

VALDOSTA STATE NATIONAL CHAMPIONS

• Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, today I wish to congratulate the Valdosta State University Blazers football team for winning the 2007 NCAA Division II National Championship.

The Blazers celebrated their second national championship in 4 years on December 15, 2007, in Florence, AL, and completed their season with a final record of 13 to 1. Valdosta State's play-off run included victories over Catawba University, University of North Alabama, and the University of California-Pennsylvania en route to defeating Northwest Missouri State 25 to 20 in the championship game.

I am extremely proud of these talented men for all of their hard work and dedication that contributed to this victory. I congratulate all of the team members, particularly the senior class. Their leadership and talents will surely be missed. In addition, sophomore wide receiver Cedric Jones and junior safety Sherard Reynolds were both named First-Team All-Americans. The Blazers also had seven players named to the Gulf South Conference All-Conference Team, including Cedric Jones, Gerald Davis, William Montford, Sherard Reynolds, Maurice Leggett, Michael Terry, and Travis Harrison. Furthermore, I would like to extend my appreciation to all the families and fans for their continual support of the Blazers throughout the season.

The success of the team could not have been achieved without the exceptional coaching staff, led by head coach David Dean. Coach Dean is in his first season as head coach of the Blazers, having been the team's offensive coordinator for the past 7 years. He is only the second first-year coach in history to lead his team to a Division II title.

Valdosta, a city long known for its tradition in high school football, can now boast about the success of Valdosta State University, which has won 2 Division II National Championships in 4 years. It is my hope that the winning tradition at Valdosta State will continue for many years to come.

Congratulations again to all of these young men and to all associated with the Valdosta State Blazers football program for their great accomplishments and hard work.●

BEST HIGH SCHOOLS IN NEW MEXICO

• Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today I applaud the top public high schools in my home State of New Mexico. I was pleased to learn that in U.S. News and World Report's first ranking of America's best high schools, 16 high schools in New Mexico were awarded with silver and bronze medals for their outstanding performance on standardized tests and in providing college-level coursework.

The students come from many different backgrounds, but they are successful because of the mind-set that says every student can succeed. These schools and the communities around them have embraced the differences in their student body and demonstrated that every single student, regardless of background, can and will learn. It takes the dedicated leadership of a good principal, a talented teaching corps and engaged parents to achieve this level.

The teachers and staff of these high schools have demonstrated their commitment to excellence through quality education. I have always been very proud to call New Mexico my home because of the countless opportunities it provides. This is a well deserved recognition for the excellent work being done by these high schools, and I would like to congratulate them on their great success.

The following schools were commended with awards: Academy for Technology and the Classics in Santa Fe, NM; Bloomfield High School in Bloomfield, NM; Clayton High School in Clayton, NM; Cliff High School in Cliff, NM; Eldorado High School in Albuquerque, NM; East Mountain Charter High School in Sandia Park, NM; Hagerman High School in Hagerman, NM; La Cueva High School in Albuquerque, NM; Lake Arthur High School in Lake Arthur, NM; Logan High School in Logan, NM; Los Alamos High School in Los Alamos, NM; Magdalena High School in Magdalena, NM; Sandia High School in Albuquerque, NM; Springer High School in Springer, NM; Tatum High School in Tatum, NM; and Texico High School in Texico, NM.

Again, I commend these fine high schools on a job well done, and I hope that these awards will inspire high schools in my home State and around the country to strive for the best.●

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE STEPHEN LOW

• Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate a distinguished former member of the Foreign Service, the Honorable Stephen Low, on the occasion of his recent 80th birthday on December 2, 2007. He has rendered many years of service to our Nation, and I am honored to celebrate this milestone and his achievements.

Upon receiving his doctorate from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy in 1956, the future Ambassador joined the Department of State as an Intelligence Research Officer in what was then the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs. In the years that followed, Ambassador Low served as the Economic-Labor Officer in Kampala, Uganda; the Chief of Political Section, Dakar, Senegal; the Special Assistant to the Deputy Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs; and the Counselor for Political Affairs in Brasilia, Brazil. He then returned to Washington where he was named the Director of Brazil Affairs in the early 1970s.

During the Ford administration, Stephen Low advised our Nation's policymakers on the National Security Council as the senior staff member for Latin America. He then returned to service abroad, as the U.S. Ambassador to Nigeria. Three years later he served as Ambassador to Zambia. Ambassador Low performed these duties admirably, receiving the Department of State Distinguished Honor Award and two Presidential Meritorious Service Awards.

