

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—PERSONS EMPLOYED.

LETTER

FROM

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,

TRANSMITTING

The information required by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 16th July last, respecting the number, duties, and compensation of all persons employed in the Post Office Department, &c.

MARCH 31, 1842.

Referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, March 31, 1842.

SIR: The resolution of the House of Representatives adopted July 16, 1841, did not come under my notice until the 22d of November last, when orders were immediately given to procure and embody the information which would enable me to respond to them at an early day of the present session of Congress, but the incessant accumulation and pressure of business upon the Department have delayed my answer longer than I desired.

The first of these resolutions requires the Postmaster General to report the number of persons employed, directly or indirectly, in the service of the Department, either in or out of Washington city. It also requires him to report the duties required by law, and performed by all such persons; what portion of their time is required in the performance of such duties; what is their compensation, severally; and what reform and retrenchment may be reasonable and practicable in diminishing the number of persons so employed.

This resolution throws the persons in the service of the Post Office Department into two divisions—those employed out of Washington city, and those employed within it.

Those employed out of the city comprehend the following classes:

1. Special agents.
2. Postmasters.
3. Mail contractors.
4. Mail agents on railway cars.

To the preceding four classes, who are all directly connected with the Department, may be added others, whose connexion with it is indirect, viz: Assistant postmasters, clerks in post offices, letter carriers, mail stage drivers, and mail carriers, printers of post office blanks, and manufacturers of mail bags. But as the Department has no means of ascertaining the number of all these persons, and as they are not presumed to have been within the intent of the resolution, I proceed, without further notice of them, to make such remarks upon the classes first named as the requirements of the resolution seem to demand.

1. The duties of the special agents are various, and are attended with much labor and responsibility. It is especially their business to examine post offices, give instructions to postmasters, investigate all cases of depredation upon the mails, give directions to mail contractors, see that they faithfully perform their contracts, and to take all lawful measures deemed necessary to correct errors and abuses in the mail establishment. These duties and the correspondence they induce employ all the time not necessarily occupied by them in travelling upon public business. Their present compensation is twelve hundred dollars per annum, with the addition of two dollars and twenty-five cents a day, and the cost of their transportation while actually employed. These agents were originally seven in number, at a compensation of sixteen hundred dollars; but, soon after entering upon the administration of the Department, I found it necessary to increase their number to ten, and therefore reduced the compensation to $1,200 per annum.

2. The duties of postmasters are fixed by law, and by the regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General; the time occupied in the performance of their several duties varies according to the greater or less importance of their respective post offices. The name and compensation of each postmaster, as well as the nett revenue derived from each post office in the United States, are stated in the Biennial Register for 1841, to which I respectfully refer.

3. I would further state, that the Biennial Register contains the names of the mail contractors in the several States and Territories, with the compensation paid to each.

4. The mail agents on railway cars attend to the reception and delivery, at the end of their respective routes, of the mails transported thereupon; and also to receiving, assorting, making up, and delivering at the way offices, the mails destined for them, respectively. Their names are also stated in the Biennial Register, and their compensation.

In giving a statement of the number of persons in the service of the Department within the city of Washington, it may be most satisfactory to arrange them in accordance with the organization produced by the act of July 2, 1836. By that organization the Department was subdivided, for the convenience of its administration, into four bureaus, each having a distinct assignment of duties, and having at its head an officer charged by the Postmaster General with the immediate supervision and direction of the persons assigned to the performance of those duties. The bureaus referred to are designated as follows:

