WE THE PEOPLE, THE CITIZENS, AND THE CONSTITUTION

• Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, today I would like to honor a group of high school students who have embarked on a project that not only enhances their educations but fosters their sense of civic responsibility. Between April 27 and April 29, more than 1.300 students from all over the country were in Washington, DC, to compete in the national finals of competition sponsored by a program called We the People, The Citizens, and the Constitution. I'm proud to announce that the class from Hutchinson High School in Hutchinson represented Minnesota in the competition. These young people have undergone a rigorous course of study and worked diligently to reach the national finals by winning local competitions in their home State.

The accomplished young people representing Minnesota are the following: Adam Brodd, Megan Carls, Eddy Cox, Chris Dahlman, Aaron Douglas, Ben Froemming, Aaron Hall, Eric Holtz, Rana Kasich, Kristen Mann, Aaron May, Mike Peek, Patrick Perrine, Terri Rennick, Chelle Robinson, John Sandberg, Dave Schaefer, Sara Sharstrom, Jill Shun, Kelly Watson, and Michelle Wulkan.

I would also like to recognize their teacher, Mike Carls, who deserves some of the credit for the success of the team. The district coordinator, Jerry Benson, and the State coordinator, Robert Wangen, also contributed a significant amount of time and effort to help the team reach the national finals.

The We the People program is specifically designed to educate young people about the Bill of Rights and the Constitution. An evaluation of this program has shown that students in the program display more political tolerance and feel more politically effective than most adults in America. Students become more interested in politics and they learn how to get politically involved.

The 3-day national competition simulates a congressional hearing in which the students' oral presentations are judged on the basis of their knowledge of constitutional principles and their ability to apply them to historical and contemporary issues. In short, these students are debating some of the very issues we've been debating on the Senate floor in recent months: the division of power between State and Federal Government, the balance of power among the branches of government, the right to privacy, the role of religion in public life.

Through the We the People program, students learn the constitutional values of freedom, equality and justice, the principles that bind our Nation together. These students have taken something that is an historical document and made it a part of their lives. In an era when so much of our public discourse is polarized, when there is so much discussion of "us" and "them," these young people learn to value the "we" of "we the people." I wish these students the best of luck in the future and look forward to their continued success in the years ahead.

JEFFERSON COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY

• Mr. McConnell. Mr. President, twice a year, the Jefferson County Medical Society conducts a mini-internship program to inform and educate those outside the medical professional about the practice of medicine. For 2 days, about 12 to 18 business professionals and government officials are matched up with several Louisville physicians to watch them perform their jobs. Recently, Melissa Patack, a member of my staff, had this unique and worthwhile opportunity. I ask that a summary of her experience be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

JEFFERSON COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY MINI-INTERNSHIP—APRIL 16-17, 1996

On April 16 and 17, 1996, I participated in the Jefferson County Medical Society's Mininternship program. During the course of the two days, participants accompanied physicians in their usual activities and had the opportunity to observe first-hand the practice of medicine.

On Tuesday morning, I met Dr. Kathryn

Cashner, an ob-gyn with a speciality in high risk pregnancies, at her office to watch her morning appointments with more than a dozen women. Dr. Cashner is a sole practitioner, with patients from all socio-economic backgrounds. About one-quarter to one-third of her patients receive Medicare benefits. This was a morning of unusual normalcy, Dr. Cashner remarked. Virtually all of the women were experiencing normal pregnancies, although several of the patients were 4 to 6 months into their pregnancies and seeing Dr. Cashner for the first prenatal visit. Dr. Cashner counseled one woman who had a negative test result, but who was immediately sent for a follow-up sonogram which turned out to be normal. When I left Dr. Cashner at Audubon Hospital, she was about to perform surgery on one of her highrisk patients which would enable the patient to carry her baby to full term. Dr. Cashner's practice brings her into close contact with the lives of her patients; on one wall of her office she displays pictures of all the babies she has brought into the world.

The afternoon brought me to Jewish Hospital to observe Dr. Thomas O'Daniel, a plastic surgeon, performing a face lift. Watching directly over his shoulder, I saw Dr. O'Daniel perform the delicate task of reconstructing a 57 year-old woman's face. The operation was a grueling, pain-staking procedure of more than 6 hours. Dr. O'Daniel concentrates on facial injuries and gets a great deal of satisfaction from the work he does on children. The next morning, he was operating to correct a child's clef palate. Last fall, he traveled to Guatemala, where he and his staff operated on 75 children who suffered from clef palates and other facial deformities.