In 1982 Ambassador Low became the Director of the State Department's Foreign Service Institute, the Federal Government's primary training institution for officers and support personnel of the U.S. foreign affairs community. His commitment to education has been steadfast ever since. In addition to teaching and administrative posts at the Johns Hopkins University and other schools, Ambassador Low was named President of the Association of Diplomatic Studies and Teaching, an office he held until 1997.

Today the Ambassador continues his active career. As President and Founder of the Foreign Affairs Museum Council, Ambassador Low worked with members of Congress and all living former Secretaries of State to improve public understanding of the role of diplomacy and the Foreign Service. As he has stated:

Many Americans have little idea what an embassy is, or what an ambassador does. Nor are they aware that our diplomats and other Foreign Service personnel work 24/7 around the world in the interest of the American people.

His subsequent advocacy and leadership in the planning of a National Museum of American Diplomacy at the Department of State has helped to ensure that our Nation honors the past achievements and ongoing service of our country's diplomats.

I congratulate Ambassador Low on his 80th birthday and his lifetime of achievement. I wish him many more years of good health and active service to our country.

I ask that the attached resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows.

Congratulating Hon. Stephen Low on a lifetime of service to the cause and promotion of American diplomacy, and on the recent passing of his 80th birthday on December 2, 2007;

Whereas throughout his years as a career Foreign Service Officer, Ambassador Low served as the U.S. Ambassador to Nigeria and the U.S. Ambassador to Zambia;

Whereas while advising the National Security Council, Ambassador Low served as a senior staff member for Latin America;

Whereas Ambassador Low has received the Department of State Distinguished Honor Award and two Presidential Meritorious Service Awards;

Whereas in his commitment to education, Ambassador Low has served as the Director of the State Department's Foreign Service Institute, President of the Association for Diplomatic Studies and Training, and several teaching posts in the United States and abroad;

Whereas Ambassador Low continues to be active in the creation of a museum and center for the study of American diplomacy at the Department of State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations expresses to Ambassador Low deep appreciation for his service to the Department of State and the United States of America.●

SERGEANT AARON HENEHAN

● Ms. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, During this holiday season, I would like to recognize the soldiers and veterans from Alaska who have given so much and continue to give so much. I would like them to know that their sacrifices in Afghanistan and Iraq have not gone unnoticed by their fellow Alaskans. When I was in Iraq I had the pleasure of meeting soldiers and National Guardsmen from Anchorage, Fairbanks, Seward, Soldotna, Eagle River, Slana, and Wasilla. Hearing their stories and commitment made me incredibly proud to be an Alaskan.

Every day, Alaskans write my office praising the service men and women who have returned and those still in combat. Sometimes it is just a short message conveying their support, while other times is a long heartfelt letter praising our heroes and expressing solidarity with them for the sacrifices they have made. I truly believe that the fact that Alaska has the largest number of veterans per capita says a lot about our State's character.

Alaskan veterans are some of the most exemplary in the Armed Forces. The 172nd Stryker Brigade in particular had their tour in Iraq extended to 16 months, but when their country asked them for more they remained strong and proud. Just last week I received an e-mail from the commander of the 172nd. He informed me that on December 12 Sgt. Gregory Williams from the 172nd was presented the Distinguished Service Cross, the second highest award for valor, for his actions in combat while in Baghdad. Despite being injured himself when their vehicle was struck by a bomb, Sergeant Williams was able to return fire and help a wounded comrade to safety. To date, there have been only eight Distinguished Service Crosses awarded since the war began in 2001.

We Alaskans often enjoy doing things our own way. In Iraq, one Alaskan marine discovered he had hidden talents he never imagined when his innovative approach to searching out insurgents earned him the Navy and Marine Corps Commendation Medal. SGT Aaron A. Henehan led his squad to search out and detain 18 "blacklist" or high-value insurgents while on his third tour in Iraq.

An adventurous young man, Sergeant Henehan was barely out of high school and anxious to see the world when he first thought of signing up to serve his country. September 11 and the outbreak of war did not cause his decision to waiver an inch.

