

information security. I think we have missed some key opportunities in that regard.

For example: (1) We haven't seriously considered, to my knowledge, the need to pursue providing incentives for agency success—such as financial incentives for agencies which excel.

(2) We haven't given enough consideration, to my knowledge, to the need to pursue funding penalties and personnel reforms which provide real motivation for an agency to improve its information security.

(3) Although I've pushed the scorecards for many years, we need increased Congressional oversight of agency information security practices.

(4) Have we done enough to bring greater consistency across the IG community regarding standards and review regarding improved information security?

(5) And in our recent review of this issue, I do not believe we have considered, nor do we address, what I believe is one of the most important and complex problems associated with these issues: the difficulties faced by agency Chief Information Officers in their attempts to be successful and effective—both in terms of their status within their agencies and their underlying statutory authority.

(6) Also, have we taken a serious look at whether the creation of a Federal CIO or an Information Czar at OMB would improve the Federal Government's ability to handle and process information? I do not believe so.

Yesterday, OMB Deputy Director for Management, Clay Johnson, wrote to the Committee asking to work with us on a handful of concerns the Administration has with the current draft of the legislation. Although the majority did make important modifications, removing controversial provisions affecting data brokers for example, which were of particular concern to Representative MIKE TURNER, other areas still need to be addressed.

The Administration has expressed particular concern about the bill's codification of terms and requirements in statute, including the definition of "personally identifiable information" as well as various technology-specific provisions, including "personal digital devices" and "peer-to-peer file-sharing programs". I have long maintained that effective security legislation should be technology neutral to enable the government to adequately address constantly evolving threats and technologies. Ironically, we could find ourselves less secure as agencies are forced to meet outdated mandates and requirements. I trust the majority is willing to continue these discussions as the legislation moves forward.

Mr. Speaker, public confidence in government is essential. In the end, the public demands effective government. And effective government depends on secure information. I remain concerned that this legislation falls short in a number of these important areas.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SALAZAR). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4791, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.
