

was held. She was a researcher to whom parents of children with Fragile X and Down syndrome could always go to with their concerns, regardless of whether or not their concerns were related to Dr. Crnic's area of research. She listened and responded. This loss, for the Fragile X and Down syndrome communities is incalculable.

I send my deepest condolences to Linda Crnic's family. I hope they are comforted with her memory and knowledge that their loss is shared by so many in her community and across this nation.

I ask that the following news story about the life of Linda Crnic from the Rocky Mountain News be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CRNIC, 56, CHAMPIONED DOWN SYNDROME CAUSES

(By Mark Wolf)

Linda Crnic addressed the National Down Syndrome Congress last month on The Dawn of a New Era in biomedical research, then spent the evening dancing with children with Down syndrome.

"She spent hours on the dance floor," said Lloyd Lewis, of Lafayette, father of a child with Down syndrome, who addressed the association from a parent's perspective. "There was a particularly moving moment when a 50-year-old woman was confused at not being able to find her purse. Linda spent an hour looking under every table for it."

Crnic, an internationally prominent Down syndrome researcher, died Sept. 11 from injuries suffered in a bicycle accident. She was 56.

She was a professor of pediatrics and psychiatry at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center and, since 2001, director of the Colorado Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities Research Center.

"A topic like (Down syndrome and other developmental disabilities) is never something you can approach with one particular line of investigation," said Dr. Doug Jones, chairman of pediatrics at the Health Sciences Center. "You have to look at genetics, what determines behavior, a whole range of things to understand how to help these children be as normal as possible.

"You have to have a psychologist, physician, geneticist. It requires a broad range of disciplines. Linda's great strength was that she saw how to do that, not just within the School of Medicine, but within the entire University of Colorado system and CSU, DU and ultimately across the country."

Born in Fort Wayne, Ind., she moved to Naperville, Ill., when she was 12. She earned a bachelor's degree from the University of Chicago and master's and doctoral degrees in experimental psychology from the University of Illinois at Chicago.

She joined the CU Medical School as a postdoctorate fellow in 1975 and became a full professor in 1994.

"She was just the kindest, most loving person that you would ever meet in your life," said Stan Wilks, her husband. "She was actively involved and mentored a lot of people in their scientific careers."

Their son, Michael, 13, plays cello, and his mother would sit with him while he practiced.

"She made that commitment to him," said her husband.

The family loved hiking and camping and had just purchased an A-frame chalet in Hartsell.

"We spent two of the last three weekends up there. We bought it as a little family getaway to have some real private times," Wilks said.

The weekend she died, Mrs. Crnic had traveled to Bend, Ore., for a reunion weekend with several women with whom she had attended leadership training. During a leisurely bike ride she fell and fractured her skull.

"The tragedy of that is that she was an expert bike rider and practiced safety. She would never go biking without a helmet, and here she was without a helmet," Wilks said.

She was in demand as a speaker to professional organizations nationally and internationally and was a strong advocate for increased support and research for Down syndrome families.

"She took the time and was genuinely interested in parents and kids. She stimulated in me the notion that parents could be very active and influential in funding research from various avenues: the National Institutes of Health, Congress and private benefactors," Lewis said.

Surviving in addition to her husband and son are sisters Jacqueline Susmark, of Lakewood, and Janine Bisbee, of Warren, N.J., and brother Brent Smith, of Salida. ●
