I remain hopeful that quick action can be taken on the supplemental to preclude the disruptive impact to the Department's programs, especially those related to maintaining our readiness capability.

Sincerely,

IMPORTANT ISSUES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, as the only Independent in the House, let me raise a few issues which I consider to be terribly important but which unfortunately do not get discussed all that much here in the House Chamber. For a start, I think maybe the most important issue as a country that we have to wrestle with is to what degree is the United States of America today a vital democracy.

□ 2100

Sounds like an easy question. We have the right to vote. But, really, to what degree are our people involved in the political process? To what degree do people have faith and expectations of the political process?

Mr. Speaker, I would remind my colleagues that just 4 years ago, in 1994, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] and his friends took over the House of Representatives. We had an election in which 38 percent of the people voted. Sixty-two percent of the American people did not vote. And in that election and, today, we continue to have, by far, the lowest voter turnout of any industrialized nation on Earth.

Why is that? And why do we not discuss this issue? Why is it that millions of low-income people no longer participate in the political process, no longer believe that this Congress deals with issues or makes decisions which are relevant to their lives? Why is it that young people, in leaps and bounds, no longer pay attention to what goes on politically and do not believe that the political process is relevant to their lives? We do not talk about that issue, and I think it is important that we do.

And I think the answer is twofold. First of all, I think there is a great deal of discontent with the two major political parties, and I think that millions of Americans think that both political parties end up representing the wealthy and the powerful.

Second of all, even deeper than that, I think there is a growing belief that real power does not lie within the political process; that it almost does not matter who gets elected, which party controls Congress or State legislatures, but real power rests elsewhere.

In my State of Vermont and throughout this country we see large corporations saying, well, we would like to pay less in taxes within our city or within the State, and if the lawmakers do not give us a tax break, we are going to move to another State or, more likely, we will move out of the United States of America. And what does a mayor or a Governor do or a legislature do under that scenario?

It does not matter what party controls the legislature. Essentially, what people understand is that real power rests with the people who have the money. And if the people who have the money are not pleased, do not get the tax breaks that they want, they are going to move elsewhere. When that happens, people say, why should I vote, it does not make any difference. Politicians really do not have the power.

So I would argue that this country faces a major political crisis. During the 1960's the Beatles were talking about what happened if they started a war and nobody came, nobody fought in the war. My fear is that the day will come where we are going to have an election and people will not come out to vote.

In 1994, we had 38 percent of the people voting in the national congressional elections. Last year, when President Clinton was reelected, I believe we had about 49 percent of the people voting. My guess is the next national congressional elections, in 1998, we will have about 35 percent of the people voting, and the voter turnout will go down and down.

It is up to this institution, the U.S. Congress, to stand up and try to understand what is going on and figure out a way that we can reinvigorate democracy.

We talk a lot about education. Everybody agrees, conservatives and progressives, on the importance of education. But if we are not talking about education for democracy, the right of people to control their own future, what are we talking about?

The second issue I briefly want to touch on is the issue of the booming economy. Mr. Speaker, we cannot open a newspaper without hearing about how fantastic the economy is doing. Some of our Wall Street friends here say, my God, it has never been so good. We cannot imagine it getting any better.

Yet, when we look at the fine print which appears on page 68, somewhere beneath the sports section, we find that the real wages last year for the American worker was up 3.8 percent when inflation was about 3 percent. And if we know that the low-wage workers got a boost because of raising the minimum wage and the upper income workers generally do better, what we conclude is the average middle-class worker continues to see a decline, a drop in his or her real wages. The economy is booming, but the average American worker continues to get poorer. That has been going on for 20 years.

So I would suggest when we talk about a booming economy, let us look at the middle class and the working class of this country. And then, my friends, the economy is not booming so much.

A CLEAN DISASTER RELIEF BILL IS THE RIGHT THING TO DO

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOB SCHAFER of Colorado). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LAMPSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my dismay over the continued mishandling of the disaster relief bill by the Republican leadership.

