Parliament's Work

The work of a parliament is divided into two parts. The first part is the legislative work, which is the making of laws. The second part is the administrative work, which is the carrying out of the laws. The legislative work is done by the members of the parliament, who are elected by the people. The administrative work is done by the civil servants, who are appointed by the government. The members of the parliament are responsible for the laws that they make, and the civil servants are responsible for the way in which the laws are carried out.
