded that there can be no law and order today without the right combination of law-order and justice.

To help achieve this, federal, state, and local governments must insure that funds received under the Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice Act or direct grants from the Department of Justice are used to: 1) promote better police-community relations, 2) recruit more minority group policemen, 3) revamp courts, 4) humanize our penal institutions and improve the delivery system of justice—as opposed to: purchasing anti-riot equipment and other hardware, which serves to further oppress ghetto residents.

We are also concerned that too few juries consist of a "jury of peers" in cases involving Blacks.

Finally, we must reinstate for Black people the system of justice which indicates that a person is innocent until proven guilty. The situation that surrounds Black Liberators suggest that the reverse is true—Blacks are guilty until proven innocent.

Why are drugs allowed to flourish in Black communities? Get drugs out of our community. Stop the financiers. Stop the pushers.

Why are young black women allowed to prostitute in full view of observing police? Replace corrupt policemen with Blacks who care. The connection between prostitution and drugs is obvious.

When young Blacks are imprisoned they are questioned by parole boards about political concepts, i.e., what do you think of the Black Panthers? The Muslims? Angela Davis? Questions normally asked whites about rehabilitation factions such as jobs, housing and sponsorship are not considered. These are institutional acts of "genocide."

7. Health and welfare:

A. We resolve that:

1. Funds for health care be made available to all Black people to cover the full cost of doctor's fees, medicine, and hospitalization for both mental and physical health problems.

2. The Black woman have the freedom to control her own body. It must remain her choice to decide whether and when she will give birth.

3. There be adequate prenatal and postpartem care for all Black mothers and children.

4. Massive financial aid be invested into bringing the percentage of Blacks in professional capacities in the field of medicine up to the percentage of Blacks in the population as a whole.

5. Guaranteed annual income be instituted by the federal government in accordance with its responsibility to "promote the general welfare" of its people. We reject, however, the philosophy that in order for a human being to survive he must agree to perform degrading tasks in deadend jobs for slave wages.

6. The welfare system be humanized so as to reflect in its administration a respect for the inherent worth of every individual. An individual whose dependence is the result of institutional racism at work on all levels of society must not be patronized and condescended to by those who have succeeded in the system at his expense and who continue to prosper solely because he exists.

7. The administration of the welfare system be prohibited from requiring the acceptance of white standards of behavior, family structure, and culture of those Black people who seek their rights under the system.

III. In order to implement the above recommendations, as well as those of the minority group caucuses:

We recommend that the President create a cabinet level Department of Racial and Linguistic Minority Group Affairs; that this department be headed by a member of the concerned groups; that its staff be composed of persons in proportion to the representation of these minorities in the national population; that this department be empowered to advise and make binding recommendations to all other departments, offices, and bureaus of the federal government on their aspirations, programs, and staffing as these areas impinge on the rights and privileges of racial and linguistic minorities; that this department translate and interpret the desires and aspirations of racial and ethnic minorities to all other agencies of the federal government; that it develop and submit legislation to the Congress of the United States representing the requirements and demands of its client groups; that it incorporate into its organization a legal staff which will represent minorities in class actions on all levels of the judicial system; that this department be charged with the implementation of the recommendations of the Race and Minority Group Relations Task Force of the White House Conference on Youth as its first priority.

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. SCHERLE. Mr. Speaker, a child asks: "Where is daddy?" A mother asks: "How is my son?" A wife asks: "Is my husband alive or dead?"

Communist North Vietnam is sadistically practicing spiritual and mental genocide on over 1,600 American prisoners of war and their families.

How long?

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to call to the attention of you and my colleagues in the House the half-century of dedication, devotion, and sincerity of purpose of the Daughters of Miriam of my congressional district in their pursuit of happiness and security for people and ask you to join with me today in commemorating their 50th anniversary of outstanding public service, particularly to our senior citizens.

This center for the aged is a highly unique organization of services combining home life with community living in which the residents can participate in the activities of daily living—social as well as industrious—with all of the vitality and communion of a community of people living with each other and sharing the various benefits of a happy and healthful fusion of minds and hearts, ideas and actions. One of the great tragedies for an older person is to feel rejected. Even the best of medical care cannot compensate for this feeling. At the center the objective is to make the aged residents feel still wanted, still important—to reduce the level of physical suffering that aging brings, but at the same time to increase the dimension of living.

