HONORING COMMISSIONER
DARRYL D. PERRYMAN FROM
CAMDEN, ALABAMA

HON. BOB RILEY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 7, 2002

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join The National Organization of Black County Officials, Inc (NOBCO) in honoring an outstanding leader in Alabama's Third Congressional District. On April 26th, Commissioner Darryl D. Perryman from Camden, AL, received the award for Outstanding County Official 2002 by NOBCO.

NOBCO Chairman Webster Guillory presented the award to Perryman during its Eighteenth Annual Economic Development Conference held in Biloxi, MS. When asked about his reward, Mr. Perryman humbly replied that he was in the business of helping people and doing the duties of an elected official.

I feel that it is necessary to recognize the success of our public officials in order to encourage future leaders of Alabama and the United States; therefore, I stand up before the United States Congress and America today to congratulate Mr. Perryman on his success as a public servant of Alabama and to thank him for all he has done for the great state of Alabama and its Third Congressional District.

MEDICATION ERROR PREVENTION
ACT OF 2002

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 7, 2002

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, in late 1999, the Institute of Medicine (IOM) issued a major report on medical mistakes entitled "To Err Is Human: Building a Safer Health Care System." This eye-opening study found that errors by health care professionals may result in the deaths of between 44,000 and 98,000 people in the United States every year, and injure countless others. Shockingly, more people die from avoidable medical errors each year than from highway accidents, breast cancer, or AIDS.

Congress reacted swiftly to the IOM report. Some members of the House and Senate, including myself, introduced bills to implement the report's recommendations, and hearings on medical errors were held in various committees. But Congress sometimes has a short attention span. Despite the flurry of activity at the beginning of 2000, by the close of the session other health care debates had crowded out the medical error issue and no further action was taken on medical errors.

We cannot let another year go by without doing something about medical errors; therefore, I am reintroducing a medical errors bill and this time I plan to see it through to enactment. If the IOM estimate of the fatalities that result from medical errors is remotely close to accurate, Congress cannot wait another year to act.

According to the IOM, most medical errors do not result from individual recklessness, but from basic flaws in the way hospitals and other health care systems are organized. For example, deadly mistakes have resulted from stocking the patient-care units in hospitals with certain full-strength drugs that are toxic unless diluted. Confusion over similarly-named drugs is another major cause of medical mistakes: studies have shown, for instance, that confusion over the similarly-named drugs "Cefuroxime" and "Cefotaxime" accounted for numerous errors in the administration of these drugs.

Other errors result from the increased complexity and specialization of health care treatment. When a patient is treated by different doctors for different ailments, a particular practitioner may not have complete information about all treatments the patient is receiving, and may prescribe medication that is incompatible with other medications the patient is taking.

In recommending ways to reduce errors, the IOM focused on the need to encourage efficient and comprehensive reporting systems so that health care professionals can benefit from the experiences and "best practices" of their colleagues. Other sectors of the American economy have established coordinated safety programs that collect and analyze accident trends—such programs are commonplace, for example, in the transportation field. Yet there are few centralized systems for gathering and disseminating information on medical errors. For this reason, in my legislation, I specifically advocate for the use of MedMARx—a national, Internet-accessible reporting system designed to reduce medication errors in hospitals. This system allows hospitals to anonymously and voluntarily report, track, and monitor their medication errors, to identify trends, and to pinpoint problem areas. In order for systems like MedMARx to become successful though, participating hospitals and health care professionals must know that they can report problems encountered in clinical practice without endangering their careers. But according to the IOM, a major obstacle to the full implementation of medical error reporting programs is the threat that the reports themselves will be disclosed in civil litigation.

Naturally, hospitals are reluctant to generate documents that will be used against them in adversarial proceedings, so IOM called for enactment of an evidentiary privilege in federal law against the disclosure of information provided to medical error reporting systems. In the legislation, I would protect the confidentiality of data on medical mistakes where the information is collected and analyzed solely for the purpose of improving safety and quality. Without this protection, hospitals and health care professionals fear that information reported might ultimately be subpoenaed and used in lawsuits against them, thereby discouraging their participation.