In the evening, I went to University Hospital where I watched Dr. Robert Couch run the night shift of the emergency room. The evening brought everything from walk-ins seeking routine medical care to the airlift of two victims from a head-on automobile crash, probably caused by a driver who had too much to drink. The residents under Dr. Couch's supervision were poised for action when the helicopter landed and two women with broken bones, head injuries and internal bleeding were wheeled in to Room 9. Within moments, life-saving actions were taken to get one patient breathing. X-rays were immediately taken and the young doctors made snap decisions on the treatment for these endangered patients. These emergency room doctors don't have on-going relationships with their patients. They treat and move on to the next crisis with enormous dedication.

After an exhausting and exhilarating day, I returned the next morning at 7:15 a.m. to Jewish Hospital to observe Dr. Laman Gray perform a quadruple coronary bypass on a 67 year-old man. One stands in sheer amazement at the sight of the human heart beating in an open chest cavity. When it came time for Dr. Gray to stitch the new bypass vessels to the aorta, the heart was stopped and then brought back to its rhythmic beating when Dr. Gray completed his delicate work. Dr. Gray had another operation scheduled for the afternoon and in-between, he was dealing with 2 other emergencies, including arranging for the airlifting of a heart attack victim from another state to Jewish Hospital for care and treatment.

Wednesday afternoon, I accompanied Dr. Cindy Zinner on her appointments at the Portland Family Clinic, a federally-sponsored community health center. Dr. Zinner specializes in internal medicine and pediatrics, and that afternoon, was working as a pediatrician. The Portland facility fills a unique role by being accessible not only to those covered by health insurance (including Medicaid) but also to the working poor who lack employer-sponsored health insurance, and who do not qualify for Medicaid. In observing Dr. Zinner treat several seemingly routine ear infections and perform a number of well-child examinations, the highly important role for preventive medicine becomes readily apparent. Dr. Zinner becomes a positive force in the lives of these struggling families.

These doctors, the residents, nurses and other assistants with whom they work are dedicated to the care and treatment of individuals from every part of our society. Each of the doctors has chosen a very different career in medicine, but all are devoted to the good health and life of the people they treat. My experience was a significant educational opportunity and I was privileged to watch these men and women perform their work.

PRISON LITERACY

•Mr. SIMON. Mr President, you may remember that a few weeks ago, I had an amendment on the floor to restore funding to the prison literacy program. I hope that will stay in the final appropriations that we agree to.

The need to do something on the question of illiteracy was emphasized in an editorial in the Chicago Tribune and by an excellent letter to the editor from George Ryan, the Secretary of State in Illinois who, I'm pleased to say, has been a leader in literacy efforts

I ask that the George Ryan letter be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The letter follows:

LEARNING IN PRISON

SPRINGFIELD.—The March 25 editorial titled "The crime of prison illiteracy" correctly laid out the devastating problem of low literarcy levels among prisoners in Illinois and across the nation. Education is an important factor in keeping people out of jail and in reducing the number of repeat offenders swelling our prisons.

Boosting overall adult literacy levels has long been a goal of mine. To this end, the secretary of state's office has made a concerted effort to assist the Illinois Department of Corrections and local law-enforcement officials in offering literacy programs to as many inmates as possible.

Over the last three years, my office has funded volunteer literacy tutoring for 6,107 inmates. There are currently volunteer programs in 22 state correctional facilities and 30 county and municipal jails.

In 1995, 785 community volunteers and inmate/peer tutors helped Illinois prisoners raise their reading levels. More inmates can be helped to overcome their literacy difficulties, however, if more volunteer tutors were available. I urge the citizens of Illinois to donate a few hours of their time to a local literacy program.

In addition to these volunteer efforts, I have awarded a $64,400 literacy grant to the Illinois Department of Corrections School District 428 to fund reading programs at the Dwight, Kankakee, Pontiac and Sheridan facilities and to supplement literacy efforts at 13 other state correctional centers. More than 430 inmates were served by these programs. Test scores indicated that the reading levels of these prisoners improved at a faster rate than the levels of other adult literacy students.

As the Tribune pointed out, education is not a panacea for reducing recidivism. But it is a proven fact that raising the reading skills of inmates helps make them productive members of society after they serve their terms and reduces the chances that they will commit another crime.

GEORGE H. RYAN,
Secretary of State.

THE 350TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CITY OF NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT

•Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today in honor of a very special event in the State of Connecticut this year. On Monday, May 6, 1996, the town of New London will celebrate its 350th anniversary, marking a milestone of historic significance to both the State and our Nation.

And what a history New London has. The one-room schoolhouse in which patriot Nathan Hale taught prior to his hanging by the British as a Revolutionary War spy stands in Union Plaza as a testament to the New England grit with which the city has prospered for centuries.

Founded in 1646 by John Winthrop Jr., New London is situated in the area the Pequot Indians called "Nameaug," or "good fishing place." Indeed, after Winthrop negotiated with the Pequots, the new colony's locale, New London, grew rapidly into a prosperous fishing and seafaring city on the west side of the Thames River.