The Daughters of Miriam was organized in 1921 through a gift of Nathan Barnert, twice mayor of Paterson and a well-known philanthropist, in memory of his wife, Miriam. This organization has progressed over these past years from a "Home for the Aged and Orphans" through its gradual transition to "Home and Infirmary for the Aged," and its ultimate expansion and transformation to a "Center for the Aged."

The original purpose of the agency was to give sheltered care to both the aged and to orphaned children. The first location was in a converted house in Paterson, and after the initial 5 years, in a 50-bed capacity building on an estate in Clifton. This dual program for the underprivileged at both extremes of the age spectrum remained unchanged for over 20 years. In the following 30 years the program for dependent children was relinquished to a professional casework agency which placed them in foster or adoptive homes. The Daughters of Miriam merged with the B'nai Israel Home for the Aged in Passaic, and a growing partnership of government and philanthropy in the funding of care through the introduction of medicare and medicaid and Federal loans for major structures evolved. A principal goal of the center's development in the 1970's is to round out the bed capacity from its present number of 300 to 400. The high standards of care at Daughters of Miriam have a direct connection with the philosophy of its professional and lay leaders. They believe that a nursing care facility must approximate as closely as possible a client's former home environment. It must provide skilled nursing and medical services but, even more urgently, it must offer a congenial atmosphere in which the residents can carry on the activities of daily living which are so important to the senior citizens.

A unique establishment within the Daughters of Miriam community is the sheltered workshop. In effect, this is a small self-contained industry, the purpose of which is to provide occupational therapy for many of the aged residents. An average of more than 50 of them work here 4 hours a day—2 hours in the morning and 2 hours in the afternoon—on simple assembly jobs for contracting commercial companies. The workshop is licensed by the U.S. Department of Labor and workers are paid at rates approved by the Department; but more important, the participants are given the self-assurance that comes with still being able to do useful work and to make an independent contribution toward their own maintenance. In 1970 residents of the center worked over 46,000 hours in the workshop and completed contracts that accounted for an income of over $43,000, making the workshop almost self-supporting financially.

According to their capabilities and interests, residents take part in a broad variety of daily living and social activities—arts and crafts in special rooms or in rooms on the infirmary floors; cooking and baking programs; bingo games; watching television; relaxing in the solarium overlooking the busy Garden State Parkway; and walking or visiting with friends in the gardens. Groups such as the Friendship Club of the Clifton Jewish Center come in to entertain. Parties are held in the auditorium for residents on their special anniversaries. Cookouts and picnics in the Center grounds are regular features of the summer months. Frequent theater tours to the city are arranged for the more active residents.

Considerable time is given, of course, to therapy sessions and medical checkups. A qualified staff of over 200 people, including a resident and attending physicians are available 24 hours per day, 365 days a year. Also on the staff are a psychiatrist, physiotherapist, pharmacist, medical technicians, registered graduate and licensed practical nurses, nurses' aides, and orderlies. Over half of the members of the staff are specialists in medical and nursing care. The full program of intensive care for residents is rounded out by specialists in podiatry, optometry, dental, and physical therapy.

National recognition and heartiest congratulations are extended to the Board of Trustees of the Daughters of Miriam Center for the Aged which is comprised of business and professional men who are well known for their commitment to the cause of the aged and for their intelligent dedication and direction in achieving the goals and purposes of the center. Members of the board are as follows:

Oscar Berman, senior vice president; Dr. Solomon Geld, executive vice president; Alexander Rosenthal, vice president; Mrs. Samuel R. Deich, vice president; Leonard Kohl, vice president; Arnold Goodman, treasurer; Joel Steiger, secretary; Arthur Bodner, recording secretary.

A special salute is accorded to Dr. Solomon Geld, the executive vice president and director, who has been with the Daughters of Miriam since 1939, a year after he arrived in the United States from Germany where he had been most active in community affairs as a rabbi, teacher, and social worker. He has provided outstanding public service over these many years and served with distinction in achieving excellence in the field of care for the aged.