The time to act is now. Patients are literally killed by medical errors every day, yet Congress has not done anything to ensure that the IOM recommendations that could significantly reduce these tragic mistakes are signed into law. Working together, we can reduce medical errors and improve the quality of patient care in the United States.

HONORING WORK DONE BY PARTICIPANTS IN STUDENT CONGRESSIONAL TOWN MEETING AT UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT

HON. BERNARD SANDERS

OF VERMONT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 7, 2002

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, today, I recognize the outstanding work done by participants in my Student Congressional Town Meeting held this spring at the University of Vermont. These participants were part of a group of high school students from around Vermont who testified about the concerns they have as teenagers, and about what they would like to see government do regarding these concerns.

UNDERAGE DRINKING

APRIL 8, 2002

MATT ALDEN. Good morning. Thank you, Congressman Sanders, for this opportunity. As I stand before you today, first I'd like to share a few facts about underage drinking.

According to the 2001 Vermont Youth Risk Behavior Survey, 69 percent of Vermont students have consumed alcohol. 58 percent of Vermont seniors have had at least one alcoholic beverage in the past month. More importantly, one-third of our Vermont eighth-graders have consumed alcohol in the past 30 days. One out of four Vermont seniors binge-drink monthly, meaning they have consumed more than five drinks within a two-hour timeframe. 32 percent of Vermont seniors ride with a driver who has been drinking. 50 percent of young adult crashes in Vermont were alcohol-related, and half of those who died had been drinking. According to the 1999 Vermont Youth Risk Behavior Survey, half the Vermont seniors are sexually active. This may not seem relevant, but one-third had consumed alcohol before engaging in such activities. Underaged drinking costs society $216 per man, woman and child in America, so therefore, we are not only losing human lives, we are also incurring more and more debt because of this problem. And lastly, according to the Mother's Against Drunk Driving national survey, approximately 100,000 American deaths were alcohol-related. This is two times more than the population of Vermont.

As you can see, Vermont really has a problem with underage drinking. Today I propose three solutions that will help Vermont's problem. My first two solutions come from the Vermont Youth Summit to Prevent Underaged Drinking. This was the first statewide summit held in America. Myself and 51 other students from around the state gathered in March 2000 to create three recommendations to present to the Vermont legislature.

The two I am promoting today are, require every state ID to have a bar code or strip that can be swiped at the checkout. The bar codes will code your birthday and, when swiped through the machine, will tell the cashier if the buyer was eligible to purchase the alcohol.

The second recommendation is to have more funding for the Stop Teen Alcohol Risk Team. This is a team of local law enforcement which is hired just for breaking up large teenage parties where drinking taking place. Now, our state does not give the START team a lot of money, and no extra incentives are offered for working into the long night hours. If the START program had more money, the goal of having a team in each county would be met, thus making parties not such a common place for teens to engage in illegal consumption of alcohol.

The last and personal recommendation to help Vermont is that, if someone underage is drinking with a blood alcohol content above the legal limit, their license will be revoked until they turn 21. The legal blood-alcohol content level for a minor is .02, about one beer for an average-weight teen. I feel that, if a minor knows he or she will not be allowed to drive for a long period of time, they will think before getting into a car while intoxicated.

Now the punishment is revocation of your license for 90 days, a fine, and alcohol-treatment classes. These are good consequences, but people that are behind the wheel, drunk, endanger everyone they pass on the highway. If a license was taken away for a long period of time, they would realize the importance of staying sober behind the wheel.

I know these solutions will not bring underage drinking to a cease, but I believe, if it saves one person, it makes a difference.

Thank you, again, Mr. Sanders, for your time and this opportunity.

PEN PALS WITH PAKISTAN

APRIL 8, 2002

BETHANY WALLACE: I'm Bethany Wallace, and what we're talking about today is the pen pal program with Pakistan that our school has, in conjunction with Sara Siad from Bennington College, has established, and I guess what our hopes are is that, eventually, a program like this will be established, perhaps, statewide, and eventually nationwide.

