

faith, and she had contributed her retirement to set this up for young people in this country. And she said that she is troubled that there are these groups that receive all of these taxpayer dollars who claim to be helping people, and could they not take that money, and stop lobbying, stop coming up here and giving out meals, trying to win and influence votes in the Halls of Congress and use a little bit of that money to go help the young people in this country, the people who do not have an opportunity, who need these programs, who need love, who need to be told you are important by people like Mrs. Hawkins.

So we need to engage her and people like her, and I think one of the most telling things about our grant reform proposal is that, if we can succeed in cutting off this welfare for lobbyists, we will actually have more people like Mrs. Hawkins contributing their own money, working with their own time, providing these services that are very much needed in our community.

And so we will see that charitable activity in this country actually increases and actually is directed to the people who need help, and so I am confident that not only is this the right thing to do for the taxpayers, but, based on our hearing today, this is the right thing to do to make sure that these activities to promote a good society will flourish in our country, and I thank you for giving me an opportunity to speak on this today and would welcome you, hope you can continue to inform the American people about our efforts on this.

Mr. EHRLICH. I thank my colleague as well, and your last point is really the point to leave the American people to ponder, because no longer should there be a distinction between the mission of a group and the actual work, and that fine lady we saw today does not distinguish between those two concepts, and that is why she is successful, and we really appreciate her.

Mr. MCINTOSH. I thank you for your leadership on this as a freshman colleague. You have taken the bull by the horns, and I do not think we would be here if you had not worked very, very hard to make this legislation come to fruition. I know you spent several nights working on drafting the actual text of the legislation, something that a lot of Congressmen turn over to their staff, and so you are to be commended for this hard work on this, Mr. EHRLICH.

Mr. EHRLICH. It is wonderful to work with such a great colleague, and I appreciate the time tonight.