We applaud the Daughters of Miriam on their exemplary purposes and goals in helping our senior citizens to maintain their dignity and help find the happiness and independence in their golden years that they so richly deserve. Our heartiest congratulations and best wishes are extended the Daughters of Miriam on their fiftieth anniversary for their continued good works and success in all of their future endeavors.

LYMAN AND ANNE BREWSTER OF MONTANA

HON. JOHN MELCHER

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. Speaker, early in the 1950's as a newly graduated veterinarian in Forsyth, Mont., I acquired as a client a fine couple, Lyman and Anne Brewster, operators of a well-run ranch near Birney, Mont. For a number of years I enjoyed the privilege of treating any of their cattle that needed veterinary service and participated with Lyman and Anne Brewster in setting up and following out preventive veterinary medicine for their herd on their ranch.

Lyman was chairman of the Montana Livestock Commission and Livestock Sanitary Board at the time, on which he served for 18 years as a member or chairman. His thinking and beliefs as to controlling and preventing livestock diseases were progressive and practical. X Diamond Bar cattle of Lyman and Anne's were a fine commercial herd of Herefords that reflected years of good breeding and selection and that attracted great interest from buyers for sales of the yearling steers and heifers each fall.

Their hospitality whether at the main ranch headquarters on Tongue River or at summer camp at the head of Muddy Creek was continually inviting for all the neighbors, the many acquaintances and associates of the Brewsters. I have a particular fondness, as you may have gathered, Mr. Speaker, for Lyman and Anne Brewster, and I was, therefore, greatly interested in an article by Ray Ozmon in a recent edition of the Great Falls Tribune describing in some detail the work of Lyman Brewster in the past in a varied and most intriguing career. The article is more about Lyman than Anne, but you can be sure that she has been a true partner to her notable husband.

Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD today this lively and informative article telling of the accomplishments of the Brewsters, Montanans who have contributed a great deal to the livestock industry as we continually attempt to eradicate and to prevent diseases:

A FRESH OUTLOOK

(By Ray Ozmon)

Lyman and Anne Brewster have come out of retirement and are ranching again.

But now there are none of the headaches and uncertainties of running a 70,000-acre operation; none of the pressures and exasperations of fighting the battles for livestock-disease control and brand inspection on the Livestock Sanitary Board. There are no more trips to Washington, D.C., to lobby for livestock interests. There's none of the excitement of a Sunday-afternoon rodeo at Ashland, Busby or Miles City.

Today the Brewsters are enjoying the tranquil, pastoral life at the Two Dot Land and Livestock Co. south of Harlowton. Anne cooks for the ranch crew. Lyman, 71, who has a law degree from the University of Michigan and traces his lineage back to Elder William Brewster, who came over on the Mayflower, is the cowboy. He spends his days riding among the 800-head herd of brood cows checking for calving problems and bunching the herd at feeding time.

It was an unusual set of circumstances that brought Lyman and Anne to the Two Dot. Warren Jones, who with his uncle Robert Baxter owns the ranch, needed a cook. To avoid a flood of applicants he ran a blind ad in the Billings Gazette. He received 18 replies, one of which was from an unsigned applicant in Red Lodge.

FOLLOWED UP BLIND REPLY

It was explained that she and her husband were retired from ranching and, because they were well-known in livestock circles, they would like to know for whom they would be working. Jones followed up the blind reply and not only did he get a good, dependable cook but he got one helluva cowboy too.

Jones offered Brewster the use of a jeep for checking on the cattle, but he preferred a saddle horse. Rusty, an 18-year-old sorrel, was brought out of retirement, too, and together they make an unbeatable combination.

Lyman thinks like an old cow. He knows what they are going to do before they do it. He has the "springers" spotted and knows all the brush patches where they are likely to hide out with their calves.

Rusty has been used around cattle all his life and was a former rodeo pickup horse. He knows there's an experienced rider in the saddle and anticipates Brewster's every command.

The cattle industry has produced many giants who controlled kingdom-sized holdings and amassed huge fortunes through the development and exploitation of western range resources, but few have had a more colorful career or left a more indelible mark than has Lyman Brewster.

Although he has never practiced law, he has used his legal background as the people's advocate. Both producers of livestock and consumers of livestock products have benefitted.

He's no self-made man. Brewster can pinpoint events in his youth that affected his adult life, and he speaks almost reverently of the men who shaped his thinking and influenced his values.

