

importance of international tribunals, to work with the President and other world leaders to permanently enshrine the legacy of Nuremberg into international law.

A permanent international tribunal would send a clear signal to those intent on committing terrible atrocities that they will be held culpable for their behavior.

Will an international tribunal stop all future atrocities? Regrettably, no. There will be more Yugoslavias, more Rwandas, and more Burundis.

But, a permanent international tribunal will create a lasting framework for the prosecution of war criminals. It will prevent justice from being contingent on ad hoc measures such as those we've seen in Bosnia. And it will quicken and normalize the implementation of humanitarian laws.

As I don't have to remind you, establishing an international tribunal and prosecuting war criminals can be a messy, patchwork operation.

In Nuremberg, there were few legal precedents by which to model the trial. In particular, new doctrines and concepts in international law had to be created. "War crimes, may be familiar to us today," but in 1945 they were not defined in any international or even national legal sense.

The same can be said of crimes against humanity, which was a concept that remained untested in international law. In Nuremberg, you not only had to prosecute Nazi war criminals, but you had to establish the international laws under which they would be tried.

As Justice Jackson noted in his opening statement at Nuremberg: "Never before in legal history has an effort been made to bring within the scope of a single litigation the developments of a decade, covering a whole Continent, and involving a score of nations, countless individuals, and innumerable events."

But, the creation of a permanent tribunal would revamp the currently ad hoc nature of international tribunals. It would streamline the process of prosecuting those who commit crimes against humanity. But most important, it would serve as an enduring tribute to your tireless labors at Nuremberg on behalf of the international rule of law.

In many ways the question of international jurisprudence and the rule of law, while maybe mundane to some is the embodiment of the spirit of Nuremberg.

After the surrender of Germany and once the ghastly atrocities of the Holocaust had been revealed to the world the impulse to lash out in vengeance at those responsible for these crimes would have been understandable. Some leaders echoed these thoughts. Winston Churchill, in fact, called for the execution of Nazi leaders, without trial.

But, the United States and its Allies ended this war the same way they had fought it, by embodying, as Abraham Lincoln once said, "the better angels of our nature."

The struggle of World War II is as close as any civilization will find to a pure struggle between good and evil. And not only did the forces of good triumph on the battlefield, but they triumphed in the courtroom at Nuremberg as well.

When millions of innocent Jews stood on the railroad sidings at Auschwitz, Treblinka and Dachau to be chosen for the gas chambers they were unjustly stripped of their rights and their liberties.

They weren't granted the right of due process. They weren't given the right to defend themselves or speak on their own behalf. In the concentration camps, the only form of justice was down the barrel of a gun.

But at Nuremberg, the Allies recognized that the only antidote to savagery and inhumanity is justice. That's why defendants were given the right to defend themselves, that's why they were given the right to choose their own legal representation and that's why three of them were acquitted of all charges.

Whatever the legacy of Nuremberg on international law, my father and every person in this room can look back to Nuremberg and remember that when the deafening calls for vengeance were heard you silenced them with the sounds of justice.

Once again, I hark back to the words of Justice Jackson in describing these actions: "That four great nations, flushed with victory and stung with injury stay the hand of vengeance and voluntarily submit their captive enemies to the judgment of the law is one of the most significant tributes that Power has ever paid to Reason."

Looking through my father's letters, I came across a wonderful anecdote from his time in Nuremberg. After only a few weeks in the country he had the opportunity to go to a baseball game at the same Nuremberg stadium where "Hitler corrupted and misled the youth of Germany."

But on that day the voices of evil that had once found shelter in Nuremberg were replaced by 40,000 Americans doing the "most American of things"; watching a baseball game and calling the umpires names and the players "bums."

In many ways, something as wholesome and American as baseball is a wonderful metaphor for the triumph of American optimism, American ideals and American democracy over the forces of intolerance and depravity, represented by Nazism.

In Nuremberg, America's commitment to democracy and the ideals enshrined in our Constitution remained intact even in the face of unspeakable horror. In many ways this is the ultimate legacy of Nuremberg; that our triumph in arms led to the triumph of our ideals.

