In 1882 the U.S.S. ALBATROSS, the first government research vessel built exclusively for fisheries and oceanographic research, launched both a future for NOAA's research programs and a fleet of research vessels. Today, NOAA scientists along with their university partners, work to better understand the world in which we live. NOAA research is where much of the work is done that results in better weather forecasts, longer warning lead times for natural disasters, new products from the sea, and a greater understanding of our climate, atmosphere and oceans. NOAA research is done not only in what many would consider traditional laboratories, but also aboard ships, aloft in planes, and beneath the sea in the world's only undersea habitat. NOAA research tools can be as high-tech as supercomputers or as basic as rain gauges. The officers of the NOAA Corps operate NOAA's fleet of research vessels and aircraft. Those of us on the Commerce Committee like to think of NOAA as the little agency that does a lot. The NOAA Corps is an integral part of the NOAA team that brings all of these valuable services to the American public.

Whereas the United States of America and Indian Tribes have a unique legal and political relationship as expressed in the U.S. Constitution, treaties, Federal statutes and Executive orders, court decisions, and course of dealing;

Whereas the United States has committed itself to national education excellence including excellence in institutions that educate American Indian and Alaska Native children and adults;

Whereas tribal colleges and universities are fully accredited community-based educational institutions devoted to the education, welfare, and economic advancement of American Indian communities;

Whereas the populations in the communities served by tribal colleges and universities are among the poorest of the Nation, and the services provided by the tribal colleges and universities enable students to train for and obtain jobs that offer social and economic stability, and serve to reduce welfare dependence in these communities;

Whereas tribal colleges and universities are chronically underfunded, and in addition to offering their communities higher education opportunities, also function as community centers, libraries, childcare centers, tribal archives, career and business centers, economic development centers, and public meeting places;

Whereas in 1970 President Nixon issued his now-famous "Special Message to Congress on Indian Affairs" rejecting the failed policies of assimilation and termination and heralding the new era of Indian Self Determination;

Whereas in 1972 six tribal colleges established the American Indian Higher Education Consortium to empower its member institutions through collective action, construct a national support and communications network, and assist Indian communities and Native people in the field of educational achievement, while nurturing, advocating, and protecting American Indian history, culture, art and language;

Whereas the American Indian Higher Education Consortium consists of 32 tribal colleges and universities located in 12 states that enroll approximately 30,000 full- and part-time students from over 250 Federally-recognized Indian Tribes;

Whereas on July 3, 2002, President Bush issued Executive Order 13270 ensuring that tribal colleges and universities are more fully recognized and integrated into the American family of institutions of higher education;

Whereas tribal colleges and universities provide access to information technology critical to full participation in American economic, political and social life, bridging great distances and transforming learning environment; and

Whereas tribal colleges and universities and their Native communities continue to play an integral role in American Indian education including assisting in the implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act of 2002: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Senate of the United States recognizes the essential role tribal colleges and universities play in American Indian communities, honors the vision and commitment of the founders of the American Indian Higher Education Consortium, and celebrates 30 successful years of implementing that vision for the benefit of American Indian peoples across the United States.
