

basic benefits under those programs and still find ways to make them stronger and longer.

Social Security, untouched, will make every promised payment, with cost-of-living adjustments, for the next 25 years. You can't say that about much in Washington. You can't say that about any program other than Social Security. We can do better by making minor, small changes in Social Security today and putting the savings back into Social Security, and then we can say it will last 75 years, which means everybody going into the workplace, starting their work career in America, will know they can count on Social Security to be there when they need it. That is an attainable goal, and if we face it honestly, we can do it.

When I was elected in 1982 and came to office in 1983, we were facing bankruptcy in Social Security. We came together with a bipartisan approach and passed it. We bought literally 52 years of solvency for Social Security, and not a single Member lost the next election because we did it in a bipartisan fashion, determined to make Social Security stronger. We can do it again.

Medicare—same story. Medicare, of course, provides health care for the elderly and disabled in America. It is extremely expensive because health care costs keep going up. Are there ways to reduce the costs of Medicare so that the people who are deserving of care—seniors and the disabled—will have it available to them?

On January 1 of this year, 9,000 Americans turned the age of 65; on January 2, another 9,000; and then every day since—every day for the next 19 years. The boomers have arrived. They have paid into Medicare and Social Security their entire lives, and they expect America to keep its promise. And we will. But we can look at Medicare and find ways to make that program more cost-efficient. There are certainly ways that are obvious.

Under the Medicare prescription drug program, we currently don't have a Medicare option. All we have is private health insurance company options. Let Medicare bargain with pharmaceutical companies to buy in bulk and bring down the cost of drugs for seniors, thus reducing their out-of-pocket costs and our costs as taxpayers. The pharmaceutical industry hates that the way the Devil hates holy water. The fact is that when you put Medicare in there, like the Veterans' Administration is in there, it can make a difference.

We need to include spending, entitlements, and revenue. I hope we can do it on a bipartisan basis.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam President, I am pleased to present the fiscal year 2012 Military Construction and Veterans Affairs and related agencies appropriations bill to the Senate. The bill was unanimously reported out of the committee on June 30. It is a fiscally disciplined and bipartisan measure, and I hope all Senators will support it.

I thank my ranking member, Senator KIRK, for his contributions in crafting this bill. He has taken a very active role on the subcommittee, and it has been a pleasure to work with him. I also thank Chairman INOUE and Vice Chairman COCHRAN, as well as Leader REID and Minority Leader MCCONNELL for their support and assistance in moving this bill forward.

The MILCON-VA appropriations bill provides crucial investments in infrastructure for our military, including barracks and family housing, mission critical training and operational facilities, schools and hospitals, and childcare and family support centers. It also fulfills the Nation's promise to our vets by providing the resources needed for their medical care and benefits.

Madam President, the bill before the Senate today totals $142 billion, of which $72.5 billion is discretionary funding. We are all mindful of the severe economic problems facing this Nation, and this bill reflects that reality. It is $1.25 billion below the budget request and $618 million below the fiscal year 2011 enacted level. I can assure my colleagues there are no congressional earmarks in the bill.

As always, protecting essential benefits and health care for veterans tops my list of priorities. With an aging population of veterans requiring increased services, and a surge of combat veterans from the Iraq and Afghanistan wars entering the system, the demand for VA health care services has increased dramatically in recent years. The number of Iraq and Afghanistan veterans in the VA health care system will exceed half a million in 2012, a 106-percent increase since 2008.

The sluggish economy is exacerbating the pressure on the VA as more and more out of work or underemployed veterans turn to the VA for their health care.

This bill provides $58.6 billion for VA discretionary funding, $2.3 billion over current funding. Nearly 90 percent of the funding—$50.6 billion—is for veterans health care. The bill also includes $52.5 billion in fiscal year 2013 advance appropriations for veterans medical care.

The bill includes $2.9 billion, as requested, to meet the health care needs of veterans who have served in Iraq and Afghanistan, a $594 million increase over the current funding. This funding includes research and treatment programs for mental health issues, including traumatic brain injury and post-traumatic stress disorder.

One of the very few areas in which the bill provides an increase in funding is VA medical research, which is funded at $581 million, $72 million over the budget request, to restore funding to the current level. This program funds a broad array of vital research efforts including mental health, spinal cord injury, burn treatment, polytrauma injuries, and sensory loss.

The bill includes $4.9 billion for health care and support services for homeless veterans. Ending homelessness among veterans is a top priority of VA Secretary Eric Shinseki, and it is a goal fully supported by the committee. As a result of programs the Secretary has instituted, and the robust funding provided in recent MilCon/VA bills to implement them, the average number of homeless veterans on any given night has dropped from 195,000 6 years ago to 75,600 this year. The funding in this bill provides the resources to continue to make headway on this very important initiative.

As a Senator from a rural State, I am pleased to report that the bill also includes $250 million for programs, such as mobile clinics and telemedicine services, to support rural and Native American veterans. This continues the rural health initiative that I initiated in the fiscal year 2009 MilCon/VA bill, and reflects the importance that both Congress and the VA place on meeting the needs of veterans who live in rural areas and must often travel hundreds of miles for treatment at a VA facility.

The bill also includes $52 million for collaborative efforts with the Indian Health Service to ensure that Native American veterans receive the care that they have earned. I am encouraged by this funding and by the fact that the VA created an Office of Tribal Government Relations earlier this year to expand outreach to American Indians, Alaska Natives, and Native Hawaiians. Access to health care among Native Americans is a major problem in South Dakota and other rural States, and I believe that collaboration between the VA and the Indian Health Service is essential to leverage the resources and services of both agencies.

Information technology, or IT, represents another important investment in this bill. The bill provides the full $3.2 billion as requested in the budget to develop electronic health care records, paperless claims systems, and seamless integration of medical and service records with the Defense Department. Secretary Shinseki and former Defense Secretary Robert Gates worked very closely over the past year to develop a framework for implementing a joint VA-DOD electronic health care record system. Their leadership and determination to overcome bureaucratic hurdles to a find a joint electronic solution to the current maze of paperwork involved in transferring health records from DOD to VA was key to making progress on this long-stalled effort.

The Secretaries have announced that the Departments have agreed to pursue a number of integrated development approaches including the decision to share common data centers and to utilize open source software development. I hope that implementing a joint electronic health record system remains a top priority for Secretary Panetta as he assumes the leadership of the Defense Department.

There are several other notable VA programs funded in this bill, including $270 million for women's veterans programs, $6.9 billion for long term care for veterans, and $112 million for the VA Inspector General's Office. Each of these programs meets an emerging requirement for the VA.

As more and more women join the ranks of America's veterans entitled to VA health care, their unique needs require a reevaluation and reemphasis of services offered in VA clinics and hospitals.

Long-term care for veterans is also emerging as a mounting need for veterans, including both the growing population of aging veterans as well as severely wounded veterans from the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

With the growth and complexity of VA services, it is essential to maintain vigilant oversight of VA programs. The committee, therefore, has provided $112 million for the Office of Inspector General, $3 million over the budget request, to support robust oversight by the inspector general.

The bill also provides the full budget request for both major and minor construction as well as the full advance appropriation request for medical facilities. However, I have deep concerns about the VA's budget request in all three areas. With this year's budget submission, the Department also transmitted its 10-year Strategic Capital Investment Plan. The plan identifies a requirement of between $53 billion and $65 billion over the next decade to address critical infrastructure needs. Yet, the combined request for both major and minor construction is $400.8 million below the fiscal year 2011 enacted level. Additionally, the advance request for medical facilities includes $600.2 million for nonrecurring maintenance at existing clinics and hospitals, a $510 million decrease from what is being spent this year.

While I understand that the budget crisis facing the country requires sacrifice and belt tightening from all sectors, funding decreases of this magnitude given the requirements and the age of VA facilities is alarming. I urge the Department to develop and submit a comprehensive plan with next year's budget submission identifying specific ways in which to adequately finance VA's infrastructure needs.

In addition to the above mentioned items, the budget submission included a request to establish a $953 million contingency fund to be available for medical care if a larger than expected number of veterans turns to the VA for health care as a result of the lagging economy. The contingency fund was to be composed of carryover funds already available to the VA as a result of the Federal pay freeze plus $240 million in fiscal year 12 funding.

Instead of creating a loosely defined contingency fund based on an untested projection of the VA's standard modeling formula, the committee has directed the Department to use $664 million in carryover funds made available by the Federal pay freeze, as well as additional carryover funds projected to reach $500 million by the end of fiscal year 12, to address this contingency, should it arise.

With little room to maneuver on the VA side of the ledger, the vast majority of the savings in the bill comes from incrementing or deferring funding for certain military construction projects. The bill provides $13.7 billion for military construction, $1 billion below the request. The MilCon reductions in the bill are restricted to the active duty components. The Guard and Reserve components, Family Housing, BRAC and other accounts are fully funded at the President's request.

The MilCon portion of this bill mirrors the Senate Defense authorization bill, which was unanimously reported out of the Senate Armed Services Committee on June 16. Every military construction project funded in this bill is authorized in the authorization bill. In fact, if you do the math, 52 Senators in this Chamber have already voted in favor of the MilCon portion of this bill.

Because of the constrained budget environment, the bill does not provide any increase in funding for military construction projects. Several Senators urged the committee to provide additional funding for such things as Army Guard readiness centers or various unfunded requirements of the services. In normal times, the committee would wholeheartedly support these efforts, but given the austere budget circumstances, there was simply no money to fund these initiatives.

In addition to MilCon and VA, the bill includes $221 million for several related agencies, including $77 million for the American Battle Monuments Commission as requested; $45.8 million for Arlington National Cemetery as requested, and $67.7 million for the Armed Forces Retirement Home as requested. The bill also provides $30.8 million for the U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, which is $25 million below the request. The reduction reflects the committee's decision to defer funding for a proposed courthouse for the Court until uncertainties surrounding the cost and location of the project can be resolved.