VICTIM OF ACCIDENT

When a 1½-year-old infant on the home ranch, the Quarter Circle U at Birney, Brewster was the victim of a tragic accident. He fell into a bucket of hot ashes. He barely survived the 60-mile horse-and-buggy trip to a doctor in Sheridan, Wyo. As a result of the accident, his right hand was almost totally destroyed and his left was badly deformed.

Because of this he was always treated like an invalid and was never allowed to do any meaningful work around the ranch. "It drove me nuts to always have someone doing things for me," he said.

So he spent his time riding horses. Brewster was a natural. "I found I could ride horses that no one else could handle," he said. He broke wild horses and bucked out the spoiled outlaws. A crooked left arm that resulted from a fall off the roof of a shed when he was 7 made it easier to hang on and stay in the saddle of a bucking bronc.

The rodeo arena was a natural outlet for his talents. Among old-timers the name Lyman Brewster is as well-known as is Larry Mahan, Benny Reynolds, Larry Cane or Shawn Davis to present-day rodeo fans.

Brewster is modest about his bronc-busting achievements. "On cattle roundups we rode all day on horses that might buck at any time and leave you stranded out on the range. In a rodeo you got it all your own way. The horse is in a chute and you can get set in the saddle. And, what the hell, you only have to stay with him for 10 seconds. My hardest falls were back in the hills, not in a rodeo," he says.

PUT ON PERFORMANCE

At a rodeo on the Crow Indian Reservation Brewster put on a performance they're still talking about. The Crows had a horse named High School that was thought to be impossible to ride. Instead of a small fenced area like today's arenas, the rodeo was held on the infield of a half-mile racetrack. No pickup riders were used.

"High School worked me over from one end of the arena to the other. He finally quit bucking and hung his head over the fence."

In 1926 at the Lodge Grass rodeo Brewster exploded out of the chute on a big, mean white horse. "All the cowpunchers and bronc fighters said it was the wildest ride they'd ever seen. I don't really know—I didn't see it," he said wryly.

Among Brewster's many boxes and albums of pictures is a torn snapshot of that famous ride. The photographer caught him at peak action—spurs in the horse's shoulders, that crooked left arm holding the bucking rein and his right arm high overhead. This classic action picture was the subject of a painting by Helena artist Shorty Shope.

When 12 years old, Brewster was sent back east for skin grafts on his hands. His father, George Brewster, died as a result of long exposure to the elements when he went to Sheridan, Wyo., to pick him up.

Even though income from the ranch was uncertain, Brewster's mother, Grace, insisted that her boys, Lyman, Warren and Burton, have the advantages of an education at eastern universities. Lyman attended Cornell University in New York from 1919 to 1922. This was made possible largely from money he won in rodeos, from buying and selling cattle and additional income from eastern dudes who paid good money for the experience of vacationing on a working cattle ranch.

A guest at the ranch one summer was George W. Shurman, a law partner of Charles Evans Hughes, who became chief justice of the United States Supreme Court. Shurman was the father of friends at Cornell.

GUEST IMPRESSED

He was impressed with Brewster. He told him that, if he were interested in a legal career, he'd see to it that he was admitted to the University of Michigan, one of the top law schools in the country. And when he was graduated there would be a place for him in the New York law firm.

At a law school where only one out of three graduate, Brewster knew he didn't have a chance of being admitted with grades of Cs and Ds.

"At Cornell I thought I knew more than the instructors. They couldn't teach me anything," he said.

Even if he could get into Michigan with Shurman's influence, he didn't want to have to overcome the handicap of a bad academic record. He transferred to the University of Montana at Missoula and hit the books, graduating with a BA in 1924 near the top of the class. To earn money for law school, Brewster taught school for a year at Birney and entered every rodeo in the country.

He breezed through Michigan, then returned to Montana and passed the bar exam with the highest score in the history of the state.

Rather than accept Shurman's invitation to join his law firm, Brewster took a position for three years as legal advisor to the Montana Senate, where he helped draft legislation.

In 1932 Brewster went to Alaska as special agent of the secretary of interior for the reindeer industry. He was able to get an act through congress that brought Eskimo reindeer herds under the Taylor Grazing Act, and he got the government to purchase reindeer herds from white settlers and return them to the natives.

