

Let me wrap up just very briefly about the conclusion that I think we should all look at.

Number One, remember the facts, that there are over two dozen countries currently with the capability or building the capability to deliver missiles into the heart of the United States of America.

Number Two, that when this treaty was drafted, it was 27, over 27 years ago, and it was drafted between two countries, Russia and the United States. It was applicable. Even though the United States now faces multiple threats, this treaty prevents the United States not only from defending itself from the country of Russia, but defending itself from any of the other threats like they may have from North Korea, or Iran, or Iraq, or Pakistan, or India, et cetera, et cetera. Mr. Speaker, we could go through two dozen of those kinds of countries.

Number Three, we have the sophistication today to build an effective missile defensive system. We have the money today, and it should be a high priority. We have the money today to develop even better technology.

Now is the technology complicated? It is very complicated. Imagine a bullet coming several thousand miles per hour, and you have got to take it down with another bullet going several thousand miles per hour.

Now many of you may recall over the last couple of weeks we had a successful test where the bullet hit the bullet. It is a preliminary test, but the technology there is promising.

The next fact that I think is important is do not automatically, colleagues, do not automatically dismiss a space defense system.

Now in the days of Reagan when the Democrats ridiculed him, it was amazing, it was amazing in my opinion the shortsightedness that was allowed to continue with that ridicule. But today those days are passed. I am willing to go past that. But today we need to sit down as a team. We need to sit down and develop the kind of technology, not to start a war, not to pick on somebody, but to defend the supreme interests, and I use that as a quote out of the anti ballistic missile treaty, supreme interests, to defend the supreme interests of the United States of America. It is a race against time.

I have said several times during my comments this evening I have quoted Henry Kissinger. It is immoral, it is immoral not to provide the citizens of your country with a defensive missile system.

To my colleagues, when you leave the chambers tonight, you may not remember the facts. I hope you remember a little about this treaty and how and what it does to us. But more than anything else, I hope you remember those four or five words:

A race against time.