Madam President, I again thank my ranking member for his support in crafting this bill. I also thank the staff of the subcommittee—Christina Evans, Chad Schulken and Andy Vanlandingham of my staff; Dennis Balkham and D'Ann Letteri of the minority staff, and former minority staffer Ben Hammond—for their months of hard work and cooperative effort to produce this bill.

Again, this is a well-balanced and bipartisan bill. It provides resources vital to the well being of our troops and their families, and to the millions of veterans who have served and sacrificed for their Nation. I urge my colleagues to support this bill, and I yield the Floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KIRK. Madam President, I first came to Capitol Hill in 1984 during Ronald Reagan's first term. I believe it was Chairman Hatfield running the committee on the Senate side and Jamie Whitten on the House side. I care very much about the appropriations process and the Appropriations Committee because I think we spend less with a higher degree of transparency when we consider appropriations bills in regular order, as this one now is.

This bill funds our veterans programs and our military construction needs mainly for the Active-Duty and Reserve Americans who wear the uniform—or wore the uniform—upon which all of our freedoms and the independence of our country depends. Today, there are over 20 million veterans, and this bill cares for them in a bipartisan way. We owe these veterans just about everything—for our independence and freedom—and this bill cares for them.

Now, why, in this difficult and partisan time, is this bill coming up in this way? Why is it that we have every Republican on the subcommittee and the full committee in favor of this legislation? It is because the chairman made the decision, that I strongly supported, to mark to the House level. When we marked to the House level, we opened the door for full bipartisan support for this needed bill.

We present to the Senate this bill for full consideration, taking into account all of the requests of Members in their budget submission. But let me emphasize that not only are we slightly below the House spending level in discretionary budget authority, there are no earmarks in this bill, reflecting the new wave of reform that has come to the Appropriations Committee—both the House and the Senate.

We have made a tough set of spending decisions in this bill. We have come in $1.2 billion below President Obama's spending request. We came in $620 million below last year's level. I was a bit surprised we were able to do this—and that we did—but we are even $2.6 million below the House Republican-approved level in the bill put together by Chairman CULBERSON.

This bill spends in discretionary budget authority less than the House of Representatives, and I will just point out that when the House took up this legislation, over 400 Members of the House of Representatives—Republicans and Democrats—supported this legislation, and only five Members of the House voted against this legislation. That is why this legislation enjoys such tremendous bipartisan support on our side.

This bill would not be possible without the outstanding work of Chairman JOHNSON and his staff, his military experience and, most importantly, his son's military experience. On behalf of the veterans of his State, he has done a very good job, with my full support. We take care of our veterans and their benefits, their health care, and the construction of medical facilities in this legislation.

Madam President, many veterans live in urban areas, but also a great many live in rural and even highly rural areas. This bill pays attention to their needs thanks to the chairman, and also I want to highlight the work of the Senator from Alaska, LISA MURKOWSKI, in the decisions we made in this bill to make sure veterans who live in the State of Alaska will not, in many cases now, need to leave the State for their veterans care.

We have also worked diligently with our veterans service organizations, and I would highlight this bill has now been endorsed by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, by AMVETS, by the Paralyzed Veterans of America, the Disabled American Veterans, and the Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America. I take the last endorsement very seriously, having, as a reservist, served in Afghanistan myself.

Chairman JOHNSON highlighted the funding levels in this bill, which I think are quite important, but I would also like to highlight several policy issues in this bill. No. 1, originally, the administration—our commander in South Korea—put forward an idea to bring almost 50,000 American dependents to South Korea to build homes and hospitals and schools. But the cost could be upwards of over $20 billion to transfer that many Americans to the Korean peninsula.

Given this time of deficits and debt, and given this enormous bill, I think DOD is rethinking this proposal, as they wisely should. I think this bill lays out a set of concerns over where we go with such a spending decision.

With regard to Guantanamo—very important to me—originally there was a proposal to transfer the al-Qaida core of terrorists to my State, to Thompson, IL. This bill wisely concludes the overwhelming bipartisan provision prohibiting the construction or renovation of any facility in the United States or its territories for individuals detained at Guantanamo Bay.

With regard to Guam, while the Navy is attempting to move more than 17,000 marines and their families from Okinawa to Guam, the plan that Chairman JOHNSON and I have seen has serious problems. Therefore, there are no projects in this bill associated with this very complicated move.

We did fund the Air Force request for projects related to the Strike capability for the bed down of Strike and intelligence capabilities, but the rest we are looking for further information.

Also, with regard to our military infrastructure in Germany, we believe there is a better need for accounting of funds that we provide for facilities, and, as a result, we cut about $37 million from the requested projects.

With regard to charter schools and improving education for our military families, we think the children of servicemembers have a unique situation and fewer choices when choosing schools. So we have asked the Department of Defense to conduct a study and tell this committee where charter schools could make a positive difference.

I will highlight here my work with my fellow Senator, Mr. DURBIN, on potential charter school operations serving the men and women and the families of the Great Lakes community in northern Illinois.

I raise the one particular issue important to me, which is that over time we are planning on spending upwards of $20 billion, as we should, on the new facilities for Guam. But I think if we are going to make that kind of investment in Guam, we need to make sure those facilities are there when the United States needs them most in a military capacity, which is during combat. That is why it is so essential to provide also for the missile defense of Guam, and, I would say, for the missile defense of Guam on platforms that cannot be sunk. That is why we are calling on the Department of Defense not to ignore plans to provide for the missile defense of Guam, and, I would say to emphasize, a land-based solution that is more survivable.

We also highlighted more scrutiny on the budget request, especially with regard to funding for general officers quarters. I will say that in my review, along with the chairman, we saw a disciplined budget request largely by the Air Force and the Navy to house our Air Force generals and admirals; but I have been disappointed with the Army, which originally came forward with a request for $1.4 million to upgrade a general's garden in Germany. Luckily, the Army has pulled back that request, and we are looking for further scrutiny to make sure that general officer quarters budget requests are in line with the practice of the sister services of the Air Force and the Navy.

This bill also handles issues with regard to the VA, especially on information technology. This bill fully funds the account and encourages the Department to pursue open-source, off-the-shelf technology for electronic health records, and I think that is critical to maintaining cost containment as we go forward.

I will also say we have been urging the Department of Defense and Veterans Affairs to come up with one common electronic medical record. The vision here is that when an American joins the U.S. military, that record then follows that servicemember through, at minimum, for example, a 3-year enlistment, and then a 60-year to 90-year time as a veteran. It should be a common record. I hope the two Secretaries, Panetta and Shinseki, move to finally make sure that becomes a reality.

With regard to the contingency fund in this bill, the Department of Veterans Affairs requested a contingency fund in the event they needed additional funds. We do not support establishing this fund but did allow the Department to keep $664 million it received last year in advance appropriations for the now-prohibited pay raises. This should be adequate to ensure our veterans are not only cared for but will give the VA some flexibility during the period of conflict in Iraq and Afghanistan.

This bill also emphasizes caregivers who give care to our wounded veterans, veterans who live in rural areas, and veterans who are sent to facilities a long distance from their home, as I mentioned, in the State of Alaska. We also highlighted the issue of claims processing so our veterans could finally receive the compensation they deserve in a reasonable amount of time.

I want to echo the chairman's thanks to the staff, especially led by Tina Evans on the Democratic side and Dennis Balkham on the Republican side.

In short, this is a very good bill. It represents the Senate moving forward under regular order. It represents greater transparency to the appropriations process.

I would highlight, we have cut or reduced funding in 24 separate major areas, and these were hard choices to make. We did them in line with the decisions made by the authorizing committee under Chairmen LEVIN and MCCAIN's leadership. We also completely denied funding for a proposed brandnew building to house the Court of Veterans Appeals. In this time of deficit and debt, I think we should hold off.

In sum, this bill represents cooperation between Republicans and Democrats. This bill represents budget control and cooperation between House and Senate. This bill represents cooperation and coordination between the authorizing Armed Services Committee and the Appropriations Committee, and this bill, underlined with the endorsement of major veterans service organizations, represents a commitment to our veterans.

I think we should move forward. I know later we will consider a point of order with regard to not taking up a bill prior to the adoption of a formal budget. I would hope that common sense would prevail here; that because this is one of those rare measures where we are marking up to the House level that only five Members of the House voted against at that level, that all of the Republicans and all of the Democrats on the subcommittee voted for this legislation, and yesterday 89 Members voted in overwhelming bipartisan fashion for cloture to bring this bill up so we can get the Senate moving again, that we can get the appropriations process moving again, that we can stand by our men and women in uniform who need these facilities, and our veterans, and that, yes, we can control spending in full agreement with the House of Representatives but still move the Senate forward.

Madam President, with that, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I thank my colleagues for their excellent presentation. They are excellent Senators. And, from all that appears, they produced a piece of legislation that will be positive for our country. But the pending measure, H.R. 2055, An Act Making Appropriations for Military Construction, the Department of Veterans Affairs and related Agencies, offered by the Senators, would appropriate Federal funds for the year 2012. However, the Senate has not yet adopted a concurrent budget resolution for 2012, and there is no 302(a) allocation in place for that fiscal year.

Section 303(c) of the Congressional Budget Act prohibits consideration of any appropriation bill until a concurrent resolution on the budget has been agreed to and an allocation has been made to the Committee on Appropriations for fiscal year 2012, or any subsequent year.

Therefore, I raise a point of order against this measure pursuant to section 303 of the Congressional Budget Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the point of order under section 303 of that act for H.R. 2055, and any amendments thereto and motions thereon.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I object and would debate the issue.

I make this motion for a very important reason, not directly related to the quality of the work of Senator JOHNSON and Senator KIRK in producing this bill, but a very important question concerning the budget of the United States.