I represent a district along the gulf coast, and perhaps in several months, after a devastating hurricane, I will find myself in the same position as my colleagues, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. POMEROY] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. THUNE]. I know that I would want disaster relief for my constituents in Galveston or Port Arthur or Texas City or Beaumont to be delivered as quickly as possible. Instead, my friends from the Dakotas have watched with what I can only imagine to be a combination of anger and disgust as certain factions within this body have played politics and political games with their aid.

I voted against adjourning for the Memorial Day recess so we could resolve this situation. I cannot imagine how my colleagues must have felt returning to sites of the flood devastation and trying to explain the holdup.

And yet, with great empathy for the flood victims, I felt that I had no choice but to vote against the disaster relief bill when it finally came to the floor.

The practice of attaching extraneous riders to disaster relief legislation may not be new, but as a freshman, it is the first time I had been forced and faced with such a dilemma. It is wrong. It should not be done.

Some of my colleagues have said it is the President playing politics. It is the House of Representatives playing politics and it is not right and should not be done.

I agree with Grand Forks, ND, Mayor Pat Owens, who said: "It is not fair to play with our people's lives and put amendments on to that bill."

The Governor of South Dakota, Bill Janklow, a Republican I might add, refused to put his name on a letter to the President asking him to sign the bill. A Fargo-Moorhead Forum editorial described Janklow's refusal as, "putting the interests of flood victims ahead of partisan considerations."

I appreciate that the people of this area understand why we have been forced to vote against supplying them the aid they need and deserve. A clean disaster aid bill for the victims of the flooding in the Midwest is weeks overdue. It is the right thing to do.

Today, after the President's veto, there is still no clean bill. Mr. Speaker, I must ask why. People's lives are in the balance.

Mr. Speaker, I must also ask why we do not allow the extraneous provisions attached to the disaster bill to stand on their own. Are we afraid they will not stand up to the scrutiny of the committee process? If these are good ideas that will benefit the American people, let them stand alone. If these extraneous provisions have a broad base of support among the American people, allow the Members of this body to consider them on their own merits. Attaching them to a disaster relief bill is cowardly.

I will briefly address just one of these provisions. In the 104th Congress, the House asked the Census Bureau to cut costs on the 2000 census. Followup analysis of the 1990 census done by the Bureau shows that our current method is resulting in an undercount. The National Academy of Sciences has told us a statistical technique called sampling will result in a more accurate count for the final 10 percent of Americans, those who do not respond to the questionnaires. The Census Bureau tells us the use of this technique will save them $1 billion in conducting the 2000 census, almost 25 percent of their cost. The Republicans seek to ban a technique which scientists tell us is better and the counters tell us is cheaper.

Mr. Speaker, this does not add up. The fact that this is attached to a disaster relief bill is a red flag waving high in the sky. It is enormously suspicious, especially when given that a few years back, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. GINGRICH, specifically requested sampling to be used in his own State.

Mr. Speaker, one side of this debate has been up front with the victims of this flood and one side has made them pawns in a political game. The Fargo-Moorhead Forum newspaper concluded on Sunday morning and I quote again: "Republican leaders in Congress continue to play outrageous political games with the lives and futures of Red River Valley flood victims."

How true and how sad it is.

A clean disaster relief bill is the right thing to do. Mr. Speaker, let us get it done.

WHAT IS A PERCEPTION'S REALITY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to this debate on TV and decided to come over and get involved a little bit. I heard the Beatles' name brought up earlier, and listening to this debate, I am reminded of another Beatles' line out of Strawberry Fields Forever. "They say living is easy with eyes closed; misunderstanding all you see." And then of course the hook is all about how nothing is real in Strawberry Fields.

