HARPAL S. CHEEMA,

No. C 04-03869 SI

Plaintiff,

ORDER GRANTING PETITION FOR WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS

v.

MICHAEL CHERTOFF, SECRETARY,
DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

Harpal S. Cheema, an Indian national in custody of the Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”), filed this action on September 14, 2004, seeking a writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241. After reviewing the papers submitted, the Court GRANTS the petition for the reasons discussed below.

BACKGROUND¹

Petitioner Harpal Singh Cheema (“Cheema” or “petitioner”) is an Indian national and a baptized Sikh who has been in the custody of the Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”) and its predecessor, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (“INS”) since November 3, 1997. He is a “central figure” in the movement to establish an independent Sikh state, Khalistan, and was subjected to persecution in India as a result. He fled to Canada in August 1990, and came to the United States two months later, where he joined the Sikh Youth of America and participated in lobbying efforts for the cause of Sikh independence. He returned to India in February 1992, upon learning that his wife was ill, and was arrested and tortured upon his

1 arrival. He was released on bail three months later, and remained in hiding in India until May 1993, when he
2 and his wife arrived in New York City. They were paroled into the United States but not admitted. Both 3 petitioner and his wife applied for asylum, withholding of deportation, and relief under Article 3 of the U.N.
4 Convention Against Torture (“CAT”). An Immigration Judge (“IJ”) granted petitioner’s wife asylum and found
5 her eligible for withholding of deportation and relief under CAT. The IJ denied petitioner’s asylum application
6 and his application for withholding of deportation,² but granted the application for “deferral of removal”
7 (“DOR”) under the CAT.³ See Petition, Ex. 3 at 000510.

8 Both the DHS and petitioner appealed to the Board of Immigration Appeals (“BIA”), the DHS from 9 the withholding of deportation, and petitioner from the denial of asylum. The BIA issued a decision on May 10 8, 2002, in which it did not disturb the IJ’s findings concerning withholding of deportation and relief under CAT.
11 The BIA held that petitioner had engaged in terrorist activity by soliciting funds for “individuals and groups, i.e.
12 Bittu and Panjwar, that he knew or reasonably should have known or at least had reason to believe had 13 committed terrorist activity,” and had given material support to these individuals. Cheema, 383 F.3d at 853.
14 The BIA held that these findings barred withholding of deportation for petitioner, because giving financial 15 support to terrorists and facilitating telephone calls from India “necessarily endanger[ed] the lives, property and 16 welfare of United States citizens and compromise[d] the defense of the United States.” Id. The BIA held that 17 petitioner was “ineligible for all forms of relief except deferral of removal under the Convention Against 18 Torture.” Petition, Ex. 2 at 000018.

19 Petitioner appealed to the Ninth Circuit. In a published opinion, the Court of Appeals affirmed the 20 BIA’s finding that some of Cheema’s acts constituted terrorist activity, and affirmed the BIA’s determination
21 that full relief under CAT was barred. Cheema, 383 F.3d at 859. The Court of Appeals also affirmed the

22
23 ² The IJ denied petitioner asylum because she did not find him credible on the subject of his fundraising
24 activities in the United States between 1990 and 1992. Petitioner raised money in the United States for families
25 in the Punjab and for individuals injured while trying to cross between Pakistan and India, and he put potential 26 donors in contact with Daljit Singh Bittu, a leader of the militant wing of the Sikh Student Federation in India, whom petitioner knew as a student in India. He also took phone calls from individuals in India and connected them with Bittu in Pakistan. In addition, in 1995, while in the U.S., petitioner had contact with the head of the militant Khalistan Commando Force, Paramjit Singh Panjwar.

27 ³ Technically, the IJ ruled that Cheema was entitled to withholding of deportation but was barred from 28 this relief as a danger to the U.S. because he had engaged in terrorist activities. However, the IJ found that Cheema was subject to a discretionary waiver.

1 BIA's holding granting deferral of removal to Cheema. Id. The Court of Appeals remanded Cheema's
2 petitions for withholding of deportation and asylum, holding that the BIA's conclusion that petitioner was a
3 danger to national security was not supported by "substantial evidence." Id. at 857. The court criticized the 4 BIA's statement that it was "self-evident" that Cheema's activities "inherently involve this country in [foreign]
5 conflicts without our leave or agreement" and "create the very real possibility that such conflicts will be brought 6 home to us by their warring factions," because "[s]ubstantial evidence is required to link the finding of terrorist 7 activity affecting India with one of the criteria relating to our national security." Id. at 857-58. The Court of 8 Appeals remanded Cheema's withholding of deportation and asylum petitions in order for the BIA "to make 9 that determination using the correct inquiry." Id. at 859.