1. Contract office.
2. Appointment office.
3. Inspection office.
4. Miscellaneous bureau.

1. The contract office is under the immediate charge of the First Assistant Postmaster General, to whom are assigned the duties of arranging the connexions of the mails, adjusting their speed, fixing on the frequency of their trips, and the mode of conveyance; making out advertisements for mail service; receiving the bids and preparing them for the action of the Postmaster General; preparing forms of contracts, sending them out and causing them to be executed; examining and preparing for decision all propositions for changes in the mail service; fixing on the location of distributing post offices; giving distribution instructions, and directing the course of the mails; preparing the statistical tables of mail service for the annual report to the President and the annual reports to Congress of all bids and lettings, of all contracts executed, of all additional allowances and curtailments, and of all land and water mails otherwise ordered; reporting weekly to the Auditor and the inspection office all changes ordered in the service; ascertaining and reporting distances, on the calls of the accounting officers of the Government; investigating and reporting upon all special claims for mail service arising on applications to the Postmaster General, or on reference from the Auditor, or from Congress; and, generally, of conducting the correspondence and performing the acts necessary to put the mails in motion, and regulate their conveyance, speed, and connexion, and of preserving and reporting the record of the same.

In the discharge of the foregoing duties, the First Assistant Postmaster General is aided by the following persons, viz:

A principal clerk, (compensation $1,600,) who opens, reads, and distributes the letters addressed to the contract office; receives from the corresponding clerks the cases prepared for decision, revises them, and presents them, with the requisite written or verbal explanations, to the Postmaster General or the First Assistant Postmaster General. If the First Assistant Postmaster General be sick or necessarily absent, his general duties devolve on the principal clerk, and are performed by him.

A topographer (compensation $1,600) is employed in drawing diagrams exhibiting the post offices and post roads of the United States, and in ascertaining the geographical positions of all the new post offices established.

Six corresponding clerks, whose duty it is to take charge of all letters and communications relating to mail transportation, and to the general distribution of the mails; to changes of routes and schedules; claims for mail service, &c.; to brief all letters received, keeping a record of such as come from members of Congress; to investigate and present all facts connected with each case to the First Assistant Postmaster General or the principal clerk; to prepare the correspondence sent out in all except special cases; to keep an index of the decisions of the Postmaster General; to prepare advertisements for occasional lettings of mail routes; to file, in numerical order, all communications received, and to prepare statements, reports, &c., when called for. Compensation—five at $1,400, and one at $1,200.

Four route-book clerks, who record in a day book all decisions of the Postmaster General and First Assistant Postmaster General, whether affirmative or negative, affecting the contract service, and transfer to the route register all affirmative decisions; keep an index of the post offices in their respective sections, noting upon it all changes of name and locality, offices newly established, and offices discontinued; prepare notices to the postmasters at the end of each route, and to the contractor, of the changes thereon; keep an alphabetical list of mail contractors, with their several residences, and the numbers of the routes for which they have contracted; ascertain and record the distances between the successive offices upon each route, together with the county and State in which they are respectively situated, and prepare statements and reports when required. Compensation, $1,200.

One miscellaneous clerk, who prepares, annually, the tabular statement exhibiting the number of miles the mails are carried on railroads and in steamboats, in coaches and stages, in sulkies and on horseback; prepares the report for Congress of all land and water mails established or ordered within the year, other than those put under contract at the regular lettings; keeps the file of miscellaneous letters belonging to the contract office; makes indexes to the mail routes; assists at the annual lettings of mail contracts, and attends to the miscellaneous business of the office. Compensation, $1,200.

One report clerk, who prepares reports, weekly, to the Auditor, of all affirmative orders or decisions of the Postmaster General reducing or increasing the mail service, all allowances for temporary service, and all changes of pay on the contracts, examining all the calculations arising out of changes in the rates of pay; he prepares reports, weekly, to the Third Assistant Postmaster General, of all the decisions, orders, and changes, above stated, embracing also the changes of schedules, and keeps a journal of all curtailments and allowances; he also keeps a book showing separately the curtailments and allowances made in each section. Compensation, $1,200.

Two contract clerks, who prepare the contracts and transmit them to be executed by the contractors; report them to the Auditor when executed; make all entries on them affecting the route, schedule, or pay; make all transfers of contracts; keep registers and files of all contracts, and prepare the report to Congress of all contracts executed within the year. Compensation, $1,200.