We have in the United States Code a budget act. The budget act says you shouldn't be bringing forth appropriating bills until you have a budget. That is pretty simple, that is pretty commonsensical, and it is the correct way to do business. We haven't had a budget for 806 days now. The reason we are spending this country into bankruptcy is we have had no budget. This year, the majority has not even sought to bring one to committee, and certainly not brought one on the floor.

The Democratic leadership said it would be foolish to pass a budget. Well, I don't think it is foolish to pass a budget. I think our lack of budget is the reason we have gotten out of control in what we are doing. So that is the reason why I made the objection.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be able to enter into a colloquy with my Republican colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I would say this is a very important matter, and I don't like to have to take this action, but I believe it is the right action.

I see on the floor Senator CORKER from Tennessee. He was mayor of the city of Chattanooga and as mayor he produced budgets and actually did one of the greatest jobs of any mayor of the United States, the truth be known, in making that city the fabulous place it is today. He is a businessman also.

I ask Senator CORKER, what are his thoughts at this point in time about the state of the financial management of the taxpayers' money being handled by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CORKER. Thank you, Madam President.

I thank the Senator from Alabama for his comments and leadership on the Budget Committee.

To the two gentlemen, the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from South Dakota, I thank them for their work in appropriations. This discussion on the floor has absolutely nothing to do with work they have done. I understand actually the top line they are using is within the budget that was passed through the House.

The reason I am here today, though, is for this reason: There aren't many Senators on either side of the aisle who believe the Senate is functioning in an appropriate manner. I can't go to the dining room or any other place, walk down the hall, get on the subway, without some Senator saying, Can you believe how this place is operating? Our allowing spending bills to come to the floor and to be voted upon without having budgets basically makes us an accomplice in allowing this place to continue to be dysfunctional.

We are having a showdown over the debt ceiling because there isn't any other place to have a showdown. I realize many people have decided that is not the appropriate place, and there has been a scheme concocted to sort of allow both sides to have it as they may and try to fight this out in the electoral process down the road instead of dealing with some of the tough issues we ought to deal with now.

But it seems to me that what we do by going on about our business in this way is we act as accomplices to the dysfunctionality of the Senate. It is my belief this Senate, by virtue of the way we are acting, is making this great Nation weaker. That is what we are doing. This Chamber we are standing in right now is causing this great Nation to decline because we are unwilling to come down here. I would say, candidly, leadership on both sides of the aisle doesn't want us to come down and make tough decisions. Either side wants it 100 percent their way. But we realize that to move things ahead, you have got to skirmish, you have got to fight, you have got to debate. Sometimes you have to do some things you don't want to do to move the country ahead. But we are avoiding that, and what we are doing today is moving possibly to an appropriations bill, a spending bill, without a budget.

I can't imagine in a country spending $3.7 trillion, 40 percent of it that we don't have, that we are going to move to spending bills without resolving these particular issues. So I am extremely disappointed.

I know I have been saying some pretty strong things on the floor, but it is because I am concerned about this country. I know everybody here is concerned about this country. It is not as if those of us who have been talking about this issue are the only ones. That is not the image or perception I am trying to project. I think sometimes we go to sleep at the switch. We go about our business almost as zombies down here, continuing to allow this dysfunctionality to occur.

I am all in support of the movement put in place here to basically not allow this to go forward because we don't have a budget. That is the appropriate place for us to be.

I hope the Senate, in spite of the fact this appropriations bill funds some things that candidly we all support—we want to see veterans get benefits. But those veterans, many of them, lost limbs doing tough things for our country, and they are watching potentially us not having the courage to do tough things on the floor that might flesh this out, that might cause us to actually take a tough position on the floor. But, oh, that might affect electoral politics down the road, so instead of doing that, we will go 806 days without a budget.

Look, I am disappointed. I am disappointed in all of us on both sides of the aisle. I do not think we should be going to a spending bill until we do the tough business that we were sent here to do as Senators.

With that, I yield to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Before recognizing other Senators, I briefly ask Senator

CORKER, having been a businessman and a mayor and having observed the political scene in the country, is the Senator aware of any government entity—city, county or State—that systematically, almost structural, is borrowing 40 cents out of every $1 they spend? Can he remember any time in Tennessee, in any city or State, that ever ran such a deficit?

Mr. CORKER. No, I cannot. The fact is, that is why recent polls show Americans have about a 20-percent approval rating of Congress. What I would say, based on what I know, based on what we are getting ready to do on the floor today, 20 percent is way too high. The fact is we do everything we can to avoid tough decisions in public, tough decisions in public where we have to take a stand.

That is what we were elected to do. That is what the veterans who receive benefits, if this bill passes, did. That is what we are not doing. My guess is they will be willing to wait until this bill passes—it doesn't fund things until next year—and allow us to make the tough decisions we need to make as we flesh out a budget, as we work out among ourselves to finally come to a place we agree upon in funding this government.

I certainly appreciate the leadership of the Senator. I know others want to speak at this moment and I yield the floor.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank Senator CORKER. I just would say the spasm that is occurring in the Senate, the frustration that is boiling up, is not for light or transient reasons. It is a big deal when the U.S. Government has been for months and will continue to be borrowing about 40 percent of every $1 we spend, running up the largest deficits the Nation has ever seen. The law says, the United States Code says you should have a budget.

When you set a budget, you take all the bills that are out there and tell them how much money they have to spend so the total amount of money at the end does not exceed a dangerous level for the country. That is what a budget does.

We are going to seek and repeatedly call to the attention of this Senate that we have the cart before the horse. We are spending money without a budget and we are going to have to have a budget or else we are not in control of our spending. Once you have a budget, it takes 60 votes to violate the budget. You can stick to it if you make up your mind to do so. We do not have to violate it and burst the budget. That is what we are talking about today. It is a matter of great seriousness. I am pleased my colleague, Senator RAND PAUL from Kentucky, who was elected last fall to this body, is here. I know he talked about the State of the American economy and our debt during that campaign.

I ask the Senator, what are his thoughts as we approach this moment?

Mr. PAUL. I wish to join in the sort of the outrage that we would consider spending money without having a plan. Who spends money with no plan as to how much you are going to spend or a plan as to what the repercussions are for spending money you do not have? We are spending \$100,000 a second. By the time I finish this sentence, we will have spent $\frac{1}{2}$ million.

Of that $100,000 a second, we are borrowing $40,000 a second. The President is asking us now—you all heard about it, the debate is on—the President is asking us to add $2 trillion of spending and borrowing, of borrowing and spending—$2 trillion. How long will it last? We do not know because there is not a budget, but there is going to be an estimated $2 trillion that will be spent in the next year that we do not have.

What does that mean to a country? There are estimates that our deficit now, which approaches the size of our economy, is costing us 1 million jobs a year. What does that mean? That also means less revenue, which means worse deficits. It is all compounding upon itself.

We have a rule and a law within the Senate—is it called the budget resolution from 1974?

Mr. SESSIONS. The Budget Act.

Mr. PAUL. In this, it had some rules. Right now we are discussing: Do we need new rules to do something about the deficit? This was a rule they thought about back in 1974. It was supposed to make things better. But it shows the rules only work if we obey them. We will be in defiance of this rule. That is the question I have for Senator SESSIONS: Will we be in defiance of our own rules if we go forward with an appropriation without a budget?

Mr. SESSIONS. It absolutely will. It sets forth precisely the language. It requires this. It is pretty clear. I don't think there is any doubt about it: Until the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year has been agreed to and an allocation has been made to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate under section 302(a) for that year, it shall not be in order for the Senate to consider any appropriations bill.

That is pretty clear. I am pleased to see the Senator is a doctor, not a lawyer, but I believe anybody could understand that point.

Mr. PAUL. What was the intention, though? What was the intention that rule would do? By having a budget was it supposed to limit, then, what each appropriations bill for each subject would be allowed to spend?

Mr. SESSIONS. That is correct. I am sure in 1974 they were concerned about the process in the Senate. They decided to try to bring order to it. They decided to require the budget be passed which sends a message over to the Appropriations Committee. This is a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee producing their MILCON proposal.

They then give them numbers which they are supposed to stay within. If they do not, it requires a 60-vote total to proceed above the budget number. It is a way to bring integrity to the system.

Mr. PAUL. So by invoking this rule from the 1974 Budget Act, the Senator's intention has nothing to do with the bill presented before us, it has to do with whether we should be responsible as a government, have a budgetary plan, know how much money comes in, know how much money is being spent, and do the responsible things the American people expect of us.

I am concerned what happens if we keep on this path. If we keep spending money at the rate we are spending it, within about a decade entitlements and interest consume the whole budget, that is, if interest rates do not go up. As you noticed the other day when Larry Lindsey wrote about it in the Wall Street Journal, he said if interest rates go up to where they have historically been, we will add another $5 trillion. My fear is the economy will not withstand it, our country will not withstand it, and we need to have somebody to say enough is enough.

The country needs to have a plan. We need to budget how much money comes in and how much we can spend. I think this is a good first step.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator. I cannot think of a more important time in history for us to return to the tried and true budgetary process than at a time in which we are spending to a degree that is irresponsible, above anything we have ever done before. It is threatening the American economy. It is not a light, little problem. It is a serious problem. We are going now 805, 806 days without a budget. That is part of the problem.

We are going to continue to work to insist that we proceed in the regular order under a budget. The House has passed a budget. The Republican House passed one by April 15, as the law requires. We have not even had a markup in the Budget Committee because the Democratic leadership has decided it is not fun to vote on a budget. You have to show your cards. You have to show where you are going to raise taxes, where you are going to cut spending, and how much the deficit is going to be after it is all over.