Throughout the 17th and 18th centuries, the port of New London bustled with trading vessels carrying merchants and their goods between the other colonies, Europe, and the Caribbean. With the barter of lumber and horses for sugar, molasses, and rum, as well active trade of other goods and plentiful fishing reserves, the local economy flourished. The whaling industry soon took hold, and by the mid 1800's whaling was the local economy's mainstay. While that industry died quickly after whales became scarce, New London's whaling heritage is still visible throughout town. New London later grew into a manufacturing center, with silk mills and machine shops, and became a major banking, industry, and transportation hub with easy railroad and ferry access up and down the East Coast.

New London's coastline location has not only been economically important. but also strategically key. In 1776 during the Revolutionary War, the first colonial naval expedition sailed from New London, and local privateers beat the British at sea during the war. Although the town was burned in retaliation. New London was rebuilt and the area became a vital test and training ground for America's maritime forces. The U.S. Coast Guard Academy has been based in New London since 1910, and the city contributes much to nuclear submarine and Naval technology research and development via the many defense contractors based in the area.

Today, Mr. President, New London remains a busy eastern seaport city that is home to a vibrant business community, several colleges, an arts center, and vacation resorts. And the same New England grit that brought New London through the darkest days of the Revolutionary War survives.

For 350 years, the city of New London has contributed to the economic, military, and cultural progress of the United States of America. Its history precedes the founding of our Nation. Few American cities can lay claim to such a rich heritage, and as the motto for the celebration indicates, this is a time for New London to rejoice in "Pride in the Past—Progress in the Future." I am proud to join the citizens of New London and all Connecticut's citizens in celebrating this special birthday.•

CONGRESSIONAL FIRE SERVICE INSTITUTE

• Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the significant efforts of the Congressional Fire Services Institute, including those of Executive Director Bill Webb and others, in organizing the Eighth Annual National Fire and Emergency Services Dinner last night. Due to the tireless commitment of CFSI, this terrific event provided a highly appropriate opportunity to honor and thank the men and women of the fire service who risk their own property of others.

In the 8 years since its inception, the annual dinner has grown beyond expectations, attracting an increasingly large number of friends and members of the fire service from across the country. It has attracted scores of dignitaries over the past 8 years including President Clinton who spoke at last year's dinner. Last night's program featured Vice-President AL GORE and majority leader DOLE and a number of Congressional Caucus members from both sides of the aisle demonstrating a continued bipartisan commitment and expression of gratitude to the fire service.

Mr. President, I am pleased to have this opportunity to commend the Congressional Fire Institute for its efforts in promoting fire related issues and in honoring the men and women of the grace and valor with which they protect us all. ●

DONALD MINTZ

• Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, America lost a real civic leader, Louisiana and New Orleans lost a political leader who believed in cooperation, not confrontation, and I lost a good friend far too early in his life.

Don Mintz lived a beautiful life, raised a beautiful family and had a wonderful wife Susan, who together contributed so much to so many.

I ask that an editorial on Donald Mintz that ran in the New Orleans Times Picayune on April 30, 1996, which expresses the feelings of so many, be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

DONALD MINTZ

Donald Mintz, who died unexpectedly Sunday of a heart attack, was a New Orleanian first and foremost. Though he never held public office, Mr. Mintz set a highly public example of how to be a citizen in our complex, multiracial community. He was as much at home in a corporate boardroom as in the humblest neighborhood.

He tried to connect our disparate worlds. He was a builder of bridges between his black and white friends, a man of faith nationally recognized for his work as a Jewish lay leader and, most importantly, a dreamer of dreams, which he worked with ferocious energy to realize. One of his fondest, of becoming mayor of New Orleans, was unfulfilled after unsuccessful campaigns in 1990 and 1994.

But even without the portfolio of office, Mr. Mintz was a doer, a relentless actor and producer on the city's stage. There was nothing lukewarm about him. Whatever caught his interest had him thoroughly absorbed. And then he was relentless, driven, sometimes brazen, always dedicated, especially to New Orleans.

As Marc Morial, the man who defeated him most recently for mayor, said: "Above all, he was a committed New Orleanian."

By his death at age 53, Mr. Mintz had well beyond a lifetime's worth of accomplishments. He had been chairman of the Anti-Defamation League's advisory board and achieved national stature in this country's Jewish community; he had been a founder of a law firm; chairman of the Dock Board, the Downtown Development District, the United Way and the Criminal Justice Task Force on Violent Street Crime, and president of the Metropolitan Area Committee, Kingsley House, Touro Synagogue and the Jewish Federation of Greater New Orleans.

He was the managing partner of several Warehouse District renovations, a member of the Archbishop's Community Appeal campaign committee and a board member of The Chamber/New Orleans and the River Region and the New Orleans Symphony.