Two letter-book clerks, who record and send out all communications from the contract office, and do such other copying as is from time to time required. Compensation, $1,000.

2. The appointment office is under the immediate charge of the Second Assistant Postmaster General. The duties of this officer involve a superintendence of all business relating to the establishment and discontinuance of post offices; changes of site and names; appointments and removals of postmasters, giving them instructions in their duties under the laws and regulations of the Postmaster General; furnishing them with blanks and stamps; and, generally, of all such matters as are necessary to prepare them for the proper management, reception, and delivery of the mails of the United States. To aid him in these duties, the following persons are assigned to the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, viz:

A principal clerk, (at a compensation of $1,600,) who, under the general direction of the Second Assistant, supervises the business of the office; prepares correspondence on special cases; reports weekly to the Auditor, and to the contract and inspection offices, all post office changes, files and preserves the bonds and oaths of postmasters appointed by the President and Senate, keeps a record of them, and also of all letter carriers in the cities. He is also agent for purchasing stationery for the use of the Department.

Four corresponding clerks (three of whom receive a compensation of $1,400, and the fourth $1,200) prepare the correspondence with postmasters and all others, touching the proper administration of each post office; procure all information preparatory to the establishment or discontinuance of post offices; brief and file in their proper places all letters and papers received, and make up all cases for appointments, new offices, discontinuances, &c., to be presented to the Second Assistant or his principal clerk, for the decision of the Postmaster General.

Two bond and register clerks (compensation $1,200) prepare and send out letters of appointment, with the requisite bonds and oaths; enter new offices, new appointments, changes, &c., on the bond books; return imperfect bonds for correction; endorse and file bonds, duly executed; and prepare, record, and transmit postmasters' commissions.

One letter-book clerk, who records the correspondence of the office, prepares copies of papers when required, and performs miscellaneous duties. Compensation, $1,000.

3. The inspection office is under the charge of the Third Assistant Postmaster General, whose duty it is to see that all postmasters at the beginning and ends of routes, and all others who may be directed by the Postmaster General, keep and return, according to instructions, registers of the exact time of the arrival and departure of the mails; that blank registers are sent to all postmasters, and that they are kept constantly advised of the true time of arrival and departure, according to the schedule as arranged in the contract; that all registers returned by postmasters are examined; all delinquencies of contractors, appearing on the face of such registers or otherwise, duly noted, and the cases arising out of them made up and prepared for the action of the Postmaster General. It is also his duty to sign, quarterly, the certificates for the pay of contractors, and to advise the Auditor of all deductions therefrom, for whatever cause; to maintain a direct correspondence with ten special agents and eighteen mail agents; to grant certificates for the pay of the latter; to give them instructions as to their duty; report them, for defalcations in the performance of it, to the Postmaster General; and, as far as his capacity and the force at his command will enable him, to do all that may have a tendency to enforce a regular and exact performance of their stipulations on the part of contractors.

The duty of providing and sending out mail bags, and mail locks and keys, and of answering to all demands for these articles, has been transferred to this, from the contract office.

In the discharge of the foregoing duties, the Third Assistant Postmaster General is aided by the following persons, viz:

A principal clerk, (at a compensation of $1600,) who reads and distributes among the clerks, daily, the letters addressed to this office; enters in the hand books of the different clerks all orders originating in the contract office affecting the service or pay of contractors; notes the changes and additions reported from the appointment office; makes the propositions on all cases to be presented to the Postmaster General, for fines, deductions, or suspensions of pay; prepares the annual report to Congress of all fines imposed and deductions made from the pay of contractors; attends to miscellaneous correspondence, and, in the absence of the Third Assistant Postmaster General, superintends the general business of the office.

