

have experienced significant industrial activity. The sediment in these areas has become contaminated with any number of persistent pollutants. Despite reductions in point source discharges, and projected decreasing emissions from air sources that deposit toxics in the Great Lakes, the reservoir of contaminants already in sediments will continue to degrade water quality and therefore increase opportunities for human exposure. We must continue our efforts to remove or treat these sediments, but we will need guidance from well-conducted, peer-reviewed scientific work like that provided by the ATSDR to prioritize our efforts. Also, I would like to once again strongly urge the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to submit its very tardy report to Congress providing the results of a comprehensive national survey of aquatic sediment quality. This too is important data we need to attack the problem of contaminated sediments.

Extending this research effort is necessary to help track the long-term effects of pollutants on human health. This bill authorizes an extension until 1999 and requires an additional report to Congress at the conclusion of the research. Also, the bill clarifies the purpose of the research consistent with scientific recommendations and the preliminary study results.

Mr. President, I am hopeful that all my colleagues from the Great Lakes region and Senators representing other areas that suffer from water quality problems will join me in cosponsoring this bill. We need more means and data by which we can measure our environmental protection progress and efficiently target our limited resources. This research program is a small, but very important part of that effort. We cannot afford to make decisions without the information that is coming out of the ATSDR research. Our children's future depends on it.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise today in support for the reauthorization of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry's [ATSDR] study examining the connection between consumption of contaminated fish and human health.

I am honored to join my colleagues, Senators LEVIN, KOHL, and DEWINE, in the reauthorization of this study of immense importance to the people of the Great Lakes basin. I am also pleased that my Ohio colleague, Congressman LATOURETTE, and Congressman OBERSTAR have introduced companion legislation in the House of Representatives. That bill was successfully included in the House-passed Clean Water Act Reauthorization.

As you may know, the Great Lakes States have fish advisories warning the public against consumption of certain fish at particular levels due to contamination. This bill would continue a research program designed to investigate and characterize the association between the consumption of contaminated Great Lakes fish and short- and long-term harmful human health effects. The ATSDR study develops a body of knowledge on exposure pathways, body burdens, and associated human health effects in defined at-risk populations. These populations include sport anglers, the urban poor, pregnant women and their children, native Americans, and elderly.

This body of knowledge has a variety of potential and beneficial uses. Perhaps most importantly, it may be used to assist State and local agencies in developing fish advisories, remedial action plans, and lake-wide management plans. The study's findings may also increase general public awareness of the health implications of the toxic pollution in the lakes, and provide a study model for other human health research.

Congress has recognized the merits of this human health effects research in the past. I thank my Great Lakes colleagues for their continued support in the effort to understand the impacts of consuming contaminated fish and hope others will recognize the merits of reauthorizing the ATSDR human health effects research.