"I was a one-man lobby for an unknown cause," he said.

His first appointment to the Montana Livestock Commission and the Livestock Sanitary Board was made by Gov. Sam Ford in 1941. Reappointments by Gov. John Bonner and Gov. J. Hugo Aronson gave him a total of 18 years in these vital posts.

These positions brought him in close association with such people as Dr. W. J. Butler, state veterinarian from 1913 to 1948, whose ideas on range management, livestock disease control and research "were 50 years ahead of his time."

"Without realizing it, I absorbed much of what he advocated," Brewster states.

Many hours were spent in conversation with Robert W. Lazear, manager of the Wyoming Hereford Ranch, discussing problems facing the livestock industry and how to set up the organization to solve them.

He speaks with affection for Dr. Hadley Marsh of Montana State University and his wife, Jesse, and the "intellectual stimulation" he received from them.

CATALYTIC AGENT

Rather than an originator, Brewster says he was "the catalytic agent for the ideas and concepts of others."

"I had the ability to pick up other people's ideas and get the support needed to put them into action.

"I'm not a brave man," he continues, "I take only calculated risks. If I don't think I can win a fight, I won't get into it. And I'm a damn poor loser."

The drive and dedication he brought to the work of the Livestock Sanitary Board are reflections of his deep convictions. To Brewster animal disease control is a two-way road—protecting the health of consumers by providing them with meat from healthy, disease-free animals and protecting livestock producers from financial losses that result from animal diseases.

More than 100 animal diseases are transferrable to humans, Brewster says. Much death and illness is an indirect result of animal disease.

"Research into the eradication and control of animal disease is as important as doctors and hospitals. By stopping disease at the source, much of this human breakage can be prevented," he says.

And because Brewster had experienced lean years at the Quarter Circle U, when calf crops were reduced to less than 50 per cent because of disease, he knew the importance of prevention and control to the rancher.

DISEASE COSTLY

He points out that "disease costs the livestock industry $50 million a year in aborted calves, dry cows and reduced milk and meat production.

"You can't have a stable economy unless farms and ranches are healthy and profitable. Dead cattle don't pay for schools and roads," he says.

In addition to serving 18 years on the Montana Livestock Sanitary Board, Brewster's public-service career includes membership on the advisory board of Montana State University and the U.S. Department of Agriculture Commission on Hoof and Mouth Disease. He served as president of the National Livestock Brand Conference in 1954, and he was chairman of the Brand and Theft Committee of the American National Cattlemen's Association for five years.

DEVASTATING EFFECT

It would be difficult to single out any one program he supported as being more significant than another. His fight to get an effective brucellosis-control program enacted, not only saved the livestock industry millions of dollars and undoubtedly prevented countless people from contracting the disease, but the battle had an almost devastating effect on him personally.

Brucellosis causes undulant fever in humans. It is contracted by direct contact with infected animals or by consumption of milk or meat from infected animals.

Calf losses in a herd that's infected with brucellosis can be disastrous. Cows will either be sterile or they will abort their calves at about the sixth month of pregnancy. Ranchers with infected herds would find a hairless fetus in the pasture and would shrug it off by saying the cow "slipped her calf."

Regulatory work is seldom popular. Some ranchers don't understand the need for it. Many look upon it as an unnecessary expense and an infringement on their rights and freedoms. The disease can be detected by blood test, but cattlemen asked. "How can you trace every infected cow in the country." The American National Cattlemen's Association opposed efforts to eradicate the disease. Proposals to test cattle were ridiculed as "bloodletting."

POWERS OF PERSUASION

Brewster used his considerable powers of persuasion to enlist the support of the U.S. Livestock Sanitary Association. In 1952 he journeyed to Seattle to address the convention of the U.S. Veterinary Medical Association and was successful in gaining its support.

Through Jack Milburn, who was manager of the N Bar Angus Ranch at Grass Range and president of the American National Cattlemen's Association, he was finally able to get the organization to support a brucellosis-control program as part of its national policy.

Since it was impossible to test every cow in the country, a back-tagging system was devised so old cows being sent to slaughter could be traced back to their ranch. If these cows test positive, authorities could quarantine the infected herd.