10 This petition followed, and is now before the Court.

12 LEGAL STANDARD

13 Cheema's petition for habeas corpus relief was filed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241. To obtain relief 14 under this statute, petitioner must demonstrate that "he is in custody in violation of the Constitution or laws or 15 treaties of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 2241(c)(3).

17 DISCUSSION

18 Petitioner contends that he is under a final order of removal pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231, and because 19 his removal is not reasonably foreseeable, his continued detention by the DHS is no longer authorized by statute
20 or under the Supreme Court's decision in Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001). According to petitioner,
21 the BIA's May 8, 2002 decision was an administratively final order of removal triggering the statutory removal
22 period under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(B), during which an alien who is ordered removed must be removed by 23 the Attorney General within a period of ninety days. Petitioner was detained throughout this 90-day period
24 (from May 8, 2002 to August 6, 2002), and he remains detained today, even though the removal period
25 expired approximately three years ago. Applying Zadvydas, he argues that there is no possibility that he will 26 be removed to India in the reasonably foreseeable future because the Ninth Circuit, the BIA, and the IJ have 27 all agreed that he will be tortured there and that CAT prohibits his removal to India. Accordingly, he seeks 28

1 release, contending that his continued detention is no longer authorized.

2 The government opposes Cheema's petition on grounds that he is not subject to an administratively final
3 order of removal, and therefore Zadvydas does not apply. According to the government, because of the Ninth
4 Circuit's remand of his case to the BIA, Cheema is still in "pre-removal order" – rather than "post-removal
5 order" – detention, which is constitutionally permissible. The government also suggests that, because Cheema
6 is in the process of removal proceedings, his request for release amounts to a request for judicial review of his 7 denial of parole into the United States, and the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over such a request.

9 A. Deferral of removal.

10 The BIA found that petitioner was "ineligible for all forms of relief except deferral of removal under the 11 Convention Against Torture." Petition, Ex. 2 at 000018. The threshold issues are: (1) whether a deferral of 12 removal ("DOR") is governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1231, and (2) if so, whether petitioner's DOR is a final order of 13 removal.

15 1. Deferral of removal is governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1231.

16 Before the Court determines whether petitioner's DOR is a final order of removal, the Court must first 17 consider whether a DOR is governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1231.

18 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A) provides:

19 (A) In general. Except as otherwise provided in this section, when an alien is ordered 20 removed, the Attorney General shall remove the alien from the United States within a period of 90 days (in this section referred to as the "removal period").

21 Section 1231 places a requirement on the government to remove an alien subject to a final order of removal
22 within the 90-day removal period. However, DHS regulations contain conflicting language on whether the 23 government is required to remove an alien granted DOR.

24 The DHS regulations governing DOR state that, although the government is required to defer removal 25 to the country where the alien is more likely than not to be tortured, "the alien may be removed at any time to 26 another country." 8 C.F.R. § 1208.17(b)(1), (2) (emphasis added). This language suggests that, although 27 DOR may be a final order of removal, the government is not required to effectuate the removal. Furthermore,
28

1 DOR does not confer a right to release for aliens in DHS custody. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.17(c) (“Nothing in this
 2 section shall alter the authority of the Service to detain an alien whose removal has been deferred under this
 3 section and who is otherwise subject to detention.”); see Gordon, Mailman, & Yale-Loehr, 3 Immigration Law
 4 and Procedure § 33.10[4][b] (2002). After granting a DOR, the immigration judge “shall inform the alien that 5 deferral of removal will not necessarily result in the alien being released from the custody of the Service if the 6 alien is subject to such custody.” 8 C.F.R. § 1208.17(b)(1)(ii). In petitioner’s appeal to the Ninth Circuit, the 7 Court of Appeals apparently recognized that its order remanding the case would not itself result in petitioner’s
 8 release: “respite from torture is limited if the consequence is that a petitioner is deliberately detained in custody
 9 in this country. To be offered indefinite imprisonment as an alternative to likely torture is to be offered a 10 harsh choice.” Cheema, 383 F.3d at 859 (emphasis added).