President Obama's budget received such a poor reception because it was so unbalanced and irresponsible that, I guess, maybe they decided it would be foolish, as the leader said, for the Senate to even produce one. That is not a good reason.

I know it might be appropriate that we yield at this point to our colleagues and let them share any remarks they have.

Mr. PAUL. I have a question before we finish. The question I have is: We have not had a budget in 2 years. When is the last time we had appropriations bills and are we working in the committees? See, the people expect us to come up here and do our jobs and I think our job is in committee. We deliberate over a budget in your Budget Committee. Over appropriations, are we deliberating over appropriations or have we had any committee hearings over the debt ceiling or how we could cut spending in order to spend so much money we do not have? Are we in the process of doing what we are supposed to be doing in committee?

Mr. SESSIONS. I don't believe we are, but I have to give this subcommittee credit. I am told that the appropriations bill now before the Senate is the first stand-alone appropriations bill brought to the floor of the Senate since 2008.

When I came here, we would try to pass all our appropriations bills, at least a number of them, before the August recess and all by September 30. When we did not, we were embarrassed. In the last several years, everything has been cobbled into one big continuing resolution and moved in a block.

I guess I say to my colleagues as I yield the floor, thank you for proceeding at a pace to get a bill forward. It is not your fault that we have not had a budget at this point in time.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLUMENTHAL). The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I believe Senator KIRK would like to speak in favor of the motion to waive and I yield him as much time as he may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. President, I thank our ranking Republican member on the Budget Committee because in normal circumstances I would be strongly supporting him and agree with him. The irony is, this legislation conforms to a budget, it conforms to the PAUL RYAN House budget and fits under the 302(b) allocation; that is, the amount of money the House granted to the House Appropriations Subcommittee that wrote this bill. When this bill passed our very conservative House of Representatives, only five Members of the House voted against it. All the leading Members of the House voted for it.

We talk about needing to make tough decisions. I appreciate the Members and their praise for the underlying legislation because we made some tough decisions. We looked at the President's request and we made a number of cuts.

In Alaska, at Fort Wainwright, we cut $57 million from their aviation complex; in Germany, at Gomersheim Central Distribution Facility we cut $21 million; also, at that same facility, their infrastructure we cut by $16 million; at Fort Bliss, for the maintenance facility, we terminated funding for that, also for their infrastructure proposal; at Fort Belvoir, road and infrastructure projects, we terminated that project. In Honduras, at Soto Cano, we made a $5 million reduction; in California, the Coronado Fitness Center for North Island, we made a $14 million reduction; in California, at Bridgeport, for a multipurpose building, an addition, we made a $3 million reduction; in the Persian Gulf, in Bahrain, for the bachelors' enlisted quarters, we terminated funding for that for this fiscal year; also, in Bahrain, a waterfront development, also terminated that; in the Marianas, at the North Ramp utilities, we also terminated that. That was a $78 million reduction. In Marianas, at the north ramp facility, we also terminated with a $78 million reduction; also in the Finnegan Water Utilities, ended funding for that project. In Guam, at the Guam Strike Fuel Systems Maintenance Handler, we cut funding in half, saving $64 million. In Nebraska, at Offutt, we made a $30 million reduction for their replacement facility No. 1. In Al Udeid in Qatar, we terminated funding for the Blatchford-Preston Complex. In Utah, at Hill Air Force Base, we terminated funding for the F-35 ADAL Hangar. In Colorado, at Buckley, we made a $70 million reduction in their Mountainview Operations Facility. In Maryland, at their joint base Andrews, their ambulatory care center suffered a 150-percent reduction. In Maryland, at Fort Meade, the high-performance computing factory, we terminated funding for that facility. In Texas, joint base San Antonio, the ambulatory care center, we cut funding in half, saving $80 million. In Texas, at Fort Bliss, at the hospital replacement facility, we reduced funding by $27 million. In Utah, Camp Williams, the data center, we cut that funding in half, saving $123 million.

In total, we made the reductions in 24 separate programs including canceling the building I talked about, a whole new court for the Court of Veterans Appeals. That is why this legislation came in $2.6 million even below the House, why it is $1.2 billion in budget authority below the President and $620 million below last year's budget authority, reminding Members there are no earmarks in this legislation.

Eighty-nine Members voted for cloture on this legislation yesterday, which is why we brought it up. My hope is those 89 Members vote for cloture again on this underlying motion. I think most of our Members on my side, the Republican side, are going to vote for this budget point of order once we get to that, and I completely understand. I will probably be supporting him on other bills. The only common-sense point I will make here is that because we are at the House budget level and because the House has adopted them, this conforms to the PAUL RYAN budget, I think we should move forward, especially as our ranking member wisely said, this is the first appropriations bill coming up separately since 2008, and I will say you make specific reductions to real spending when you actually bring up a bill, as Chairman JOHNSON has decided to do with my backing.

I yield to Chairman JOHNSON and thank him for the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. I see Senator LEE from Utah. Senator LEE is a new Senator. He campaigned throughout his State and talked about the kind of issues we are dealing with today. I would yield to him at this time.

Mr. LEE. We have now been operating for more than 800 days without a budget having been passed. We are operating at the direction of the party in control of this body on autopilot. It is easy to operate on autopilot. In many ways it is far easier than operating not on autopilot, especially when we are spending more than $1.5 trillion a year more than we are bringing in, more than $1.5 trillion every year more than we have, continuing to bury our children under a mountain of debt. When you are on autopilot, you don't have the same constraints, the same hard choices, the same prioritization demands that need to be made that Americans make every single day as they manage their homes, their lives, their families, their businesses—and State and local governments. This is unfortunate. It is unnecessary, and it is shameful. It should not continue to operate this way. An enterprise as large as the Federal Government, which brings in $2.2 trillion every single year, having access to more money than perhaps any other institution on Earth, ought to be able to operate with a budget. It ought to be able to pass a budget. It ought not be operating on autopilot so as to insulate itself from critiques justifiable and unjustifiable alike, from those who would say: Why are you doing it this way? Why are you doing it that way? To have a debate, a discussion, that is necessary. It necessarily surrounds the budgeting process in any legislative body, in any republic around the world.

In the process of operating on autopilot, we are severely exacerbating our deficit problem with our national debt now totaling nearly $15 trillion. What then is the solution? I believe the solution to our current problem, especially as we approach the debt limit, involves the cut, cap, and balance approach, including passage by both Houses of Congress of the Cut, Cap, and Balance Act, one that would require, in addition to our making immediate short-term cuts and adopting statutory spending caps designed to put us on a firm, smooth glidepath toward a balanced budget, that we also pass a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. All of these would be passed as conditions precedent to our raising the debt limit, which many of us are willing to do, if necessary, to get those measures passed. We are not willing to raise it without those measures first being passed because we cannot continue to perpetuate this problem, one which we operate on autopilot while burning $1.5 trillion a year that we do not have.

This is crowding out other priorities. It is crowding out other investment in our economy. It is killing jobs. It is jobs we need to be focused on because that is what the American people are focused on. They are worried about their ability and the ability of their friends and family members, many of whom are unemployed, to be able to provide for their children, to pay their rent, to buy their groceries. These are things every American ought to be able to have access to and would have access to if only they had access to jobs. But at a time when we are spending at such a rate as we are, when we borrowed to such a degree that we have that our debt-to-GDP ratio is at about 95 percent, we are killing as many as 1 million jobs every year in America as long as we remain in that danger zone. This simply cannot continue.

Another thing we face right now that is something I find completely unacceptable is the fact that amidst all of this debate and discussion we have had in recent weeks about the debt limit, amidst the offer on the part of what are now most of the Republicans in the Senate to raise the debt limit under the circumstances I have outlined, the President of the United States responded to those offers by threatening—promising, perhaps—to cut Social Security to current retirees if the debt limit is not immediately raised and raised only consistent with the conditions that he is demanding right now. I fail to understand why the President of the United States would prefer to make so hasty, so cruel, and so reckless a threat as withholding Social Security checks for current retirees before looking at any other Federal program.

Look, we borrow at a rate of about $125 billion a month. That is a lot of money. A lot of people don't make that much money in a whole year. As we are borrowing at that rate, we have to take into account the fact that Social Security benefits cost the U.S. Treasury about $50 billion a month. It is $50 billion out of $125 billion each month that we borrow, assuming that is the portion we borrow. Meanwhile, we are bringing in $200 billion a month in tax revenue. So there is more than enough tax revenue there to cover not only Social Security benefits but also interest on debt and a number of other things as well. That begs the question: Why are Social Security beneficiaries the first to be threatened? Why is it their checks that the President is threatening to withhold first? There is no explanation to this that he has offered, and I hereby demand one.

I think our current retirees deserve more than to be used as pawns in a high-stakes political game, one that uses fear and uncertainty and doubt rather than reason and discussion and debate and willingness to compromise. The need for this has never been greater. The consequences for disregarding the need for debate and discussion have never been higher. I urge my colleagues and I urge all Americans to work together to find a solution to this, a solution that need not involve and should not involve threatening America's most vulnerable, including retirees, who rely each month on Social Security, withholding those benefits simply because the President of the United States is unwilling to compromise, is unwilling to meet the conditions many Republicans in this body have acknowledged are their conditions precedent for raising the debt limit.

There is a way forward. There is a road that will take us home, and the road home can be found in the Cut, Cap and Balance Act. This is not just the best proposal, this is the only proposal that currently has significant public support from a substantial number of Members of this body. Sometime today or tomorrow, companion legislation will be introduced in the House of Representatives, and we will be moving forward. I urge my colleagues to carefully consider this, and I urge my fellow Americans to carefully consider these and to urge their representatives and their Senators to embrace them and to adopt them.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank Senator LEE for his leadership on this cut, cap, and balance plan. I think it would change the debt trajectory of our country and put us on a path to prosperity rather than a path to decline and deficit and maybe financial crisis.

