

at a fleet-wide cost of about $300 million. Installation of pulpers and shredders would actually enhance operational capability, by enabling discharge of pulped garbage from inside the ship during heavy weather and flight operations, when unprocessed garbage discharges are currently prohibited. Use of pulpers and shredders worldwide (not just in special areas) would virtually eliminate the possibility of shipboard waste wash-up on beaches and shorelines. Fate and effects studies commissioned by the Navy with the collaboration of Scripps Institute, NOAA, and the University of Georgia indicate that pulper and shredder discharges, in the types and amounts predicted from Navy vessels, would not result in significant impacts to the marine environment. An Environment Impact Statement is also being completed. In accordance with CEQ regulations, a Legislative EIS will be available within 30 days of the legislative proposal.

Accordingly, the Navy has identified the use of pulpers and shredders as the preferred method for special area shipboard waste management for its larger, ocean-going vessels. Smaller, coastal vessels would retain and retrograde waste, since at-sea time is limited. The pulper-shredder approach is environmentally benign and entirely consistent with U.S. obligations under international law. This amendment to the Act to Prevent Pollution from Ships would authorize the use of the pulper-shredder approach for solid waste discharges under U.S. law. This approach would reduce the need for shore based reception facilities and would enable the five designated but not in-effect special areas to more quickly come into effect.
