DIRECTORY OF HOMES FOR THE AGED IN THE UNITED STATES

THE Bureau of Labor Statistics has recently made a statistical study of the care of the aged in the United States, one part of which dealt with old people's homes. From all sources possible the bureau was able to obtain the names of some 1,300 such homes, and detailed data were obtained from more than 1,000 of these. The results of this study are embodied in Bulletin No. 489 of this bureau.

The directory which follows lists the homes in alphabetical order, by States, giving for those homes which furnished reports to the bureau the name of the organization which sponsors or controls the home and the various entrance requirements. No claim as to absolute completeness is made for this directory, and the bureau will appreciate being apprised of any home for old people not on the list.

The statement below shows the number of homes sponsored by each type of organization and the number from which detailed reports were received by the bureau:

	Total number	Number reporting
Federal Government (soldiers' and sailors' homes)-----	13	9
State governments:
Soldiers' homes-----	48	44
Other homes-----	2	2
Labor organizations-----	5	5
Religious organizations-----	526	444
Fraternal organizations-----	112	102
Nationality groups-----	37	33
Various organizations-----	39	38
Private groups-----	486	360
Total-----	11, 268	1, 037

Generally the first qualification required for entrance is that the applicant be a member of the sponsoring group. Thus, to gain admittance into the church homes the candidate must generally be a member of the denomination (or sometimes of the local church) which supports the home; if the home is one of a fraternal organization, he must belong to the order, etc. On the other hand some of these church groups are remarkably liberal in this respect, opening their doors to the poor and infirm aged of whatever creed. Only honorably discharged soldiers or sailors (and in some cases their wives or widows), of course, are eligible for residence in the soldiers' homes.

¹Revised lists from four States brought the final total of homes to 1,323, all of which are here listed.

Character qualifications are a very general requirement. Persons seeking admission to the home must be "respectable," "of good moral character," or "Christian character," or of good reputation. Several of the homes require references on this point. Temperate habits are a universal requirement.

Good health is also a general requisite, most of the homes requiring that the applicant be in fairly good health, taking into consideration his age, and free from mental, contagious, or malignant disease. In some instances a physician's certificate to this effect is required. This is done because the homes hesitate to admit persons who, from the outset, will need constant attention and nursing. In case of illness after entering the institution, the home usually provides the physician and nursing.

The old ladies seem to be much better provided for than the old men. Of the 1,034 homes reporting on this point, women are admitted to all but 59; in fact 328 homes admit women only. The 59 above noted are restricted to men. Inasmuch as separation of aged couples is a special hardship to those who have spent their lives together, it is interesting to see that 608 homes, or nearly 60 per cent, admit not only both sexes but married couples as well.

Sixty-five years is the minimum age of admission most commonly set, followed by 60 years. Two homes set the age limit as low as 45 years and one home as high as 80 years, while 250 have no fixed age limit.

In general these homes are maintained for aged persons either with no means or with incomes insufficient for their full support. Some of the homes, notably those of the labor and fraternal organizations, even declare that none shall be admitted except those who are indigent and unable, by reason of age, illness, or infirmity, to support themselves.

Nearly half of the homes (479) require no admission fee; 108 of these, however, are boarding homes of private groups or are miscellaneous organizations in which the resident pays a weekly or monthly charge for board. Even allowing for these, more than 35 per cent of the whole group require no money of the applicant. Of those which do require the payment of a specified amount at time of entrance, $500 is the most common sum required, but about 20 per cent charge less than this amount and about 40 per cent charge less than $1,000.

Since the home which admits life residents contracts in consideration for this fee to furnish the resident with board, lodging, and laundry for the rest of his life in all instances, and often as a matter of fact furnishes medical care, nursing, and burial, it is at once evident that the entrance fee by no means covers the actual cost to the home. The resident may live only one or two years after admission. On the other hand, he may live for 15 or 20 years. In order to cover some of the margin between fee income and obligations assumed, it is a general practice of these homes to require the incoming resident to transfer to the home all (or a specified part) of such income or property as he possesses and to bind himself to turn over also any of which he may become possessed in the future. In return the home may undertake to pay to the resident as long as he lives all or part of the income from such property or a certain rate of interest upon it.

Although charging an admission fee in ordinary cases, a large number of homes nevertheless accept persons without means, who fulfill all the other conditions, up to the limit of the resources of the home.

As would be expected, nationality requirements are more common among the homes maintained by the various nationality groups than among those sponsored by the other types of organizations, just as religious requirements are most common in the church homes. American citizenship is a fairly common requirement, and among the private benevolent homes residence in the city or county for a specified time.

The requirements as to personal property and clothing vary. Some homes require that the incoming resident be equipped with sufficient clothing to last for a year or two, and the fraternal homes quite generally require that clothing sufficient to last two years be furnished by the local lodge of which the resident was a member. Other homes furnish all clothing from the time the guest begins his stay at the home.