Indeed, Mr. Erskine Bowles and Mr. Alan Simpson, the co-chairmen of the debt deficit commission appointed by President Obama, told us earlier this year in the Budget Committee that this Nation has never faced a more predictable economic crisis. What he is saying was the spending course we are on is so out of sync with reality, it is inevitable we will pay a price economically for that. So part of the reason we are where is because we have not had a budget in over 2 years. If you don't have a budget, it makes it harder for the American people to ascertain whether you are spending more than you ought to be spending, and the whole process is able to be pursued without public knowledge and full disclosure when you don't have a budget.

Every President is required by the same Budget Act to submit a budget. I think there is no President who has failed to comply with the Budget Act and does not require that you go to jail if you violate it. It would probably be better off if that had been the case. But the President submitted a budget earlier this year in February. It was, I believe, the most irresponsible budget ever presented to Congress at a time when systemic, structural deficits of trillions of dollars, the likes of which we have never, ever had before—at a time when we needed to confront that and discuss it as a people, as a nation, he submitted a budget that increased taxes significantly, increased spending even more, and increased the deficit, not reduced it.

Eventually it came up for a vote. I brought it up for a vote since my colleagues wanted to vote down the House budget that was a responsible budget. It would actually change our debt course, reduce spending by $6 trillion. They brought that up and it got 40 or so votes, but it did not pass. I then brought up President Obama's budget, in a Senate with a majority of Democratic Members, and it failed 0 to 97. Mr. President, 97 to 0, because it didn't deserve a single vote, but it had one characteristic about it that was important. It actually had numbers in it. I guess the budget staff—they always produced a budget—before the spin doctors at the White House realized it, they sent out a budget projecting the President's future plans for America. For example, at a time when we are borrowing 40 cents of every dollar, the President proposed next year to increase the Education Department. Ninety percent of our education funds are from the States, and they always take care of that, and we provide certain Federal funds that can be an asset to them sometimes. Sometimes it is a liability, frankly. But at any rate, he asked for a 10.5-percent increase in Education, a 9.5-percent increase to the Energy Department, which spends most of its time blocking the production of energy rather than producing more lower cost, cleaner energy for the country. It proposed a 10.5-percent increase in the State Department budget, and it proposed—hold your hats—a 60-percent increase in transportation. Much of that was for high-speed rail so everybody can walk—80 percent of Americans, apparently, can walk to a train station and travel on the high-speed rail. We don't have the money for that. States are rejecting the money. They run the numbers. They know it is just not going to be feasible and that it is just an overreach.

I guess what I am saying is that somebody in this country does not get it. I thought the American people sent a message loud and clear last year when they sent a lot of new Members to Congress, such as Senator PAUL and Senator LEE, who were shocked at it and talked to their constituents and came to Congress to do something about it.

We haven't even brought up a budget. Why didn't Senator REID and the Democratic leadership decide to bring up a budget? Well, if they bring a budget, then they have to show what they believe. They have to propose a solution to the problem. Well, what was their plan? Because they called up the House budget and voted it down—every Democrat voted it down—and they never produced one of their own. When I brought up President Obama's budget, they voted it down. So we have not seen one real solution.

They have been talking about, oh, they will do this and that. Senator DURBIN said we can change Social Security some—we can do something about Medicare. Let's see your plan. Let's see it. The chairman of the Budget Committee says he has a budget. He has a budget, and he leaks out portions of it, but nobody sees the real budget. There are certain numbers and visions and ideas, and he claims they have a budget. But if a person is unwilling to produce the budget and have a hearing in the Budget Committee, then I think they don't have one. It is not a budget. I don't know what it is, but it is not a budget.

I see my colleague, Senator CORNYN, who has been a member of the Budget Committee. I know he is knowledgeable about these issues, and I am pleased to yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I have come to the floor to express my appreciation for the ranking member of the Budget Committee, Senator SESSIONS, and to express many of the same concerns I know he has articulated.

One of the most basic responsibilities of any business or family or, frankly, of Congress itself is to pass a budget. But, as the Senator from Alabama pointed out—and it has been pointed out time and time again—Congress has failed for more than 800 days—800 days—to perform one of its most basic and fundamental responsibilities, and that is to take up and pass a budget.

Even though we haven't passed a budget and taken up a budget, that doesn't mean the spending has stopped. Indeed, the spending goes on in a reckless sort of way. We have spent $7.3 trillion since the last budget was passed, and we have increased the national debt by $3.2 trillion.

Now the Senate is considering a spending bill, an appropriations bill, before we have even passed a budget. It strikes me that is exactly backward. We should be passing and debating a budget first before we then take up appropriations bills. This is not the way Congress should operate.

Now, taxpayers who might be watching this on C-SPAN or elsewhere or in the gallery may be asking themselves, well, how can Congress spend money without having a budget in place, because we know a budget is a very important form of self-discipline. It requires us to identify what our priorities are. What are the things we have to spend money on? What are things we would like but we can put off until tomorrow or next year? What are the things we would like to have but we really can't afford? The fact is, Congress has been operating in an undisciplined and extravagant sort of way not with our money but with the taxpayers' money and, even worse, with the money these young men and women who are sitting in front of me are going to have to pay because our legacy to them will be a burden of debt which will limit their opportunity and their prosperity.

As Senator SESSIONS, our ranking member, has pointed out, this is not only a bad idea, this is not only bad policy, this is not only a breach with our precedent and policies, there is, in fact, a Budget Act rule that prohibits what is going on; that is, spending money without a budget in place. It violates the Senate rules.

Everybody knows spending money without a budget in place is not fiscally responsible. Of course, I would say to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, we all support our military and our veterans, and there is no greater responsibility of the Federal Government than to defend our citizens and to make sure the needs of our troops and veterans are met. But Congress should not, in the interest of doing something that is important, circumvent its own rules.

Taxpayers deserve transparency. With transparency comes accountability. And without a budget, taxpayers get neither.

We know what has been going on in the absence of Congress doing its job. Indeed, the President's own proposed budget would have vastly expanded the debt and the deficits, and that is why it lost when we brought it to the floor and said we want to vote on it. It lost 97 to 0. No member of the opposing party, the President's own party, voted for the President's proposed budget because it was irresponsible. It did nothing to solve the problem of reckless spending, deficits, and unsustainable debt.

So what are we left with? Well, we are told that on August 2 the Secretary of the Treasury says we will run out of money. Rather than having a budget debated and voted on in front of the American people where every American citizen could watch it and see what is going on and call our offices and express their concerns either supporting that budget or saying, no, Members of Congress ought to change it by offering an amendment, what we are given now by the President is secret negotiations behind closed doors. I assume it will be rolled out at some point, and we will be told: Take it or leave it. August 2, we are out of money. And Mr. Senator, Madam Senator, Madam Congressperson, you can't do your most fundamental job; that is, have a debate in the light of day in front of the American people.

Now, does this ring a bell? It seems to me this is starting to be a habit—a bad habit. It started with the health care bill. It was rammed through Congress. It was a product of secret negotiations. All sorts of special deals were cut behind closed doors. Only now are we really beginning to see what the consequences of those special deals were and the costs that were vastly underestimated in the health care bill.

I hate to say this, but President Obama has failed to lead on the debt ceiling. First, we know he called for a clean up-or-down vote without any cuts or any entitlement reform. That is the first thing he called for. Thank goodness he has moved away from that position, but there are problems yet. But when he was a Senator in 2006, he said, "Increasing America's debt weakens us domestically and internationally." At the time, he also said, "It is a sign that we now depend on ongoing financial assistance from foreign countries to finance our Government's reckless fiscal policies." That was back in 2006 when then-Senator Obama made those statements. So today we are presented with a much different officeholder—the President of the United States—who is now demagoging those who hold the same truths he espoused himself in 2006, back when our debt and our deficits were much smaller than they are today.

This isn't a matter of the President not understanding the problem we find ourselves in because he appointed a bipartisan commission, the Simpson-Bowles commission, that reported back in December in a report called "A Moment of Truth" which laid out in sobering detail the unsustainability of our national debt, the reckless spending that had gone on, and the borrowing from the Chinese and other governments. But rather than the President taking up the report of his own fiscal commission, he simply ignored it. He ignored it in the State of the Union Message. He certainly ignored it in his proposed budget, which was dead on arrival over here, without a single Democrat voting for it.

In essence, the President has outsourced his leadership responsibilities to others. We know the President's current proposal, if one can call it that—and, frankly, the devil is in the details, and while the House has passed a budget, while the Simpson-Bowles commission has made a recommendation, as well as the Domenici-Rivlin bipartisan recommendation, we have yet to see the President's plan. Yes, he has held press conferences, he has bashed those rhetorically who have held the very same position he held in 2006, but he has failed to lead and offer a plan to deal with this impending crisis.

In fact, the President's current rhetoric—I don't think we can dignify it by calling it a plan—is significantly to the left of his own bipartisan Simpson-Bowles recommendations. He is certainly to the left of Simpson-Bowles when it comes to spending—calling for much more spending, no cuts but continued spending. He is to the left of Simpson-Bowles when it comes to taxes, when "more" is the only word he seems to know when it comes to taxes—more taxes. In fact, when the President says we are going to cut $1 trillion, let's say, or $2 trillion, but we are going to raise taxes $2 trillion, what does that net? That means no net change in the size of the Federal Government, and that means no real downpayment on our national debt or deficit. It is a sleight of hand. It is phony. It is designed to give the appearance of doing something serious while doing nothing serious at all.

We know the President has failed to lead in other ways. He has delegated or outsourced his responsibility to the Vice President. It took only a few weeks ago for the President to finally step up and engage personally, and we find that more often than not he proposed phony solutions such as changing the depreciation schedule for corporate jet owners, dealing with the tax treatment of oil and gas companies, and changing an accounting rule called "last in, first out." But the facts are that those changes, even if adopted, would be a drop in the bucket. They would do nothing significant or serious to deal with our huge deficits and our unsustainable debt.

