CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Expressing the sense of Congress that the President should hold the Russian Federation accountable for being in material breach of its obligations under the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty.

Whereas the Russian Federation is in material breach of its obligations under the Treaty Between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, commonly referred to as the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty, signed at Washington December 8, 1987, and entered into force June 1, 1988; and

Whereas such behavior poses a threat to the United States, its deployed forces, and its allies: Now, therefore, be it

1       Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate
2 concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that—

3           (1) the President should hold the Russian Fed-4       eration accountable for being in material breach of 5       its obligations under the Intermediate-Range Nu-
6       clear Forces Treaty;

7           (2) the President should demand the Russian 8       Federation completely and verifiably eliminate the 9       military systems that constitute the material breach
10      of its obligations under the Intermediate-Range Nu-
11      clear Forces Treaty;

12          (3) the President should not engage in further
13      reductions of United States nuclear forces generally
14      and should not engage in nuclear arms reduction ne-
15      gotiations with the Russian Federation specifically 16      until such complete and verifiable elimination of the 17      military systems has occurred; and

18          (4) the President, in consultation with United 19      States allies, should consider whether it is in the na-
20      tional security interests of the United States to uni-
21      laterally remain a party to the Intermediate-Range 22      Nuclear Forces Treaty if the Russian Federation is 23      still in material breach of such Treaty beginning one

- 1 year after the date of the adoption of this concur-
- 2 rent resolution.