More than 27,000 individual ownerships have been tested in Montana since inception of the back-tagging program. Brewster says. He figures there probably aren't more than four or five infected herds in the state. "They're all under quarantine. We got 'em bottled up so they can't wiggle."

PROGRAM SET PATTERN

The program instituted in Montana for the control and eradication of brucellosis set the pattern throughout the nation.

While Brewster won the battle for brucellosis control, he was, in effect a casualty of that battle. With his legal training and background as a Washington lobbyist and legislative advisor, he knew how to use and manipulate power. In the use of that power, he created enemies.

It was Elder William Brewster, who left England with a price on his head, who drew up the Mayflower Compact that gave the first settlers the semblance of a government in the new world. Lyman says his ancestor "shoved it down their throats. Sign it or go back to England," he told them.

"Maybe that's where I get my mean disposition," he speculates.

Among the enemies he created were a group of influential Texas cattlemen. In 1947 he became the owner and operator of the X Diamond Bar, which included 70,000 acres of leased land. When the lease was up for renewal in 1957, the Texans bid it up to an unreasonable figure he couldn't possibly match. With 70,000 acres cut from his spread, he had no choice but to liquidate; 2,200 head of cattle and all his horses and machinery were sold in a crash sale.

At age 57, Lyman Brewster was in forced retirement.

"I couldn't even get a job as a ranch manager. I was too controversial. No one would touch me," he explains.

He and Anne moved to Billings where he made a half-hearted effort to sell real estate and insurance. "I was miserable. Hated every minute of it," he says. In 1964 he ran for the U.S. Senate on the Republican ticket but was defeated in the primary. In recent years they lived in Red Lodge where there wasn't anything to do but reflect on the past.

FRESH OUTLOOK

Working as a ranch hand has given Brewster a fresh outlook. There are still flashes of the intense, dedicated crusader, but now his principal concern is looking after the cows and calves, not fighting causes.

"This is a natural way to live. I can always find something to do and this outfit really knows what they're doing. Can't see a thing here I'd do differently," he says.

He's doing a little writing in his leisure time. Being considered for publication is a hairy yarn of the range wars between sheep and cattle interests when 3,000 head of sheep were slaughtered. Now that everyone involved in the raid is dead, the story can be told and names of the participants can be revealed.

Brewster gives the impression of being at peace with himself, a man who is enjoying working in the industry he helped shape.

"We got the laws we needed. Our house is in good order," he says.

HALE BOGGS OPENS A NEW SERIES OF HEARINGS ON U.S. FOREIGN ECONOMIC POLICY FOR THE 1970'S

HON. JOHN J. McFALL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader, the gentleman from Louisiana

(Mr. BOGGS), Thursday opened a new series of hearings on U.S. foreign economic policy for the 1970's in his role as chairman of the Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy of the Joint Economic Committee.

In his opening statement Mr. BOGGS outlined the problems our Nation faces today in regards to world trade and our domestic economy and he set the tone of what our response should be.

The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BOGGS) has made an excellent statement and I believe it bears the attention of all the Members of the House:

REMARKS BY HOUSE MAJORITY LEADER HALE BOGGS

Over the past eighteen months, members of this Subcommittee have been conducting hearings aimed at developing broad understanding of factors involved in shaping a foreign economic policy appropriate to—and adequate for—the 1970's.

The hearings have been productive, useful and constructive.

While I would not attempt to speak for any member of this Subcommittee, I believe it is fair to say that during this period a new sense of urgency has grown among us all regarding the subject of these continuing studies.

It is increasingly clear that the United States is in desperate need of a policy addressed to the realities of the last quarter of the Twentieth Century.

The world economy is changing.

The position of the United States with relation to that economy is changing as well.

Unless and until we evolve policy responsive to the realities of such change, we are—and we shall continue to be—vulnerable to the instabilities of an increasingly instable world economy.

To speak in such terms, though, is to deal in understatement.

In a very real sense, foreign economic policy is presently moving beyond the traditional confines of our historic dialogue and debate. The concerns of special interests are being overridden by the concerns of national interests. For the truth of these times—and the times we can foresee ahead—is that our success or failure domestically will increasingly be influenced by our wisdom or folly internationally in regard to economic policy.