Unfortunately, the President's own personal engagement is frequently nothing more than personal attacks. His recent press conferences have been full of name-calling and straw man attacks that are, frankly, beneath the dignity of the office of President of the United States. Instead of being a Commander in Chief, it is more like he has decided: I am going to be campaigner in chief. I am not going to deal with the problem. I am going to just look at winning the next election. Then we read yesterday that even in private the President is throwing temper tantrums like he did yesterday and stomping out of the meeting at the White House—again, failing to show leadership.

But the most cynical thing the President has done, the most cynical abdication of leadership he has displayed so far is his new threat to hold seniors, our veterans, and our troops hostage unless Congress will agree to job-killing tax increases immediately. This is shameful behavior.

We all know that even if the August 2 deadline passes without a deal, according to the Bipartisan Policy Center, the U.S. Treasury will still have enough revenue—about $172 billion—to pay for Social Security benefits, to pay for Medicaid and Medicare, to pay Active-Duty military, and other national priorities. Let me repeat: The only reason seniors and our troops will see their checks stop coming is if the Obama administration decides to make other spending a priority, if the Obama administration chooses to hold our troops and seniors hostage just so they can raise taxes.

This is another amazing display of cynicism, or I guess the most charitable way I can say it: short term memory. The President himself said last December the reason we should not raise taxes in a fragile economic recovery is because it would be bad for job creation. It would further discourage job creation at a time when we need jobs badly.

Well, let me say just a word about tax increases and why this side of the aisle believes so strongly that tax increases are not the answer to our debt crisis.

As one President famously said:

The last thing you want to do is to raise taxes in the middle of a recession because that would just suck up—take more demand out of the economy and put businesses in a further hole.

Well, the President who said that was President Barack Obama back in 2009. The President makes our case for us.

Another President said low taxes help "millions of entrepreneurs . . . hire new workers." Oh, yes, that was again President Barack Obama when he signed the extension of tax relief last December.

Then there was another President, somebody our Nation holds in high regard, who happens to have been a Member of the other political party, who said:

The final and best means of strengthening demand among consumers and business is to reduce the burden on private income and the deterrents to private initiative which are imposed by our present tax system. . . .

That was President John F. Kennedy in 1962. President Kennedy also said:

In short, it is a paradoxical truth that tax rates are too high today and tax revenues are too low and the soundest way to raise the revenues in the long run is to cut the rates now. . . .

He said—and he was exactly right:

Only full employment can balance the budget, and tax reduction can pave the way to that employment.

The purpose of cutting taxes now is not to incur a budget deficit, but to achieve the more prosperous, expanding economy which can bring a budget surplus.

He had it exactly right. We need to not only cut spending, but we need to grow revenue. The best way to grow revenue is to get more taxpayers, to get more people back to work. The reason Federal revenue is so low is not because tax rates are too low or people are not taxed enough, it is because too many people are out of work.

When people do not have a job, they do not pay taxes, they do not pay their home mortgages, and they lose their homes. We are for more people getting back to work. We have tried the failed stimulus, the goal of which was to keep unemployment below 8 percent. We know that failed. Yet we racked up another $800 billion in debt.

So why don't we try the old-fashioned way: take our boot off the necks of the job creators in America to make it easier, not harder, to create jobs, to provide incentives for entrepreneurs to start new businesses, to help existing small businesses expand their business. But they cannot do it, and they will not do it with uncertainty about their taxes, with the regulatory overreaching and other policies coming out of Washington, DC.

Republicans are holding the line against the President's demand for higher taxes for a very simple reason. President Kennedy was right about taxes back in 1962, and President Barack Obama was right about taxes as recently as last December. Unfortunately, he has changed his mind, or he has forgotten the position he took just last December.

Republicans do not want tax increases, and we do not want to see the Federal Government default on its obligations. So we have an obligation to come up with an affirmative plan, a positive plan to solve the problem. I believe we have done so.

The first is a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution that is cosponsored by every Republican on this side of the aisle. The last time we voted on a balanced budget amendment in the Senate was 1997—before I got here—where 11 Democrats voted to support that constitutional amendment. I hope our Democratic colleagues will join us in doing not an extraordinary thing, not a heroic thing—it is a very ordinary but a very commonsense thing—and that is to make sure the Federal Government learns to live within its means and not spend money it does not have. We hope they will join us.

Part of that plan is also the cut, cap, and balance legislation I have cosponsored and that I hope the House of Representatives will take up and send over here soon. This legislation is a plan that avoids defaulting on our obligations. It prevents more taxes, particularly during a fragile economic recovery. It cuts reckless spending, and it gets our fiscal house in order.

What is painfully apparent is we are running out of time, and I am not just talking about the August 2 deadline. Yesterday, Moody's Investors Services said it was reviewing the Nation's top-notch, AAA credit rating for a potential downgrade.

If credit agencies downgrade our debt, it will cost more for us to borrow from the Chinese and our other creditors. As we know, because of Federal Reserve policies, the Federal Reserve has kept interest rates below historic norms. If those were to grow to historic norms because our debt has been downgraded by the credit agencies—or for any other reason—the interest on our national debt alone will crowd out other priorities for our Nation. It will make it less likely we can afford to do what we need to do to defend our national security or to provide the very safety net that our Democratic colleagues claim to care so much about. We will not have the money to do it because we will not have acted responsibly in dealing with the deficit and the debt today.

I urge my colleagues to heed these warnings and to join us in cutting spending and to get our debt under control. In the end, everyone will come out a winner if we accomplish that goal. This is not a Republican plan. This is not a Democratic plan. This is what is right and good and necessary for the United States of America, and so that generations in the future can enjoy the same opportunity and prosperity we ourselves have enjoyed. Heaven help us—Heaven help us—if we fail to take advantage of this opportunity and to deal responsibly with this impending crisis.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas. This is very serious business we are engaged in. The strength of his comments, the method of delivery, and the content are indicative of the serious challenges we are facing.

For example, under the budget that was submitted to us, the only budget we have seen so far from the President, the interest on our debt, according to the Congressional Budget Office—that used their 10-Year budget and calculated we are paying about $214 billion in interest today on our debt—in the 10th year of President Obama's budget, as Senator CORNYN said, the interest would crowd out other things. It would be $940 billion—1 year's interest.

When we borrow money, we pay interest just like individuals do when they borrow money. We are borrowing so much money that we are doubling the debt again in our country in 10 years. The interest on it will crowd out other things. For example, it would be more than Social Security, more than our Medicare, more than our Defense Department spending in that year.

So I thank the Senator for sharing that.

I see Senator JOHNSON, and I would be pleased to yield at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his courtesy and reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I will just wrap up and close at 2 o'clock. I understand under our agreement that 2 o'clock will start the time allocated for the Democratic speakers as they may appear, and there would be time at 3 o'clock under my control for Republican speakers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding, although the Chair is told the agreement has not been formalized as yet. But the Chair understands that is the agreement. The Senator from Alabama is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is all right.

Mr. SESSIONS. Very good.

So I will wrap up and ask unanimous consent that there be 30 minutes under my control at 3 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Chair.

Well, the fundamental problem is that our Democratic leadership has decided it would be foolish to have a budget, even though it is required by law. They have refused to produce a budget now for 806 days—over 2 years. Last year, Senator CONRAD produced a budget in committee, and it was voted on and brought to the floor, but the majority leader refused to even bring it up for debate and vote.

This year I suppose it was that the majority leader decided we would not even have one in committee. So we have not commenced any action to pass a budget. But now we are proceeding to spend money. We are proceeding to pass legislation that would expend taxpayers' money without a budget. That is not good policy by any standards, whether we have a law or not. But we actually have a law that requires us to have a budget first. That is why I found myself having to raise a budget point of order.

We were not elected to shut down the committees, to violate the congressional process of deciding how money should be spent, to cede our constitutional responsibility to some secret meeting somewhere so they can produce some sort of bill and drop it in the Senate on August 1, presumably, and then demand that we pay for it.

Because, look, you have to look behind the numbers. Just because the President says his budget does one thing, his plan does another thing, don't you think we ought to check it out?

One of the most stunning statements I have ever heard from a President and from the Budget Director was heard earlier this year after the President presented his budget. He and the Budget Director publicly—and the Budget Director in committee—said: Our budget will have us live within our means and pay down the debt.

They used those words. So anybody hearing that thinks: Gosh, I am glad the President prepared a budget that will have us live within our means and pay down our debt. We have been spending too much money.

What is the truth? The truth is, the lowest single annual deficit in 10 years, according to the Congressional Budget Office analysts, would be $740 billion.

The highest President Bush ever had was $450 billion. That was too high. This year it will be $1.500 billion, and I would point out that in the outyears $740 billion was about year 6. The 7, 8, 9, 10 numbers are going up again, and CBO says in the 10th year, the deficit under the President's budget will be $1.2 trillion. So this is not good. We need to get our house in order.

We are going to insist that we do it in the right way. That is why I have objected to proceeding to spending bills without a budget. It is time for the majority leader to bring us into session. Let's have a budget. Let's see where people stand. Let's make the tough decisions. Let's vote on it. Let's allow ourselves to be held accountable by the people who sent us here.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANDERS). The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, the media has been focused on our differences. But I think there is one thing that every single member of this body agrees on, we have to address the long-term debt and deficits.

Like many Members of this Chamber, I have repeatedly called for a bipartisan package that includes reforms to everything deficit related. That means cuts to spending, domestic, defense, and mandatory, as well as increased revenues. I have supported attaching deficit reduction measures to the vote on the debt limit. And I believe reducing the deficit is critical to strengthening the long-term health of the economy.

