1992 to energize students with a desire to learn and increase their interest in the world of science;

Whereas the ExploraVision Awards Program asks students, working in teams of 3 or 4 with a teacher-advisor, to use imagination to envision a form of technology that could exist 20 years from now, and compete by sharing their visions through written descriptions and story boards;

Whereas the ExploraVision Awards Program, recognizing the fact that the majority of today's scientific discovery and technological innovation is achieved through teamwork, encourages students to develop their ability to work together as a team to explore innovative scientific and technological visions of the future;

Whereas the ExploraVision Awards Program exemplifies the principles expressed in the National Science Education Standards, including cooperative learning, the role of teachers as facilitators, and performance-based assessment;

Whereas the ExploraVision Awards Program cuts across all science disciplines and relates the disciplines of language arts, mathematics, and art to science;

Whereas the ExploraVision Awards Program, reaching more than 18,000 students in 1997, has grown since its launch in 1992 to become the largest K–12 student science competition in the world; and