Furthermore, we recognize that disequilibrium in balance-of-payments—whether through persistent deficits or surpluses—is widespread, yet there is little evidence of the will to take those steps necessary to correct such conditions to the benefit of both deficit and surplus countries.

Facing these deepening and broadening challenges, it is clear that we need a policy. The day has passed when the United States can make international economic policy alone. Yet the time has not yet come when we are without effective influence. If we are to exert our influence wisely and well, we must have a policy—a policy which affords us a clear understanding of our goals and purposes, a clear guide as to how we are to reach those goals and a clear conception of how we are to cope with the problems which must inevitably arise along the way.

Half measures will not do. Expediencies and compromises will not do. Nor will it suffice to rely on rehashing the response of a remote past.

The world economy is taking giant steps in the 1970's.

We who are responsible for national policy must match those strides in our thinking and in our action.

We need a major assault on trade barriers of every kind to bring non-discrimination and equality of treatment to trade among all nations.

We need basic reform of the international monetary system so adjustments can take place when necessary without prejudicing the movement of trade and capital or the ability of countries to maintain economic growth and full employment at home.

We need to improve cooperation and consultation among countries on a host of economic issues that we share in common.

We need, most importantly, to rekindle a sense of confidence and purpose in our own country.

The first priority of our foreign economic policy must be to restore vigorous growth and progress in our own economy. Not only would a vigorous economy at home allay fears about jobs and income and ease adjustment to our continuing change, but it would also serve our international position by increasing productivity, reducing inflation and enhancing our vital competitive position in the markets of the world.

Underlying this is the reality that we in the United States are crossing a watershed in our relations with the world. Over the past twenty-five years, since the end of World War II, our American interests abroad have flowed primarily to concerns for national security. Such concerns, of course, are constant and continuing. But we are clearly moving into a very different world with a very different variety of concerns and challenges. In that world ahead, economic policy will require of us all the same imagination, initiative, effort and consuming attention which our security policies have demanded of us over the quarter-century past.

In an age of economic interdependence, the well-being of our families, the financial security of our workers, the promise of our young, the strength of our institutions and the fulfillment of our social commitments to all our people will rest—and do already rest—upon the maturity, sophistication, tough-mindedness and realism of our foreign economic policy. Unless we pursue such a goal for our policy, the tragic costs of the Cold War may well be compounded and multiplied many times over by still greater costs of unending global Economic Wars.

Against this stern truth, we must weigh the undeniable fact that we do not have—and, since completion of the Kennedy Round in 1967, have not had—a meaningful trade policy.

The absence of such policy is an open invitation to having policy imposed upon us by default.

Already the evidences of disarray suggest this is the direction of our drift.

In recent years, and even in recent months and weeks, we have seen the emergence of new forces and new factors of greatest magnitude.

We have seen Japan develop as an economic super-power which, as yet, has not found a sure and settled place in the world system. We see the European community on the brink of significant enlargement. We recognize in the European developments and in other policies a basis for real concern about the breakdown of the world economy into discriminatory and divisive trading blocs.

But there is more.

As we in the United States have lowered our tariffs and become an economy open to trade, others have multiplied their non-tariff barriers and denied fair access to our exports, particularly in fields such as agriculture.

I am not at all pessimistic. Even since the start of our series of hearings in December 1969 there has been a great awakening to these realities and a strong surge of interest in fashioning an adequate national response. I can only believe that this will continue and grow and benefit the nation in the process.

But I do believe that we must bring one thing home to ourselves and those we serve. Since the beginning of America's modern world role, two decades ago, international relations have been dominated by concerns for national security. Today we are in a new era in which foreign economic policy is—and will and put it to the service of our national relations.

We shall succeed or we shall fail in the last quarter of this century by the speed and certainty with which we grasp this change and put it to the service of our national interests.

No one can responsibly promise that the future will be easy, the answers quick or the results sure. On the contrary, as a matter of simple honesty, one of the responsibilities of national leadership during this decade may well be to alert the American people that the demands of this transition may be burdensome, the changes not always welcome, the ends not always comfortable. For this generation of Americans, the age of easy living is ending.

That relates to the purpose of the hearings we begin today.

A wise response by the nation inevitably rests on the wisdom and vigor and courage of our executive leadership in this field. I am encouraged by recent initiatives of the President, particularly in establishing a consultative body within the OECD to sort out the growing problems and the earlier step of setting up within the White House the Council on International Economic Policies to develop and coordinate a coherent policy strategy for the nation.