When historians look back at the events that unfolded in the Palais of Justice in Nuremberg 50 years ago, it is that proud legacy they will remember. And today it is our responsibility to make sure that heritage lives on for the next generation.

For the past 50 years, through wonderful books such as Telford Taylor's "The Anatomy of the Nuremberg Trials" and now the research facilities at the Dodd Center in Connecticut, you've kept the events of a half-century ago burning bright in the world's eyes. Tirelessly, you've worked to illuminate the lessons of those bygone days to a world that so quickly forgets the lessons of history.

Our duty today is to build on that proud tradition with the creation of a permanent international tribunal to prosecute war crimes. I can think of now better way to give your labors at Nuremberg a truly lasting, enduring, and tangible imprint on human history and all of mankind.

ANGELS WITH HAMMERS

●Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, my home State of Oregon has been hit hard in recent months. With the damage wrought by this winter's violent windstorms and recordbreaking floods, many Oregonians were left to wonder if God was somehow angry with us. The helping hand that a Mennonite group has provided to a small Oregon town reminds us how faith can be a powerful healer for a community.

A recent feature in The Oregonian newspaper, titled "Angels With Hammers" by Bryan Denson, related the assistance the Christian Aid Ministries Disaster Response Service has brought to the tiny town of Vernonia, OR. Vernonia suffered $9 million worth of damage last February, when the cresting rivers flowed into the community's schools, homes, and businesses. Emergency services pulled out of town when the immediate crisis of the flood passed, and Vernonia's 2,250 residents faced the daunting task of rebuilding their community.

They found help from a most unexpected source. The first of a wave of Mennonites arrived, led by Paul Weaver and Dan Hostetler. These volunteers were soon joined by some New Order Amish and Apostolic Christians. They offered to repair the dining hall of a local outdoor school in return for shelter. Then they volunteered their free labor and construction expertise for a number of the community's rebuilding needs. For the last 6 weeks, the Mennonites have worked side by side with the people of Vernonia, rebuilding homes destroyed by the flooding.

By late May, the group expects to have renovated at least 30 Vernonia homes. Then they will quietly move on to another community in need of the same assistance. The Ohio-based Cristian Aid Ministries Disaster Response Service was formed in 1992 in the wake of Florida's Hurricane Andrew. They have helped rebuild hundreds of homes in disaster-stricken communities all over the Nation.

I am always heartened by stories about the generosity of strangers, and the help these good samaritans have brought to one Oregon town is exceptional. I want to take this opportunity to publicly thank these Mennonite brethren and the volunteers working with them for the healing aid they have brought to Vernonia. Through their quiet and unexpected efforts, they have relieved a community in great need and inspired many with their faith. The mayor of Vernonia, Tony Hyde, summed up this act of selflessness perfectly when he said, "It's pretty special—Christianity at its best."

As an aside, I would also like to commend the reporter that produced the account of this effort in Vernonia, Bryan Denson, and The Oregonian for publishing this piece. Oftentimes reading the morning paper causes one to want to crawl back in bed. The inspirational tone of this article would make any reader anxious to greet a new day and to lend a hand to their neighbor. ●

THE JANE ADDAMS INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S LEADERSHIP AWARD FOR 1996

● Mr. SIMON. On May 8, 1996, in Chicago, the Jane Addams International Women's Leadership Award for 1996 will be presented. For the first time, this award will be given jointly to two women.

The International Women's Leadership Award is named for Jane Addams, the first American woman to receive the Nobel Prize for Peace. It honors women whose strong leadership makes a practical difference across national boundaries and cultural divisions.

This year's winners are Dr. Hanan Ashrawi and Rita E. Hauser. These women act daily in the spirit of Jane Addams, breaking down the national and cultural barriers that can work against peace. Their efforts have been a major factor in the progress toward peace in the Middle East. In a time of ever increasing partisanship, the cooperative spirit and work of these two women is inspiring.

Dr. Hanan Ashrawi, a Palestinian professor, is currently Commissioner General of the Palestinian Independent Commission for Citizens Rights. She was recently elected to the Palestinian Parliament. As spokesperson for the Palestinian delegation to the Middle East talks until 1993, she was instrumental in forging the peace. Dr. Ashrawi received her B.A. and M.A. from American University of Beirut and her PhD. from the University of Virginia.