11 However, the regulations also provide that decisions pertaining to the detention and release of an alien 12 granted DOR “shall be made according to part 241 of this chapter.” 8 C.F.R. § 1208.17(c). 8 C.F.R. § 241, 13 which generally governs the detention and removal of aliens ordered removed, explicitly includes DOR with 14 removal orders pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231.⁴ Section 241.4 applies to “aliens granted . . . withholding or 15 deferral of removal under the Convention Against Torture . . .” 8 C.F.R. § 241.4(b)(3). Under section 241.4, 16 DOR is subject to a 90-day removal period and “the district director shall continue to undertake appropriate 17 steps to secure travel documents for the alien both before and after the expiration of the removal period.” 8
 18 C.F.R. § 241.4(g)(1)(C)(ii), (g)(2) (emphasis added). This section requires the government to try and continue 19 to try to secure removal for the alien granted DOR during and after the removal period in 8 U.S.C. § 1231.
 20 Thus, it appears that the DHS regulations intend to apply 8 U.S.C. § 1231 to grant of DOR.

21 A memorandum from the DHS (then INS) General Counsel suggests that the agency also interprets
 22 the regulations so that the removal period and detention of aliens under 8 U.S.C. § 1231 applies to aliens
 23 granted DOR:

24 Section 241(a)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) [codified as 8 U.S.C. §
 25 1231] establishes a 90-day “removal period” that generally commences on the date a

26
 27 ⁴ 8 U.S.C. § 1231 governs aliens ordered removed who are inadmissible under section 212 of the 28 Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”), or removable under INA § 237(a)(1)(c) (violated nonimmigrant status or condition of entry), INA § 237(a)(2) (criminal offenses), or INA § 237(a)(4) (security and related grounds). 8 C.F.R. § 241.4(a).

1 removal order becomes administratively final. . . . The memorandum addresses the 2 authority of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) under certain circumstances
 3 to release an alien who has a final order of removal, and who has also been granted
 4 withholding or deferral of removal, before the 90 day removal period has expired. . . . An 5 alien who has been granted . . . deferral of removal to a specific country under the 6 Convention Against Torture, remains an alien who is subject to a final order of removal.

8 Mem. from Bo Cooper, No. HQCOU 50/1/1, Detention and Release during the Removal Period of Aliens
 9 Granted Withholding or Deferral of Removal (Apr. 21, 2000). “During the 90-day removal period, the INS
 10 must seek to remove the alien [with final orders of removal].” Mem. from Bo Cooper, No HQCOU 50/1/1, 11 Detention and Release of Aliens with Final Orders of Removal (Mar. 16, 2000).

12 Based on 8 C.F.R. § 241.4, the Court concludes that detention and removal of aliens granted DOR
 13 is governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1231, and therefore that these aliens are subject to the 90-day removal period.
 14

15 2. Petitioner’s DOR is a final order of removal.

16 Petitioner argues that his DOR is a final order of removal under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(B)(i) because 17 it is a final administrative decision. Therefore, his removal period began on May 8, 2002, the date of the BIA’s 18 decision. The government contends that the grant of DOR is not final because the Ninth Circuit remanded the 19 case to the BIA for reconsideration of the question of withholding of deportation and asylum, where it is still 20 pending. See Cheema, 383 F.3d 848.⁵ The issue this Court must address is whether the Ninth Circuit’s
 21 remand to the BIA affected the finality of petitioner’s order of removal.

22 A DOR is granted to an alien who (1) has been ordered removed, (2) is entitled to protection under 23 the Convention Against Torture, and (3) is subject to mandatory denial of withholding of removal. 8 C.F.R.
 24 § 1208.17(a). An DOR becomes a final order of removal under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(B) on the latest of 25 the following:

26 (i) The date the order of removal becomes administratively final.
 27 (ii) If the removal order is judicially reviewed and if a court orders a stay of the removal of the 28 alien, the date of the court’s final order.
 (iii) If the alien is detained or confined (except under an immigration process), the date the alien is released from 29 detention or confinement.

5 The Ninth Circuit sustained the grant of DOR, and thus regardless of the BIA’s disposition on 6 remand, petitioner’s DOR will remain intact. Id.

1 The Ninth Circuit has not addressed the specific issue presented here of whether a final order of 2 removal that has been appealed to the Court of Appeals and sustained in part and remanded in part to the BIA
3 is considered a final order of removal. Here, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the BIA's decision granting DOR, and 4 only remanded Cheema's petitions for withholding of deportation and asylum. See Cheema, 383 F.3d at 859-
5 60. Thus, the decision with respect to DOR is final in that it cannot be disturbed on remand. For that reason,
6 the Court concludes that Cheema is subject to a final order of removal, and that his continued detention is 7 reviewable by this Court.