Six clerks, to each of whom is assigned a section of the United States. It is their duty to notify to the postmasters at the ends of routes the schedules of the arrival and departure of the mails, and of their mode of conveyance according to contract; to see that the postmasters keep and return weekly and monthly registers, showing all failures to arrive and depart in contract time, as well as all deviations from the mode of service required by contract; to examine and compare all mail registers received, and record them alphabetically by States; to prepare reports of all failures, and enter them in a journal; to notify to each contractor all fines imposed and deductions made from his pay; to prepare, in ordinary cases, official letters requiring explanations from contractors for neglect of duty, for the signature of the Third Assistant; to render certificates, signed by him, to the Auditor, of service performed by the contractors, with a statement of all penalties imposed, at the end of each quarter; to make up the cases of failing contractors for a suspension of their pay, and for the removal of the same; to report all postmasters who have failed to return mail registers; to have all drivers and mail carriers sworn according to law, and to note all changes made in the contract office, affecting contractors, &c. Two of these clerks receive a compensation of $1,400, and the rest $1,200.

One clerk, (at a salary of $1,200,) who receives and keeps an account of mail bags, mail locks and keys, and sends them to postmasters throughout the United States who need them.

A letter-book clerk, (at a salary of $1,000,) who records all the letters and notices written and sent from this office.

4. The miscellaneous or fourth subdivision, like the three preceding ones, has the general superintendence of the Postmaster General, but is under the immediate supervision of the chief clerk of the Department, to whom is more especially assigned the management of its financial concerns. In this process he directs the payment of the quarterly balances reported by the Auditor to be due to about 2,500 mail contractors and other persons; keeps cash accounts with eleven banks, and with about eight hundred postmasters who are under orders to retain the proceeds of their offices to meet the drafts of the Postmaster General, and sees that about two hundred other postmasters deposite the proceeds of their offices, quarterly, at the points directed. He prepares, for the signature of the Postmaster General, all correspondence relating to the cash accounts, and such other correspondence as the Postmaster General specially directs; collects the information and details required to answer the calls of Congress; supervises, generally, the office of mail depredations, the receiving office, and dead-letter office; opens, reads, and distributes among the officers of the Department, for their attention, the correspondence addressed to the Department and to the Postmaster General. He is also the agent for the payment of the salaries and for the contingent fund of the Department. Besides the chief clerk, there are employed in this division eleven clerks, as follows:

One clerk, who keeps the appropriation accounts, registering under its proper head of appropriation each draft and warrant issued by the Postmaster General; furnishes a quarterly statement of the payments under each head; renders occasional assistance in corresponding, and performs miscellaneous duties for the Postmaster General and chief clerk. Salary, $1,400.

A clerk on mail depredations, who prepares for the signature of the Postmaster General all the correspondence arising from losses in the mails; keeps a register of each case of loss, and enters therein, from time to time, a history of all the proceedings; makes up each case, and transmits it to the proper agent, with such instructions as its nature seems to require; examines and presents to the Postmaster General, for his decision, all claims for services rendered in the pursuit and detection of depredators, or for investigating robberies committed; reports monthly, to the Postmaster General, the condition of the business, and performs all other duties incident to this branch of the public service. Compensation, $1,400.

A journal clerk, who keeps the journal of the Postmaster General, in which are recorded, daily, all his orders and affirmative decisions, including changes and modifications in mail contracts, appointments of postmasters, establishments and discontinuances of post offices, and changes of their names and sites; all fines imposed and deductions made from the pay of mail contractors, &c. Salary, $1,400.

A dead-letter clerk, who receives from the openers all dead letters containing articles of value, records them in an alphabetical register, noting the kind of money or article each letter contains; sends out all such letters to the writers thereof; sees that the postmasters to whom they are sent for delivery return the proper receipts for them, or the letters themselves, if the writers be not found; corresponds with all persons having business with this office; keeps charge of the dead-letter money, and deposits it in the general funds of the Department, when so directed by the Postmaster General. Compensation, $1,200.

