

American people. That seems not to be now. Discussions hopefully will continue.

If we cannot do it in a reasonably short period of time and stay on relevant amendments, we just simply are not going to be able to do it in this session. We have somewhere around 30 legislative days remaining and we have a range of issues, some that were brought up on the floor today, issues such as homeland security and issues concerning the institution of marriage.

We have the Australia trade bill that hopefully we can consider very quickly in the near future. We have 13 appropriations bills, spending bills, that we must consider. There are 12 we need to consider in some way in the next several weeks. Then there are a number of judges who we must continue to move on. We have all of that in a period of about 30 days.

It means that as majority leader I need to insist on reasonable, disciplined, and regular order in the sense that when we go to a bill, we debate that bill, those issues, consider amendments that are relevant to that bill and not consider the broad range of issues that we naturally have as Senators. We have to have an orderly process. The orderly process led today, because of the insistence on these non-germane, nonrelevant amendments, to a point that we are not going to be able to consider class action reform now.

So I think that we will see predominantly tomorrow is debate on a very important issue to the American people and to the values of the United States of America, and that is the issue of marriage. We will likely see debate on that tomorrow, and that debate will continue on the constitutional amendment Monday and Tuesday. I would think somewhere during the middle of next week, probably Wednesday, we will have a vote, the nature of which I will be talking to the Democratic leader over the course of tomorrow morning.

So we had a good debate this week. I am very disappointed in the fact that the other side of the aisle—for the most part it was the other side of the aisle—insisted on having other amendments. I am disappointed we were unable to fully address class action reform. Hopefully, we can come back to it at some point in the future.