8 Moreover, the Court concludes that the fairly unusual posture of this case weighs in favor of concluding 9 that Cheema is subject to a final order of removal. On remand, Cheema is only eligible for more relief, not less,
10 under his petitions for withholding of deportation and asylum. Indeed, at oral argument, the government
11 conceded that, had petitioner lost his appeal at the Ninth Circuit, the May 8, 2002 decision would have been 12 a final order of removal; but it took the position that because petitioner partially prevailed and the Ninth Circuit
13 remanded the case to the BIA, petitioner no longer has a final order, and therefore 8 U.S.C. § 1231 does not 14 apply. As petitioner points out, this logic would produce the absurd result that an alien who loses his appeal
15 would be released, while an alien who seeks and obtains the relief provided by law is subject to indefinite 16 detention. Cheema has been detained for approximately eight years, and regardless of how the BIA handles
17 Cheema's petitions for withholding of deportation and asylum on remand, Cheema is now and will always be 18 subject to the deferral of removal order.

19 The Court also concludes that Cheema's petition to the Ninth Circuit did not destroy the finality of the 20 removal order. Once the BIA issued its removal order, the DHS had full authority to remove petitioner from 21 the United States, even during petitioner's appeal to the Ninth Circuit. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(3)(B). Had 22 the government attempted to remove petitioner, he could have filed for a stay of removal, which, if granted,
23 would have destroyed the finality of the order of removal, but only until the court granting the stay issued its final 24 ruling. See 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(B)(ii). However, that is not the present case. Petitioner never filed for a 25 stay of removal, so the finality of the order was never destroyed.

26 This Court finds that petitioner's May 8, 2002 DOR issued by the BIA is a final order of removal
27 pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231, and his 90-day removal period began on May 8, 2002.
28

1 B. Post-removal period detention and applicability of Zadvydas.

2 Petitioner argues that since he is subject to a final order of removal pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1231, his
 3 post-removal period of detention is also governed by that statute. Because his 90-day removal period ended
 4 more than two years ago, and because there is no significant likelihood of removal in the reasonably foreseeable
 5 future, petitioner contends that his detention is no longer authorized by statute or by the Supreme Court decision
 6 in Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001). The government argues that petitioner is in still in pre-removal
 7 proceedings, and therefore neither section 1231 nor Zadvydas applies. It contends that pre-order detention
 8 is constitutional under DeMore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510 (2003), and release of petitioner on parole during pre-
 9 order detention is entirely within the discretion of the Attorney General. Because the Court has determined that 10 8 U.S.C. § 1231 applies, it will now consider the applicability of Zadvydas.

11 In Zadvydas, the Supreme Court held that when removal of an alien is no longer reasonably 12 foreseeable, continued detention is no longer authorized by 8 U.S.C. § 1231. 533 U.S. at 699. Zadvydas
 13 involved two habeas petitions by noncitizen permanent residents who were deportable but remained detained
 14 after their 90-day removal period had expired. The Supreme Court held that allowing indefinite detention 15 seriously implicated the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause. Id. at 690. It established a burden shifting 16 analysis, so that “[a]fter the 6-month period, once an alien provides good reason to believe that there is no
 17 significant likelihood of removal in the reasonably foreseeable future, the Government must furnish evidence
 18 sufficient to rebut that showing”; otherwise, the alien should be released. Id. at 701.⁶

19 The Supreme Court in Zadvydas addressed how a habeas court should proceed when determining 20 “whether a set of particular circumstances amounts to detention within, or beyond, a period reasonably 21

22 ⁶ The USA PATRIOT Act limits the application of Zadvydas, providing for the mandatory detention
 23 of suspected terrorists. 8 U.S.C. § 1226a. In order for the Act to apply to an alien, the Attorney General may 24 certify that there are “reasonable grounds to believe that the alien (A) is [engaged in terrorist activities]; or (B) 25 is engaged in any other activity that endangers the national security of the United States.” § 1226a(a)(3). Under 26 § 1226a, an alien who has not been removed under 8 U.S.C. § 1231 “and whose removal is unlikely in the 27 reasonably foreseeable future, may be detained for additional periods of up to six months only if the release of 28 the alien will threaten the national security of the United States or the safety of the community or any person.”
 § 1226a(a)(6). The Act does not apply to petitioner because he has not been certified under the Act.

The Zadvydas decision was limited to excludable aliens (aliens who have gained initial entry or have been admitted into the United States). Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 682. The Supreme Court has since extended Zadvydas to inadmissible aliens (aliens who have not gained initial entry). Clark v. Martinez, 125 S. Ct. 716 (2005).

