

Hammel Elementary School for working tirelessly on the Quilts of Caring ("tapiz de carino"). These handmade quilts, which they painstakingly pieced together, symbolize their commitment to remembering America's fallen heroes of Sept. 11, 2001. This project became a reality during the past six months because of the hardworking efforts of the entire community of Hammel Elementary—students, parents, teachers and neighborhood friends who all joined together to create nine beautiful quilts.

Hammel Elementary School's administrator, psychiatric social worker, school psychologist and parents united their volunteer efforts to assist the students in creating the nine quilts that have been sent to my district and Washington offices, the Pentagon, New York Police Department, the Fire Department of New York, East Los Angeles Sheriff's Station, Los Angeles County Fire Department and the White House. It gives me great pride to present such a fine multi-cultural message of love, faith, unity and support that is depicted in each quilt.

It is evident that the children from Hammel Elementary share a common vision for a healthier and more peaceful future, and I am proud that they have not surrendered to hateful messages of violence or vengeance.

I commend the students and surrounding community members of Hammel Elementary and thank them for portraying such wonderful act of kindness and patriotism that serve as a positive reflection of humanity for the entire nation.

GARY BOGNER: INTERNATIONAL AMBASSADOR OF BOW HUNTING

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 13, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor my good friend and fellow bow hunter, Gary Bogner, as he prepares for his new role as President of Safari Club International and the Safari Club International Foundation. Gary and I share a love of big game hunting and I have enormous respect and admiration for him as a hunter and as a leader in wildlife conservation.

A native of Muskegon, Michigan, Gary traces his passion for the outdoors to his youth when he first began hunting small game and whitetail deer. The son of a Michigan Conservation Officer, Gary quickly developed a zeal for wildlife conservation and hunting, especially bow hunting. By age 17, he owned an archery shop and was producing arrows for local archers. Today, after more than 45 years devoted to archery and bow hunting, Gary is known as the "International Ambassador of Bow Hunting."

An avid sportsman, Gary's hunting skills and achievements are legendary throughout the world. He has hunted five continents and has harvested over 60 different big game species with his bow. He was the first bow hunter to hunt the former Soviet Union and take a Russian Kamcharka brown bear, Russian Saiga antelope, Chukotka moose, Sika stag and a Marco Polo Argali sheep. He holds an astounding number of hunting records. Gary has taken over 25 African species of big game animals and his white rhino currently ranks as the top one ever taken with a bow. In North America, he has more than 29 big game species to his credit, including his Safari Club International top-ranked polar bear. Gary is only the fifth bow-hunter to successfully complete the North American Super Slam, harvesting all 28 North American big game animals with a bow and arrow. He also is currently the only bow hunter to have taken a Marco Polo sheep with a bow and arrow.

In 1995, Gary earned the Safari Club International World Bow Hunters Hall-of-Honor Award for exhibiting the highest degree of integrity, success in the field and lifetime contribution to the past and future growth of bow hunting and archery. He deeply believes, as do I, that wildlife is a renewable resource and that hunting plays an important role in its management. Gary credits his wife, Nanette; sons, Gary Jr. and Chris; and, daughter, Kimberly, with allowing him to pursue and achieve his dreams.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in applauding Gary Bogner for his many contributions. I am confident he will continue to shoot straight and true on behalf of hunters, archers and wildlife conservationists throughout the world.

During the 1960's, Jim also served as a consultant for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, while Speaker O'Neill was its national chairman.

Jim Rowan had a lust for life. Honesty, integrity, his leadership and colorful character will sorely be missed.

Jim Rowan's commitment to the people of Boston, particularly to East Boston, his endearing home, has served our Nation well.

Jim Rowan was one of my closest friends. My wife, Georgia, and I are deeply saddened by his passing.

Jim was a great man, a great friend. He lived his life to the fullest.

“NUCLEAR TRANSPLANTATION”

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 13, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, the universal use of the term “cloning” to describe many procedures can be very misleading. I submit for the RECORD an article from the journal Science by Bert Vogelstein, Bruce Alberts, and Kenneth Shine that suggests the adoption of the term “nuclear transplantation” to describe what is now called “therapeutic cloning” to more accurately portray the technique. I commend it to my colleagues.

PLEASE DON'T CALL IT CLONING!

Scientists rely on a dialect of specialized terminology to communicate precise descriptions of scientific phenomena to each other. In general, that practice has served the community well—novel terms are created when needed to document new findings, behaviors, structures, or principles. The lexicon of science is constantly evolving. Scientists who are fluent in the language of any specific discipline can speak to one another using shorthand expressions from this dialect and can convey an exact understanding of their intended meanings. However, when the scientific shorthand makes its way to the nonscientific public; there is a potential for such meaning to be lost or misunderstood, and for the terminology to become associated with research or applications for which it is inappropriate.

In scientific parlance, cloning is a broadly used, shorthand term that refers to producing a copy of some biological entity—a gene, an organism, a cell—an objective that, in many cases, can be achieved by means other than the technique known as somatic cell nuclear transfer. Bacteria clone themselves by repeated fission. Plants reproduce clonally through asexual means and by vegetative regeneration.

Much confusion has arisen in the public, in that cloning seems to have become almost synonymous with somatic cell nuclear transfer, a procedure that can be used for many different purposes. Only one of these purposes involves an intention to create a clone of the organism (for example, a human). Legislation passed by the House of Representatives and under consideration in the U.S. Senate to ban the cloning of human beings actually proscribes somatic cell nuclear transfer—that is, any procedure in which a human somatic cell nucleus is transferred into an oocyte whose own nucleus has been removed. As Donald Kennedy remarked in a Science editorial last year, the legislation would interdict a wide range of experimental procedures that in the near future, might become both medically useful and morally acceptable.

A law that would make it illegal to create embryonic stem cells by using somatic cell nuclear transfer would foreclose at least two important avenues of investigation. First, the technique shows promise to overcome the anticipated problem of immune rejection in stem cell-based therapies to replace a patient's diseased or damaged tissue. Creating stem cells with the patient's own nuclear genome might theoretically eliminate tissue rejection. Second creating stem cell lines by using the somatic cell nuclei of individuals with heritable diseases offers an unprecedented opportunity to study genetic disorders as they unfold during cellular development.

Both of these goals have nothing to do with producing a human being. They may be caught up in the proposed legislation in part because of misunderstood scientific jargon—namely, the casual use of the term “therapeutic cloning” to describe stem cells made for research in regenerative medicine using somatic cell nuclear transfer. What is worse, the already blurred distinction between these two very different avenues of investigation has been compounded by the interchangeable use of human cloning with therapeutic cloning by those who suggest that cloning a human being is a “therapeutic” treatment for infertility.

The term cloning, we believe, is properly associated with the ultimate outcome or objective of the research, not the mechanism or techniques used to achieve that objective. The goal of creating a nearly identical genetic copy of a human being is consistent with the term human reproductive cloning, but the goal of creating stem cells for regenerative medicine is not consistent with the term therapeutic cloning. The objective of the latter is not to create a copy of the potential tissue recipient, but rather to make tissue that is genetically compatible with that of the recipient. Although it may have been conceived as a simple term to help lay people distinguish two different applications of somatic cell nuclear transfer, “therapeutic cloning” is conceptually inaccurate and misleading, and should be abandoned.

It is in the interest of the scientific community to clearly articulate the differences between stem cell research and human cloning. Most scientists agree that cloning a human being, aside from the moral or ethical issues, is unsafe under present conditions. A recently released National Academy of Sciences report details the considerable problems observed in the use of somatic cell nuclear transfer for animal reproduction and concludes that cloning of human beings