Sergeant Henehan deployed in April of 2003 and spent his first tour in the town of Babylon in Najaf Province. He served his country well, like many who fought alongside him, and began to learn the undercurrents and inner workings of Iraqi society. He returned for a second tour to Husaybah, near Iraq's border with Syria in August 2004. At the time Husaybah was a dangerous town.

Sergeant Henehan served his second tour in Iraq with distinction again but still felt he needed to do more. Before deploying for his third and final tour in February of 2006 he told friends and family back home that he yearned to make a difference in Iraq, a sentiment many American soldiers and guardsmen share with him. He spent a lot of time between his second and third tours thinking about what he could do differently, how he could learn from his experience and achieve a better result.

Combining his marine training with information he learned from a retired LAPD officer deployed to Iraq to teach our troops urban tactics, Sergeant Henehan approached his third tour with what he referred to as a "beat cop mentality." He wanted to approach the problem of rounding up insurgents as if he were a native of the area. He spent his free time studying the tribal history and geography of Husaybah for hours at a time.

The ability to put his plan in motion, Sergeant Henehan says, was made possible in part by Operation Steel Curtain, which had cleared Husaybah block by block, and set up outposts called "firm bases" throughout the city. Upon returning for his third tour, Sergeant Henehan immediately noticed that after this push, while not always willing to openly support the coalition forces, many Iraqis felt safe enough to give him tips on where the insurgents were hiding. This change in mentality, coupled with Sergeant Henehan's knowledge of family and tribal connections, allowed him to determine which people to ask about each of the 18 high value insurgents he located. He knew exactly who would be willing to tip him off about a social rival or historic foe.

Traveling with an interpreter, Sergeant Henehan had a talent for remembering names and personal details. He took every opportunity he could to talk with the locals and learn about the town's social organization and tribal boundaries, often returning several times to talk with the same families to gain their trust. Bringing with him candy, doctors, and his good humor, he would knock on doors and politely ask to chat. Entire families opened up to him. Sometimes it would start with a toy given to a child; sometimes it was a heartfelt conversation with a shopkeeper. The response he got astonished everyone, including the insurgents hiding out in the town.

The 12 marines in his squad called him a fair, but tough leader who they felt very safe with. His intense and proactive preparation for the more than 80 combat missions which he led and his personal attention to each of his 12 soldiers' well-being gave them a sense of security. They too noted how his relaxed Alaskan exterior quickly helped earn him the respect of the townspeople.

Even more remarkably, Sergeant Henehan's reputation for being fair and caring allowed him to detain all 18 high-value insurgents without any real violence. These 18 also led him to their associates, significantly disrupting insurgent operations in that part of Al Anbar Province. Sergeant Henehan remained behind after his unit returned to the States to train new troops about how he learned to wage urban warfare while gaining the trust of the townspeople. The downturn in violence in Al Anbar can be linked, in part, to his efforts and efforts of those like him.

Sergeant Henehan is currently attending a California community college and plans to transfer to a larger State school after completing his distribution credits. He wants to major in computer programs and even talks of one day creating video games that more accurately portray what war in the modern era is like. He has already begun organizing photographs from his three tours to use as backdrops. Clearly his talent for careful planning and his desire to share his knowledge and experiences with others did not leave with his donning of civilian clothes. I wish him the best in all his future endeavors, just as I wish the best for all of our Alaskan veterans and those now serving.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. DOUGLAS C. PATTERSON

● Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, today I commend a distinguished resident of the State of Alabama, Dr. Douglas C. Patterson on the occasion of his retirement from Troy University. Upon receiving his bachelor's degree from Alabama College in 1967, Patterson was commissioned a lieutenant in the U.S. Marine Corps and served as a platoon commander for a Combat Engineer Platoon and as an intelligence officer for the First Engineer Battalion of the First Marine Division in the Republic of Vietnam.

Upon returning from Vietnam, Patterson received his masters from the University of Montevallo and his doctorate from the University of Alabama. Dr. Patterson's experience includes serving as a high school counselor, director of Counseling and Career Services at Jefferson State Junior College, vice president for instruction at the Alabama Institute for the Deaf and Blind and currently, he serves as the senior vice chancellor for administration for Troy University.

Dr. Patterson has served Troy University with great honor and distinction as a senior administrator since 1989 and has provided exemplary service to the university and to the citizens of the State of Alabama. During his tenure as senior vice chancellor for administration, Dr. Patterson directed
