

"If you want to make a difference in the future, what's better than investing in kids?" he asks.

Despite his prominent role in the community, Goodman likes to work behind the scenes, says longtime friend Smedes York. A former Raleigh mayor who has known Goodman since high school, York was also a member of the committee that tried to lure the Special Olympics and Pan Am Games to the Triangle. Goodman is serious about this commitment to making things happen, York says, and backs up his promises with resources.

"He'll pick up two or three key things and put his time and resources into those," York says. "He's not just talking. He's putting up major money and people in his organization he'll assign to work on these tasks."

Goodman may have a preference for the background, but he is a natural leader. For instance, he persuaded the owner of the new Hurricanes hockey team to use the name "Carolina" Hurricanes, not "Raleigh" Hurricanes.

While others might wring hands, Goodman acts, says colleague Ben Waters. Waters should know. He is Capitol's vice president of administration and often is responsible for getting Goodman's projects off the ground. One night in 1985, Waters recalls, Goodman called him and asked if he had seen a news show about Ethiopia's starving children. Goodman gave him a task.

"He said, 'Find out how we can help them. We can't sit back and not do anything,'" Waters remembers. Although Capitol was too late to aid Ethiopia, a program to funnel aid through a religious organization to another famine hot spot is ongoing.

The son of Fletcher's only daughter, Goodman's legacy as a leader began at a young age. He was 12 years old when he took his first job as a gravedigger at a cemetery owned by his family. He earned 35 cents an hour. At age 13, he began his career in broadcasting by working odd jobs at WRAL. By age 15, he ran a camera as a member of the television production crew. U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., one of Goodman's supervisors back then, remembers him well.

"I can see him now," Helms recalls of the young Goodman. "I did a lot of evening work to catch up with my correspondence and I'd see him every evening in that engineering department. He could show some of our full-time engineers how to do it."

The love of technology carried Goodman to Duke University where he studied engineering. But he left without a degree in 1965 to join the U.S. Navy. The technology bug stayed with him.

A serviceman stationed in Memphis, Tenn., Goodman also worked at a local television station. And it was in this city that he met his wife, Barbara, on a blind date. They played card games.

"Jim always said the reason he kept coming back to visit was that we had a color TV," Barbara Goodman laughs. He often visited after he got off work at the television station. But when it was time to go, she had to help him start his car, an Austin Healy.

"The only way he could start it was to get underneath it," she says. "I would get under the hood and hold something while he started it."

The couple is still a formidable team when it comes to starting projects. As a member of the board of the Salvation Army, the matriarch has rallied family members to serve in soup kitchens and to participate in a variety of community projects. Although the couple's work is now less hands-on, it is more extensive. Their work with Healing Place is a prime example. The facility plans to offer shelter and rehabilitation services when it opens in November.

Healing Place was boosted by the A.J. Fletcher Foundation, which provided start-up office space and supplies. Capitol paid an employee to act as the facility's director. And the community ponied up $4.5 million for the project.

Sowing the seeds of self-sufficiency is a hallmark of the foundation, which now spends about $3.5 million a year to help fund worthy North Carolina projects and fledgling organizations. "That's part of my future thing—getting things started," says Goodman.

His energy appears limitless.

"He is up and down on the computer during the night with ideas," his wife says. "The people who work for him say, 'We know how much he's been doing according to how many e-mails he has sent.'"

That relentless pace took its toll on Goodman and led to a heart attack five years ago. He says the experience clarified his vision and forced him to work more efficiently and delegate better. Although always family-centered, he has a renewed commitment to spending time with family members, particularly his grandson, who is a toddler. He also watches Durham Bulls baseball games and attends movies with his family.

Still, Goodman's vision is in high definition as he plugs his energy into projects that will make a difference 10 years into the future. "Things don't just happen right; things don't just come out right by themselves," Goodman says. "You have to work on it."●