Well, nothing is real in this debate either. It reminds me so much of what happened over the past couple of years where we had Medicare come up first, and how we Republicans hated our grandmothers and senior citizens because we wanted Medicare to increase at 7.2 percent but the President and the Democrats, who loved our grandparents so much more than us, wanted it to increase at 7.3, 7.4 percent.

Today, I think we voted on the bill in Ways and Means where it passed something like 30 to 3, a similar bill to what so many people were attacking before.

Now it is flood victims. It was also children. We hated children because we only wanted the School Lunch Program to go up 4 percent instead of 6 or 7 percent.

Now we are talking about flood victims, talking about how we want to hurt the flood victims. Of course, as happened during the Government shutdown when the President vetoed bill after bill after bill that we sent him, what people did not recognize was that it was the President who was vetoing the bills. It was the President who vetoed this bill today.

So the President, of course, was handed a wonderful, wonderful issue. It was put in his lap. And I have to wonder how we Republicans keep stepping into it and making these mistakes, but we do because we actually think that we should debate on the merits instead of on political points.

Which brings me to point two. The fact is that this crisis has been created for political purposes. What we do not hear is the fact that FEMA is funded, at least through this month. And we also saw in an AP report about a month ago, when this debate first started coming up before the Memorial Day break, when the President needed an issue, what he did, because the agencies were funded through this time period, he actually pushed up, he forward-funded, according to the AP articles, requirements so he could say, gee, these people are not getting their money.

So the President pushed the dates up for funding so he could create a political crisis, and that is what he did. And so now the President can get out and once again be compassionate and be the one that loves flood victims when Republicans supposedly hate flood victims.

So let us keep a list now. It is senior citizens, it is young children and it is flood victims. I guess the Democrats believe a sucker is born every day.

I can tell my colleagues that I constantly have hurricane victims in my district. I understand how this situation works, and certainly I feel compassion for the people that have been suffering this crisis.

In another area that, again, maybe nothing is real, or maybe as Henry Kissinger says, "In politics, what is a perception's reality," we keep hearing people say just give us a clean bill, just let us fund the flood victims, that is all we really need, when, in reality, if somebody would pick up the New York Times this morning and read in the New York Times that this so-called clean flood bill, where we needed $750 million to actually fund the flood victims, ended up being an $8.4 billion monstrosity.

Now, I want to know where were all these self-righteous people when these emergency parking garages were being put in this bill; when, according to the New York Times article, we threw in, as "an emergency funding" a theater, with theater renovations. And they went and asked the guy who owned the theater, is this theater really an emergency, and he said, well, we had a couple of pipes that leaked last year.

The fact is that we have shoved, these same people who are now screaming give us a clean bill were the same people, both sides, Republicans and Democrats, that were shoving as much stuff into this so-called emergency appropriations bill as they could. And yet now they come back and they whine about how they need a clean bill. Well, that did not seem to concern them that much before.

Also, we shoved in money for apple orchardists. I guess they were so shocked and stunned by the visions they saw on TV that they were not able to attend to their apple orchards. Maybe that requires funding in this emergency appropriations bill.

If we read the New York Times article, we can see that these arguments about how they just want a clean bill is disingenuous. Everybody has gathered around the table and thrown all they could on there.

Finally, we should talk about what this issue is all about. It is about a continuing resolution issue, where we wanted to avoid letting the President do what he did before, vetoing appropriation bill after appropriation bill, and then coming out and going I will not let the Republicans do this, that, or the other.

□ 2115

Again, it is disingenuous. This CR is the only way we ensure that we continue funding FEMA and other agencies at 100 percent without the President vetoing these bills time in and time out, without using flood victims for political purposes.

I say, let us get to the facts of the matter and let us stop using the flood victims as political pawns.

DISASTER ASSISTANCE BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MINGE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. MINGE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MINGE. Mr. Speaker, I represent the Second District of Minnesota. It is a district that contains almost the entire length of Minnesota River. Minnesota River flows through a broad valley. I think for many, it is known as