Rita E. Hauser is an American attorney, currently president of the Hauser Foundation. She is chair of the board at the International Peace Academy and chair of the Advisory Board of the Greater Middle East Studies Center at RAND. From 1986 to 1992, she was a member of the advisory panel on international law at the U.S. Department of State. From 1983-91, she served as the U.S. Chair for the International Center for Peace in the Middle East.

I know my colleagues join me in honoring these two women who are well deserving of receiving the Jane Addams International Women's Leadership Award for 1996. ●

COMMENDING THE UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY'S MEN'S BASKETBALL TEAM ON ITS SIXTH NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 244, a resolution to commend and congratulate the University of Kentucky on its men's basketball team winning its sixth National Collegiate Athletic Association championship, submitted earlier today by Senators FORD and MCCONNELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, there is a scene in the movie "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" where the heroes, successful and unchallenged for years, suddenly find themselves chased by an unshakeable posse.

Each time the posse reappears, the pressure builds on the heroes and they feel a little less invincible, their pursuers' skills a little more impressive. "Who are those guys?" they keep asking.

Over the 3 weeks leading up to the weekend of the National Collegiate Athletic Association Championships' final four, fans found themselves watching upset after upset, crossing off one favored pick after another, scratching their heads and saying, "Who are those guys?"

Those upsets are testament to the incredible talent we saw on display during the NCAA championships this year. And the incredible pressure. That's why after going through nickname after nickname for his team, the University of Kentucky's Coach Rick Pitino finally settled on the "untouchables," because they never let any of that pressure touch them.

Game after game during the tournament, those players came out professional, poised, and untouched by the pressure that had the most devoted of Wildcat fans cautious in their predictions for Monday night's final outcome.

But as Sports Illustrated pointed out, not even the magnificently courageous Syracuse team they would suit up against on April 1, 1996, would be able to shake the Cat's unapologetic defense.

In the end, even the upset magic that was in the tournament's air from the first jump ball, was simply no match for their depth and their talent.

The fans were right to ask "Who are those guys?" But, the Wildcats have a coach that knew how to take raw talent, combine it with an unmatched professionalism, sportsmanship, and some downright dangerous weapons—from Derrick Anderson's three-pointers to Walter McCarthy's thunderous dunks to Ron Mercer's slashing drives to Anthony Epps' ball handling—to turn back the challengers, one by one.

And of course there was Tony Delk. He had 7 three-pointers and 10 rebounds in the final game against Syracuse's scrappy Orangemen. But, as he bent down to help up a fallen Syracuse player, he came to epitomize not just the outstanding playing that marked this tournament, but the outstanding sportsmanship as well.

But, this was one player's victory.

Those five starters weren't the whole team by any means. With no player averaging much over 20 minutes per game the whole season, the Wildcats succeeded because of their ability to rely on one another's strengths, no matter what a player's position in the lineup.

That's because this was a team in every sense of the word, with a depth and wealth of talent that was the envy of the entire NCAA. Rick Pitino said more than once that his players checked their egos at the door. And because of that, when they went back out that door, they went as winners.

They rib us a bit about taking our basketball too seriously in Kentucky. And apocryphal stories about fans being buried in their Wildcat sweat suits or calling on Coach Pitino to help settle their marital spats, sometimes make it seem so.

But, when you see a team of such gifted athletes work together in a way that seems almost effortless—and combine it with a professionalism on and off the court that makes them true role models to their peers and their young admirers—then Kentucky's devotion to her basketball doesn't seem misplaced one bit.

The University of Kentucky's year was marked by one amazing statistic after another. They not only had a 34 and 2 record—the best record since the 1953-54 Cats went 25 and 0, but at one point had strung together 27 consecutive wins, the longest in the country. And they finished a very, very tough SEC regular season undefeated, the first time that's been done in four decades. The Wildcat's average margin of victory in the NCAA tournament was 21.5 points per game—the fourth best margin of victory in the history of the game.

And, while the players' incredible talent and the unmatched coaching