But I also believe that everyone—everyone—has to come to the table to find a compromise solution that will get this done. Democrats know this, that is why time and again we have offered compromise plans, including more than a trillion dollars in spending cuts. It is disappointing that politics are keeping some from negotiating in good faith. That is a disservice to the American people.

I have spoken before about what some people are trying to protect, tax breaks for big oil, for hedge fund operators and for yacht owners. I would like to speak now about what some are willing to risk to protect those tax giveaways. What happens if we do not increase the debt limit and meet the United States' financial obligations.

First of all, raising the debt limit does not mean spending more. Our spending is set by Congress's annual budget process.

Raising the debt limit means paying our government's bills. Our government. It is not the Democrats' government, it is not President Obama's government. It belongs to all of us. We are talking about servicing savings bonds issued under President Reagan. Supporting an Army first sent to Afghanistan under President Bush.

Paying Social Security checks, food inspectors, and air traffic controllers. This is about the full faith and credit of our government.

Failure to raise the debt limit means default. It means the United States would not meet its obligations. What would happen?

Warren Buffett said it would be Congress's "most asinine act ever."

Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke said it would lead to "a huge financial calamity."

Economist and former Reagan adviser Larry Kudlow said default would be "catastrophe."

The biggest concern these experts name is the potential for a global financial crisis. Companies, pension funds, and governments across the world hold U.S. savings bonds. A default could trigger a crisis worse than the one in 2008, which itself triggered the worst recession since the Great Depression.

We are just now climbing out of the hole caused by the last financial crisis. We cannot risk another one.

Let me read from a letter sent to Congress earlier this week by hundreds of America's top businesses and business organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce, the Financial Services Roundtable, and great New Hampshire companies like Cirtronics and Control Air:

We believe it is vitally important for the U.S. government to make good on its financial obligations. . . .

It is critical that the U.S. government not default in any way on its fiscal obligations. A great nation—like a great company—has to be relied upon to pay its debts when they become due. This is a Main Street not Wall Street issue. Treasury securities influence the cost of financing not just for companies but more importantly for mortgages, auto loans, credit cards and student debt. A default would risk both disarray in those markets and a host of unintended consequences. The debt ceiling trigger does offer a needed catalyst for serious negotiations on budget discipline but avoiding even a technical default is essential. This is a risk our country must not take.

Again, this is not my opinion. This is the opinion of business leaders. We should listen to them.

In a recent op-ed in USA Today, the Chamber and the Financial Services Forum spelled out why they believe a default would result in "hundreds of thousands of lost jobs every year."

First, they point out that a default would halt critical government operations, far more abruptly than we have seen in past standoffs over the budget. They say:

The U.S. Treasury is expected to take in about $170 billion in tax revenue in August, but needs to pay $300 billion in expenses. The resulting $130 billion deficit would require the government to pick which programs—Medicare, Medicaid stamps, unemployment insurance—to pay for and which not to fund. And there would be little money left to pay our troops or to run the courts, the prison system, the FBI, or other essential operations.

They go on to note that default would make our government debt and deficit problem worse.

Yesterday, Moody's, the credit rating agency, put the United States governments' credit rating under review. If Moody's were to downgrade our credit rating, investor confidence in U.S. bonds would be shaken, and it would be more expensive for our government to borrow money.

This is something that I understand viscerally because, as Governor of New Hampshire, we worked closely to try to avoid the rating agencies downgrading the State's borrowing so that we would not have to pay more money. JP Morgan estimates that the higher interest rates caused by default could increase our annual deficits by a staggering $75 billion every year. Just from higher interest rates. If we are serious about reducing the deficit, this is the wrong way to go.

That is why we need to find a compromise solution. We have in the past. The debt limit has gone up under every President in modern times. President Nixon raised it nine times. President Clinton raised it four times. Since President Kennedy, the most frequent and largest increases came under President Reagan. He raised the debt limit 18 times, by a total of 199 percent. I don't think anyone here thinks President Reagan was a champion of big government.

I believe that many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle understand the importance of getting this done. I believe many of them believe in the value of compromise. We all have to be at the table. We all have to be ready to compromise to reach a solution.

I ask my colleagues to do what is right and put politics aside, for the good of the economy and of the country.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I would like to follow up a little bit on what the Senator from New Hampshire just spoke about; that is, the absurdity, the absolute absurdity of what is going on in Washington today.

Our Nation used to have a two-party system in this country, but it is increasingly apparent that one of our two parties has morphed—has morphed—into some kind of a quasi-religion driven by one ideology: preserving and expanding tax breaks for the wealthy and for big corporations.

To that end, many Republicans in Congress are perfectly willing to push the United States of America into defaulting on its debt obligations with dire economic consequences. This is a very dangerous detour in our Nation's political and economic life. But just as dangerous, just as dangerous as the prospect of a default on our debt obligations is the Republican's determination to defund and dismantle as much of the Federal Government as possible. To that end, they are demanding deep, Draconian cuts to Federal funding and investment at a time when unemployment is already sky high and rising, and when our economy remains fragile.

To justify these deep cuts, Republicans with this new ideology have articulated an absurd economic theory—absolutely absurd. They claim slashing Federal funding and investments by trillions of dollars will somehow magically create jobs.

I don't know of any Main Street economist, or anybody with an ounce of common sense, who agrees with this bizarre theory. To the contrary, economists warn us that this is absolutely the wrong time to be slashing Federal investments. Why? For the obvious reason that deep, short-term cuts to Federal spending will dramatically reduce demand in the economy, thus reducing employment even further.

Already this year, cuts to government spending at the State and local levels have destroyed an estimated 500,000 public sector jobs, and that goes along with an undetermined number of private-sector jobs. Economists understand that terminating the jobs of teachers, police officers, and other essential public employees has a negative impact on the economy just as eliminating private-sector jobs do. Nonetheless, as if they live in kind of a parallel, upside down universe, Republicans insist that slashing Federal funding and investment will create jobs. Let's test that theory in one area of Federal investment. Let's take transportation funding. Everybody understands that our transportation infrastructure is woefully inadequate. It is in a state of increasing overload and disrepair. Most people understand that ramping up investments in modernizing our highways, bridges, and public transit systems would strengthen our economy and create millions of jobs. These are the veins and arteries of our commerce.

What have the Republicans in the House proposed? Last week, the Republican leader put forward a new transportation authorization bill that would slash current investments in transportation by more than one-third—a one-third cut in transportation. Will this create jobs, as the Republicans claim? Of course not. The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee estimates that the House bill would destroy more than 490,000 highway construction jobs and close to 100,000 transit-related jobs—mass transit.

This is pure folly. This is a classic example of what happens when ideological obsessions cause Members of Congress to be blind to practical, common-sense realities.

I have repeatedly come to the floor to advocate for a balanced approach to bringing deficits under control, one that includes some spending cuts and revenue increases. At the same time, economists warn us that we need a deficit reduction plan that defers the lion's share of spending cuts and tax increases for several years, allowing our economy to recover before the negative impacts are felt.

I must also ask: Why are we proposing to slash all this funding for highways, schools, and infrastructure here at home, while we continue to spend untold billions of dollars to build highways, schools, and infrastructure in Afghanistan? A lot of people ask me: Senator HARKIN, you say you are willing to cut spending. Where? Let's start here, with Afghanistan and Iraq. We are spending $168 billion in Iraq and Afghanistan this year alone. This year—fiscal year 2011—we are spending more than $13 billion to train the Iraqi and Afghan security forces—$13 billion. OK. What did we spend in America to retrain our workers so they can get new jobs? Less than $10 billion. We are spending more money to train Afghan and Iraqi security forces than we are to retrain our own workers all over America, at a time when 24 million Americans are unemployed or underemployed. Yet we are spending $168 billion a year on Afghanistan and Iraq. I applaud the President for his actions, but quite frankly, they don't go far enough. The President should have a faster timeframe for our troops to get out of Afghanistan. I have said that publicly many times. If we want to save some money, save that $1 million it costs to keep one soldier in Afghanistan, get them back here. We went to Afghanistan to get the Taliban out, get al-Qaida out, and get Osama bin Laden. We got Osama bin Laden, Al-Qaida is no longer in Afghanistan, and the Taliban is gone. Why are we still there? Why are we still spending about $14 billion a month in Afghanistan?

Again, we need a balanced approach. Spending cuts alone won't do the job. I think the Republicans have just proved this. The Republicans have proved that spending cuts alone will not get the job done. Why do I say that? Look at the so-called Ryan budget. It dismantles Medicare, guts Medicaid, and makes severe cuts across the Federal budget. Yet it still adds trillions of dollars to the deficit for years to come—largely because it refuses to touch tax breaks for the well-to-do or to raise other revenues from corporations.

The Republicans have said they don't want to raise taxes on the so-called job creators. They don't want to raise taxes on job creators. To call trust fund millionaires and Wall Street money manipulators "job creators" is laughable. Meanwhile, to call many large corporations in the United States "job creators" is increasingly questionable.

Actually, in one respect, you can indeed argue that America's big brandname corporations—GE, Microsoft, and so on—are "job creators." The problem is that they are not creating many jobs here in the United States. They are creating jobs overseas and eliminating them here. The U.S. Commerce Department data shows that during the 2000s, U.S. companies—multinational companies—cut their workforce here at home by 2.9 million, and they increased their workforce overseas by 2.4 million. They are creating jobs, all right—just not here in America. To add insult to injury, there are provisions in the United States Tax Code that promote this kind of behavior—the kinds of tax breaks that Republicans insist on preserving.

They don't want to tax job creators. Yet we have shown that these big multinationals are creating jobs overseas. I wish to—and I am sure the occupant of the chair would also—close some of those loopholes so there is not a tax benefit to shipping jobs overseas. The Republicans say, no, they don't want to do that.