The pen-pal program, we have sent two letters already and gotten one in return. Sara Siad is a student at Bennington College, and she is from Pakistan. I think she lives in Karachi, which is the most modern city in Pakistan, and it's kind like the metropolitan New York of Pakistan. And she has worked in a lot of public schools there and seen an interest that Pakistani students and young people have in American culture, much like we have in Pakistani culture.

What she did was to establish the pen-pal program, and we all wrote letters, and then she translated them and brought them to Pakistan when she went back on Christmas vacation. The students over there then wrote their letters, and she brought them back to us, and that is how it has been kind of working.

What it has done is opened a lot of doors to better understand the Pakistani culture, especially when our image of that culture has been so skewed by the media in light of September 11th.

KERRY MCINTOSH: It is just interesting, in the letters, we see their perspective on things, but we also see how we are more similar to the people in Pakistan than we would have assumed. Like lots of us, there are just lots of different assumptions we have about people in Pakistan and what their views would be or something, and then they write in the letters, and it seems like, wow, they're really a lot like us.

I have two letters here. One of them is in Urdu, which is the native language of Pakistan. But, as Sara has told us, they also speak English fluently. And another wrote me a letter in English. I will read an excerpt. Like, when she talks about September 11th, she says. Like, first, just says, hello and, like, greets me and tells me a little bit about herself.

And now let's talk a little about the 11th of September. First of all, I want to commiserate you. It was really a shocking news. I know how hurt it must be for the people to bear the loss of their dear and near ones. It was a real horrible act of terrorism. While talking about terrorism, I do agree with the U.S. approach. But had Afghanistan handed over the culprit, it would have been much better.

You know, our President, Musharraf, was really in a bad position. It was really tough for him, whether or not to help the U.S., because some of the people in Pakistan were against the U.S. But the majority of the Pakistani population supported Mr. Musharraf's decision. But, you know, war isn't an alternative for peace. I really wish the world was a better place to live in.

I think I mentioned something political in the letter that I had written to her first, assuming that—like, not in a bad way, but just assuming that she would be a little more critical of the U.S., but then I found out that she really, like, was supportive, and that it is just like, a minority in Pakistan that is eminently anti-American people like we see protesting on the streets, and that they share our concerns and hopes for world peace.

ERICA HOLLNER. Like Kerry was saying, the main thing I think we are getting out of this is a better understanding of Pakistan, because we have these views that are so stereotypical, and we see—on TV and magazines, we see these poor people and see the refugee camps, and we think that the whole country is like that. But, in reality, a lot of the families that we are exchanging letters with are similar to us, and they're not poor, they have enough money to live comfortably, and it's a lot like the U.S. in a lot of ways, but we always think that it's all the same.

And Just that, they like the same kinds of things as we do. And I remember reading one letter that a girl was very interested in Princess Di, and you don't think of the fact that they think of the same things as we do, and they know about a lot of the same things too.

KATIE KERVORKIAN. We think that the program would be a great way to teach tolerance, just so that other people can understand what goes on, because many people don't know what is going on in the subcontinental countries, the Middle East. And to learn from someone that is our own age is different than learning from magazine or TV.

BETHANY WALLACE. And what Sarah has pointed out is that nothing is really off limits in the letters. If we bring it up first, then our pen pals aren't, you know, squeamish about talking about it, about communicating their views, and it is a great tool to better understand what is going on over there.

NATIONAL CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES WEEK

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 7, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, during National Correctional Officers and Employees Week, to honor our correctional officers for the work they do to keep our families safe. We do not thank these men and women enough for their service to our communities.

Day after day, week after week, our correctional officers work one of the most dangerous patrols in the country. They devote themselves to keeping violent felons behind bars, ensuring that our families can feel safe in our homes and on our streets. We know from the number of correctional officers who die in the line of duty each year that this is a dangerous profession that requires courage, hard work, and professionalism.

Our correctional officers are people like Bonnie Johnson, a mother of six, who works over 50 hours a week in a prison in Jackson, Michigan. For almost 20 years, Bonnie has put her heart and soul into her job. Or Rodney Olsson—a correctional officer with the Michigan prison system for roughly 14 years. Rodney drives over 60 miles to get to and from