A receiving clerk, who enters in an alphabetical register the amount of each postmaster's quarterly return, and the date of its reception at the Department; sends circulars to postmasters who fail to make their returns, and reports quarterly, to the appointment office, all such delinquents. He also prepares, for the information of the Postmaster General, at the end of each quarter, a statement comparing the revenue for the quarter just ended with the corresponding quarter of the preceding year, in all offices paying nett $100 and upwards. Compensation, $1,200.

A warrant clerk, who aids the chief clerk in his cash accounts, and draws all the warrants and drafts issued by the Postmaster General, exceeding in number 10,000 a year. Compensation, $1,200.

A clerk, who compares all the dead letters received with the dead-letter bills sent with them by the postmasters; calls on the postmasters who are delinquent to render bills with their dead letters; and, when dead letters are sent without the proper bill, prepares it as a voucher to the Auditor. Salary, $1,000.

A letter-book clerk, who records and sends out all the correspondence prepared in the miscellaneous division, and does such other copying as is required of him by the Postmaster General and chief clerk. Salary, $1,000.

A clerk, who receives, in the first instance, the quarterly returns of all the postmasters in the United States; opens them, takes out the dead letters and the post bills, sending the former to the examiner of the dead-letter bills, and the latter to their proper place of deposit, for the use of the mail depredation clerk. Salary, $1,000.

Two clerks, who open the dead letters after they have been compared with the dead-letter bills, and preserve and hand over to the clerk in charge of the dead-letter office all letters containing articles of value. Salary, $1,000 each.

In the appointment office one other clerk is employed in copying the bond books, in which are recorded, by counties, the names of all the post offices and postmasters in the United States. Compensation, $1,000.

There are also employed in the Department one messenger, (compensation $750,) and three assistant messengers, (compensation $350 each;)

two watchmen at $300 each, and one laborer at $300. These all perform such duties as usually attach to their respective stations.

In the foregoing statements it has been my purpose to give, as near as practicable, the whole number of persons, and their duties, at the date of the resolution to which this communication is an answer.

The following persons have been employed since that period, viz : Two local agents, (one at Cincinnati, Ohio, the other at Louisville, Kentucky,) whose duty it is to board all steamboats arriving at those places, and to obtain from the commanders, officers, and crews of said boats, all letters brought from their several places of departure or landing ; to pay two cents each for all letters so obtained ; to deliver said letters into the post office, to be rated with the legal postage, and to make to the Postmaster General weekly reports of their operations. These agents are of recent appointment, and the returns already received from them confirm me in the opinion that their services save to the Department not less than $125 a week, clear of expenses. Their compensation is $800 per annum.

There are also employed in the Department, on temporary and miscellaneous duties, four clerks, to whom compensation is allowed at the rate of $1,000 per annum. Two of these will be discharged in a few days, and the other two will be retained only so long as their aid is found indispensable to the public service.

A day watchman (compensation $360) is employed to take care of the building, direct persons having business in it to the officers they wish to visit, and to send out blanks to postmasters.

An assistant messenger is employed in searching for post bills, for the use of the clerk on mail depredations, and in doing the duties of porter and messenger in the dead-letter and receiving offices, where several cartloads of postmasters' returns are handled quarterly.

Three laborers distribute fuel through the building, and assist in cleansing it daily.

Although the foregoing specifications of the duties performed by the officers and clerks in the several bureaus of the Department may appear, to those not acquainted with the vast amount of details requiring attention, to be amply set forth, it is nevertheless due to them to say that all, or nearly all, of them perform other duties of minor importance, which occupy considerable portions of their time.