I am hopeful that the witnesses of the Administration, appearing before us in these sessions, will convey the sense of urgency which we here on Capitol Hill increasingly feel about this sector of the national interest.

WMAL RADIO EDITORIALS SUPPORT POLICE LEGISLATION

HON. LAWRENCE J. HOGAN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 24, 1971

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Speaker, in these trying times, it has become clear that there are many problems with which America must grapple. In this regard, it should be apparent that among those measures which may assist in the resolution of our difficulties is a respect for, and an appreciation of, the law and those sincere, diligent, and unswerving public officials who help to insure that the law is maintained and upheld.

Radio station WMAL has recently broadcast editorial opinions which eloquently voice the station's support and gratitude for the work of our law enforcement personnel. I congratulate and commend WMAL for its thoughtful statements.

Two of these editorials concern issues on which I have introduced legislation: H.R. 7402—to make the unlawful assault on law enforcement personnel a Federal offense; and H.R. 8530—to provide for overtime pay without limitation for officers and members of the Metropolitan Police Department, the Park Police and the Executive Protective Service in cases of serious civil disturbance and natural disaster—if approved, this bill would provide retroactive overtime pay for those who served extra hours during the recent May Day demonstrations.

I include these three WMAL editorials at this point in the RECORD for my colleagues' perusal:

POLICEMEN—A NATIONAL CONCERN

The plight of law enforcement officers in America is now a national scandal.

In Washington this year, four policemen have been shot to death. . . . double the number for all of 1970. And almost daily there are reports of assaults against officers here and elsewhere.

Our police departments are local agencies. . . . but our policemen's welfare is a legitimate matter of national concern. President Nixon has taken a proper initiative in calling a meeting Thursday of top police chiefs and officials of the Justice Department to see what the federal government can do.

An attack upon a law enforcement officer should be made a federal offense. . . . one that will bring speedy investigation by the FBI and other federal agencies . . . Penalties should be severe. A criminal who is capable of shooting or assaulting an armed officer of the law poses a special threat to society . . . and should be treated accordingly.

THANKS

The police deserve the thanks of every citizen for the job they do. Day after day, policemen risk their lives to protect others. But how many people have ever taken a moment to express thanks to the average policeman?

The residents of the Washington area have particular reason to praise the police . . . for their magnificent work during demonstrations. In recognition of their efforts, Police Chief Jerry Wilson was honored this week by the Touchdown Club. Here was his response:

"I don't deserve the honor. I'm only responsible for the things that went wrong. The men are responsible for the things that went right. If you want to do honor for the way things were done during Mayweek, the next policeman you meet on the street, you shake his hand."

If Chief Wilson's suggestion is followed by everybody who backs the D.C. Police handling of the Mayday disruptions, the police literally would have their hands full. It may not be a handshake—maybe just a smile, a wave or a thank-you—but let the police know they're appreciated. Thanks for a tough job well done.

DISRUPTING THE CAPITAL: V

President Nixon's defense of the Washington Police Department's Mayday tactics is welcome news to anyone who lives and works in this bullseye city.

Ever since Mayday, the second guessers have held the publicity spotlight with their critical remarks about police and court procedures.

And, as often happens, the essentials of the case have been obscured. What is central to the discussion of Mayday is that the police were facing a band of well-organized, determined insurgents capable of closing down the city and the government . . . capable, they showed us, of violent and dangerous behavior . . . and capable of doing almost anything once they got control of the streets.

It is in the nature of our systems . . . with its presumption of innocence . . . that any arrest can be found unconstitutional in the courts. But that is a matter to be determined by judges after the crisis has past. The police must act while the mob is still at the gates. And no one has proposed an acceptable alternative to the tactic they chose.

SENATE—Monday, June 28, 1971

The Senate met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. ELLENDER).

Eternal God, Father of our spirits, we thank Thee for this quiet moment at the beginning of a new week. In this hushed and sacred time, wilt Thou separate our thoughts from all other thoughts that we may draw close to Thee and to one another. May our spirits be in tune with Thy spirit and our wills in harmony with Thy will, for Thy name's sake. Amen.