1 necessary to secure removal . . . [and] whether the detention is, or is not, pursuant to statutory authority. . . .
2 [T]he habeas court must ask whether the detention in question exceeds a period reasonably necessary to secure
3 removal. It should measure reasonableness primarily in terms of the statute's basic purpose, namely, assuring
4 the alien's presence at the moment of removal." Id. at 699-700. Petitioner's detention of almost three years
5 beyond the removal period "exceeds a period reasonably necessary to secure removal." Because petitioner
6 is a major figure in the Sikh movement, and because of the record of torture endured by the petitioner in India
7 beginning in 1987, there does not seem to be a significant likelihood that petitioner would be able to return to 8 India in the reasonably foreseeable future. There also does not seem to be a significant chance that petitioner
9 could be removed to a country other than India in the reasonably foreseeable future. Petitioner has been in 10 custody over seven years, almost three years from the expiration of his removal period on August 6, 2002, and 11 the government has not secured removal to another country.

12 This Court finds that petitioner has no significant chance of removal in the reasonably foreseeable future,
13 thus his continued detention is not authorized by statute.

15 C. Detention or release review procedures.

16 Post-removal period detention of inadmissible aliens is governed by 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(6), which 17 provides:

18 An alien ordered removed who is . . . removable under . . . section 237(a)(4) [security
19 grounds] or who has been determined by the Attorney General to be a risk to the 20 community or unlikely to comply with the order of removal, may be detained beyond the removal period, and if released, shall be subject to the terms of supervision in paragraph
(3) [of this section].

21 DHS regulations add that after the 90-day removal period, the DHS District Director will review the alien's
22 records to determine if further detention is warranted. 8 C.F.R. § 241.4(c)(1), (h). Further custody 23 determinations of any alien who has not been released or removed within three months after the expiration of 24 the 90-day removal period are made by the Headquarters Post-Order Detention Unit (HQPDU). §
25 241.4(c)(2). In order to be released, the alien must demonstrate that his release will not pose a danger to the 26 community and that he does not present a significant flight risk pending removal. § 241.4(d)(1). In 27 recommending further detention or release, the HQPDU considers several factors, including: (1) disciplinary 28

1 infractions, (2) criminal conduct, (3) mental health reports, (4) prior immigration violations and history, and (5)
2 favorable factors, including family ties to the United States. § 241.4(f). If the panel denies release, it must
3 review the case within one year. § 241.1(k)(iii). The regulations state that if the Service finds that there is no
4 significant likelihood of the alien's removal in the reasonably foreseeable future, the Service has the authority
5 to release the alien under an order of supervision. 8 C.F.R. § 241.4(i)(7).

6 Following the Supreme Court's ruling in Zadvydas, the DHS issued new regulations administering 7 special review procedures for aliens detained whose likelihood of removal was not significant in the reasonably
8 foreseeable future. 8 C.F.R. § 241.13. In such a case, if during or after the custody review process, "the alien 9 submits, or the record contains, information providing a substantial reason to believe that removal of a detained
10 alien is not significantly likely in the reasonably foreseeable future, the HQPDU shall treat that as a request for 11 review and initiate the review procedures under § 241.13." § 241.4(i)(7).⁷ These regulations were written in 12 language that tracks the language of Zadvydas, so they exclude "those who have not entered the United 13 States." § 241.13(b)(3)(i). In Clark v. Martinez, 175 S.Ct. 716 (2005), the Supreme Court extended 14 Zadvydas to inadmissible aliens. The regulations have not been changed since the ruling in Clark v. Martinez, 15 but the Court finds that they should be read to encompass the Supreme Court's directives in this regard.
16 Accordingly, this Court finds that 8 C.F.R. § 241.13 applies to inadmissible aliens.

18 CONCLUSION

19 This Court hereby finds that: (1) petitioner's DOR is a final order of removal pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 20 1231, (2) the principles of the Supreme Court's ruling in Zadvydas apply to petitioner's detention, (3) and 21 there is no significant chance that petitioner will be removed in the reasonably foreseeable future.

22 The Court GRANTS the writ of habeas corpus and ORDERS the DHS forthwith to make a custody
23 determination concerning petitioner's release under an order of supervision.

27 ⁷ For aliens who have been ordered removed but have been detained on account of security or 28 terrorism concerns, special review procedures are followed according to § 241.14(d). The review process includes determination if the alien's release presents a significant threat to national security and if there are any conditions of release that can reasonably be expected to avoid such a threat. § 241.14(d)(1).
