

Congressman Jim McCrery, a Republican from Louisiana, has introduced legislation requiring the Federal Trade Commission to impose truth-in-advertising standards on lotteries. That would be a start. But a more dramatic step—banning ads altogether—is in order.

Lottery ads don't just sell a product. They sell a way of life. One ad for the Washington state lottery shows a line of workers punching their time clock. "The true joys in life," the announcer says, "are not found in the empty pursuit of pleasure, but in the accomplishments realized through one's own hard labor. For nothing satisfies the soul so much as honest toil, and seeing through a job well done." Then the man at the end of the line takes his timesheet and throws it out the window. "Of course, having a whole bunch of money's not bad either."

When will public officials stop for a moment, and listen to what they're saying—that hard work and patience are for suckers, that civic virtue is a function of how much you spend on the lottery? "Even in these cynical times," says Clotfelter, "government has some moral capital. So when the government says, 'Children, stay in school'; 'Husbands, don't beat your wives'—these have some value to them. If you take that capital and use it [the way lotteries do], one has to ask, does this serve the intention of the state?"

A TRIBUTE TO ELIZABETH NOYCE

- Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to recognize one of my State's finest and most generous citizens. Maine has a long tradition of philanthropic largesse, but Elizabeth Bottomley Noyce must now rank among the most kind-hearted, generous and supportive Mainers in the State's history.

Earlier this summer, Mrs. Noyce purchased $19 million worth of property in downtown Portland. The property includes 6 acres of land, 3 office towers and some other buildings along Congress Street, in the heart of Maine's largest city. But she did not buy the property in hopes of doubling her investment and moving on. Instead, she did so in hopes of luring businesses, retailers, and shoppers back to downtown Portland.

Like so many downtowns across America, Portland's is showing some wear and tear. The trend of the last decade or two has been toward sprawling suburban malls with enormous parking lots and varied stores in one convenient, air-conditioned setting. And while malls have been, in many ways, a blessing in terms of convenience for the customer and business for the retailer, they have left a void in downtowns across the country.

The company that will manage the properties Mrs. Noyce purchased has indicated that it plans to refurbish some of the buildings and add more parking in the area in order to lure some of the cultural and economic vibrancy of southern Maine back to downtown Portland. That was Mrs. Noyce's goal in making the purchase—to make Portland's downtown as thriving and vital as possible.

Such a purchase would be a noteworthy event on its own. But what makes Elizabeth Noyce special is that the recent investment in downtown Portland is merely the latest in a long series of gifts to the people of Maine. Over the last decade, according to press reports, Mrs. Noyce had donated more than $50 million to a variety of Maine institutions and communities. Her $3.5 million donation, for instance, allowed for the construction of the Maine Maritime Museum, which attracts thousands of visitors every year to explore Maine's rich seafaring history. She has also given $5 million to the University of Maine, $1 million each to the Maine Medical Center and the Portland Museum of Art, and another $250,000 to the Eastern Maine Medical Center in Bangor—just to name a few recent gifts. And she spent $7 million in 1991 to start Maine Bank & Trust and help Maine businesses at a time when there was a full-fledged banking crisis in Maine. She helped restore financial confidence in the Maine banking industry and her bank has flourished as a result—today it has 100 employees and is approaching 10 branches.

Last year, she gave $1 million to Maine Public Broadcasting. But instead of just writing a check, she had five houses built on the Maine coast. The project generated more than just revenue—it generated jobs for Maine construction workers, builders, and designers. The money from the sale of the five homes went to Maine Public Broadcasting, but the investment was much larger than that simple donation. It is the same principle she intends to apply in downtown Portland.

None of these gifts were to garner newspaper headlines or capture state-wide notoriety. Instead, they were simply gifts of a wonderful and generous spirit who believes very strongly in both the present and the future of Maine.

Elizabeth Noyce has become Maine's guardian angel—and our State is a much better place because of her.●

REMARKS OF LLOYD OMDAHL

• Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, more than 30 years ago, President John F. Kennedy challenged us all to "Ask not what your country can do for you. Ask what you can do for your country." Plenty of statesmen have come and gone since, and few have approached such eloquence. But I read a column recently in which the writer, former North Dakota Lt. Gov. Lloyd Omdahl, comes pretty close, if not in style, certainly in his message. He echoes President Kennedy's challenge at a point in our history when I think we need to get reacquainted with that challenge. His words remind each and every one of us about the depth of our responsibility to preserve and nurture our birthright—our Republic. Mr. President, I think Mr. Omdahl's remarks deserve the attention of the Senate, and I ask that his column be printed in the RECORD.

The column follows:

A REPUBLIC—IF YOU CAN KEEP IT
(By Lloyd Omdahl)

The Fourth of July represents the most patriotic time of the year when we celebrate the treasonous act of declaring revolutionary intentions against the government. It was okay because we won.

Just as important in United States history was the ratification of the U.S. Constitution and the creation of a democratic republic.

Shortly after the Constitutional Convention, Delegate Ben Franklin was asked: "And what kind of government did you give us?" To this he replied: "A republic—if you can keep it!"

For over 200 years, we have kept the republic through a second war for independence, a traumatic civil war, a devastating depression and a variety of complex international conflicts. But just because the Republic has survived to this point does not give it automatic life eternal. Each generation must cope with the forces that would erode or destroy the system.

It is my thesis that the present populace is less prepared to preserve the Republic than prior generations.

Republics are citizen governments, which probably caused Franklin to express dubiousness about its future. No one really knew whether citizens could really successfully govern a large geographic republic.