It is not practicable to state precisely "the time required for the performance of the duties assigned to each officer and clerk," because the amount of labor to be performed, except in a very few cases, is not spread equally over the whole year, but varies according to circumstances which cannot be obviated by timely arrangement or forecast. During the sessions of Congress, for instance, the labors of the Department are greatly increased by the calls of the respective Houses, committees, and of individual members, for information necessary to the purposes of legislation, or to answer applications from their constituents. The annual letting of mail contracts may be cited as another period of great labor. Many thousand bids or proposals have to be carefully read and folded, and a synopsis of the contents entered on each paper. Accompanying most of these are letters of guaranty and letters of recommendation, which undergo the same process. The bids, having been again carefully examined, are entered in the book of proposals, each under the appropriate number of the route bid for, and, the entries being completed, they are then ready for the decision of the Postmaster General. The process of letting the contracts and sending out the notices to the accepted bidders occupies several weeks, during all of which time not less than a dozen clerks are withdrawn from their current business, and necessarily required to work day and night. These facts are stated to show that the time required to perform the duties assigned to each individual must be greater or less, according to circumstances. Many of the officers and clerks (one-third at least) require an average of nine hours a day to keep up their work; and there are several who are actually employed twelve hours a day for more than half the year; while about one-half of the whole number do not require more than six or seven hours a day to perform the duties assigned them.

The resolution before referred to also requires the Postmaster General to state "what reform and retrenchment may be reasonable and practicable, in diminishing the number of persons so employed in the public service." In connexion with this branch of the subject, it is proper to state, that the force of the whole office having been found insufficient in 1837, Congress granted an appropriation for the employment of a topographer and seven additional clerks. In 1838, another clerk was employed to keep the appropriation accounts, making a topographer and eight clerks in all, for whom appropriations have been regularly made by Congress up to the 1st January last. No addition of a permanent nature has been made to the clerical force of the Department since 1838, although the labors of the office have been greatly increased, since that period, from various causes. Two of these I will state: 1. Congress added, in 1838, about 750 new mail routes to those then in operation, thereby increasing the amount of labor in the several bureaus of the Department to an extent requiring the services of at least five clerks. 2. The increase in the number of post offices, since the 1st July, 1838, as ascertained on the 1st January last, was 688. Hence it is evident, that if the force of the office in 1838 was barely sufficient to perform the labor then required, that force must now be inadequate, when the business of the Department has been augmented by the addition of the post offices and post routes above stated; for, although the revenue now may be no greater than it was then, there are, notwithstanding, several hundred more mail contractors, and 688 more postmasters in the service, with all of whom more or less correspondence must be maintained. It is obvious that the business of this Department must increase in proportion as the country advances in population, and new avenues of intercommunication are opened and improved. So far, then, from being able to recommend a reduction of the force employed in this Department, I am clearly of opinion that the public interest would suffer by a diminution of the number of clerks now employed. A reduction of post offices, in some sections of the country, may be made without detriment to the public service; and means are now employed to ascertain, as far as it is practicable, such offices, with a view to their discontinuance.

The only hope I can entertain of diminishing the expenditures of this Department is by a faithful administration of it, under existing laws.

In reply to the second resolution, I have the honor to transmit a statement, (marked A,) showing the names of postmasters removed from office, and of the persons appointed in their places, from the 4th March, 1829, to the 4th March, 1841, with the exception of a period of 258 days, from the 17th September, 1834, to the 17th July, 1835, when no record was kept showing the causes of the changes of postmasters, whether they arose from death, resignation, or removal. The files embracing that period were, as I learn, destroyed by fire at the burning of the Post Office building, in December, 1836.

I also transmit a similar statement, (marked B,) showing the names of the postmasters removed from office, and of the persons appointed in their places, between the 4th March and the 16th July, 1841, the date of the resolution.

I also submit another statement, (marked C,) showing the names of the officers and clerks removed from office from the 4th March, 1829, to the 4th March, 1841; and a similar statement, (marked D,) exhibiting the names of the officers and clerks removed from office between the 4th March, 1841, and the 16th July ensuing.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. A. WICKLIFFE.