In the month of May, U.S. trade deficit soared to more than $50 billion—the highest level in nearly 3 years—in 1 month. In May, our trade deficit—out of that $50 billion—for one country, China, was a staggering $25 billion. You might say, what does that mean? Those figures represent a transfer of millions of jobs and billions in wages from the United States to China or other countries abroad. We need to seriously examine our trade and tax policies, which continually send our jobs and wages overseas. We need to stop bowing before the sacrosanct altar of "free trade" as if it doesn't even warrant our examination. Instead, we need to ask how we can make our trade policy work for the middle class—for instance, by defending America's right to oppose currency manipulation and abusive trade practices.

We ought to talk about fair trade, fair trade, fair trade, not free trade, free trade, free trade. You see where free trade gets us if we don't stand up to other countries that manipulate their currencies, such as China, where we are shipping all our jobs and money.

As I have said, our fragile economy is at the point of maximum danger. This Congress is at a historic decision point with regard to raising the debt ceiling and bringing deficits under control. However, as we have seen played out in the press, in the media, standing in the way of a rational, reasonable compromise is congressional Republicans' ideological obsession with preserving tax cuts for millionaires and billionaires at any and all costs. They are threatening to force us to default on the national debt.

I will close with this. I heard our distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Kentucky, say this was now Obama's economy and the problems we have are because of Obama. He has been President for almost 3 years—about 2½ years now. Therefore, he says he owns that. You know, this is kind of an interesting world we are living in. We have a debt ceiling, and why has the debt gone up? Because we borrowed money—a lot of money. The Congressional Budget Office says the debt we have today comes from. Remember, 10 years ago, we had a surplus, a budget surplus, one of the largest in our Nation's history left after President Clinton. Then President Bush comes into office, the Republicans take over the House and Senate, and they ram through a massive tax cut, which takes the surpluses and gives them mostly to the wealthy in our country. Then 9/11 happened and we entered into two wars—totally unpaid for—and we borrow it from China, or wherever, to pay for two wars.

Then we had a Medicare drug prescription benefit—most of which benefits go to the drug companies, by the way—and we didn't pay for that. We borrowed money for that also. So the debt we are grappling with today is because of policies enacted by a Republican President and a Republican Congress. They ran up the debt. Now they don't want to pay for it. This is not President Obama's debt at all. This is what happens when you have almost 8 or 9 years of uninterrupted borrowing and spending by President Bush and the Republican Congress. This is their debt.

Again, I call upon reasonable, responsible Republicans to come forward and give up on this ideological obsession, this new theology that says: no tax reform, no raising of revenues from anyone, even those who can afford it the most.

I remain an optimist. It is not too late for reason to prevail. We have heard loudly and clearly from the extremists and ideologists, who would bring down our economic house rather than agree to any compromise. Now it is time for decent, patriotic Americans to speak up and say enough. We can and must come together around a balanced plan to bring our deficits under control, and we must uphold the full faith and credit of the United States of America.

With that, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I rise today, as have so many other Senators, because I am concerned about what I have been hearing about the threat of default that is now just over 3 weeks away—what I have heard both here in Washington and in Delaware.

This looming default crisis is one of the most grave and predictable threats to our economy and our country I have ever seen. It is no longer floating at a distance just over the horizon, or something we can debate academically, the impact of which we may yet avert. It is here now. We are on the edge. Given the difficulties this body can have in moving something through in a matter of days, we are very close to the absolute last day when we can consider options and a path forward. Default is right before us and it must be dealt with.

I rise not to add to the political rhetoric—there has been plenty of that—nor do I rise to try and elicit panic or fear in the broader public.

I rise because the folks of Delaware—the people from whom I have been hearing—just don't know what to believe. They know our deficit spending and our national debt are out of control, and they are deeply concerned. That is good. I share that concern. I share that commitment to making certain we reduce our spending and we deal with our deficit because deficit and debt at the size we have today can harm our economy fundamentally. They are a basic challenge to our national security, to our success, and to our growth going forward. But I also rise because there is no faster way to ensure that our economy will never get back on track, that our country will never reach its full potential than to let our Nation default on its financial obligations.

We need to deal with this default crisis in a responsible and pragmatic way to create a real and lasting solution. We must restore certainty to our markets to help get our economy going again. And what do we hear from business, businessmen large and small all over the country? Certainty. We need predictability and certainty in the markets. Well, nothing is creating uncertainty more than this grinding lack of resolution to the vote to raise our Nation's debt ceiling.

I wish to take a few moments, if I could, to talk about the reality of this impending crisis, and I would like to look at a few of the myths I hear at home that need to be cleared up.

First, some Members of this body and the other House of Congress, some folks running for President, and some people in the press have suggested that a default will cause only minor economic disruption, if any at all. Economist after economist, think tank after think tank, study after study has shown in the last few weeks that nothing could be further from the truth.

There are predictable consequences of default that will affect every American—Americans in every State, at every income level. More than any, I worry about the working families or those currently out of work who are already struggling through the greatest recession we have known in my lifetime. One report suggests 640,000 people will lose their jobs in the months after default. Economists confirm that the cost of home mortgages, car loans, and interest rates will go up for everything. The cost of food, gas, and everyday items for families all over this country will go up in real and concrete ways.

More importantly, if we default on America's mortgage, the impact in terms of the increased cost of borrowing for our whole country and for all of our families won't just be brief, it will be lasting because it will hang with us on our credit score as a nation for years. To the folks watching, if you think it is difficult to find a job or to help grow a business to help deal with the daily cost of living now, just wait until we default on America's mortgage and the cost of borrowing funds to do anything—to create new jobs or to help pay your bills as a family—goes up.

Default will have real and lasting economic consequences that will haunt this economy and haunt the working families of this Nation for years.

The second myth is that we can just stop spending money without real consequences. Some in this very Chamber have suggested that when we get to August, there will still be plenty of money coming in to service the debt, so there is no real threat of default, and that what we need to do is a relatively simple exercise of just deciding which things we will stop paying.

This second myth goes that the Treasury Department will just start picking winners and losers: They will pay Social Security but forgo Medicare; they will pay our troops but pink-slip our Federal civilians; they will fund the Pentagon but forget the Department of Education—never mind the ethical quandaries, the long-term disservice such action would have on our economy and our country. Frankly, the truth is that it is not even clear they have the legal authority to do so in the Treasury Department, to pick these winners and losers on a week-by-week basis.

Let's just choose one example of the studies done on this myth that we can simply pay the debt service and a few big things and the consequences of the rest would be fine. According to the Bipartisan Policy Center, beginning in August, if we continue to make payments, obviously on interest on the debt but also on Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, all defense contractors, and unemployment insurance—so the really important things—and we just stop paying the rest, our troops on Active Duty; all of our veterans programs; all of law enforcement, including, for example, the FBI; the whole Federal court system; the FAA, which monitors air traffic; the FDA, which inspects food quality and safety; and a host of dozens of other Federal programs would come to a halt within days.

The consequences to the safety of our families, to the strength of our economy, to the confidence of our country, and to our role at home and abroad would, in my view, be tragic—almost catastrophic. So even if we could avoid technically defaulting for a few days or weeks by continuing to service our debt, the costs and consequences of these other “easy choices” would be dramatic, difficult, and lasting.

According to Steve McMillin, who was the former Deputy Director of OMB under President Bush—he was recently quoted on this topic:

I would say the options Treasury has if the debt limit is not raised are all very ugly.

Let me give a third myth. As I was talking with some small business owners in Delaware over the past week, some suggested they really felt we needed to go ahead and take the tough medicine of defaulting and cut up the President's credit card, stop the President from spending.

While I share their concerns about the very real and very significant threat posed by our deep deficits and share the view that we must cut spending—as all of us who are Democrats on the Budget Committee have said now publicly, we are committed to a balanced approach that significantly cuts Federal spending—the metaphor of cutting up the credit cards is wrong. It is not just wrong, it is desperately wrong and misleading. Our Nation defaulting on its debt is not like cutting up a credit card and stopping the future spending; it is much more like defaulting on a mortgage; it hurts our credit rating and hinders our ability to borrow. As we have been told before, every 1 percent increase in interest rates will cause our national debt to go up $1.3 trillion over 10 years. According to some economists, increased interest rates could last for a decade or more.

No, the obligations that come due August 2 are the obligations that have already been undertaken. As Senator HARKIN said before me, it is Republicans, both President and Congress, and Democrats, both President and Congress, over the last decade who have moved us into a bigger house as a country. It is the cost of two wars, the cost of an expanded Medicare Part D, the cost of expanding investment in our country—the cost of this bigger house that is now coming due. For us to stop paying that mortgage would have the same consequences for our country as it would for any family because when you default on your mortgage, it is not like cutting up a credit card, it affects your credit rating, and it affects your ability to borrow and your ability to do anything more for your family for years to come. So, too, would the consequences be for this country, and we cannot afford to let our country become a bad investment.

Lastly, some have suggested that August 2 is not a serious deadline, that somehow Secretary Geithner must have some other rabbit in the hat or some escape hatch.

Back in January, Secretary Geithner sent a letter to all in Congress suggesting that we would, in fact, run out of money on May 16, and the government—the Treasury Department—would then have to start taking extraordinary measures to avoid default. In fact, he detailed in six pages all the extraordinary measures that would be required. And he was right almost literally to the day about when that transition occurred and when those extraordinary measures needed to be deployed.

The time runs out August 2, but if for some reason you don't believe the deadline presented to us by our very own Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasury Department, look at what the three bond rating agencies are already saying about the impending default. Moody's, S&P, and Fitch have all threatened to downgrade America's rating from AAA—the most secure, most stable in the world. S&P suggested last week a downgrade to D, to junk bond status. I suggest America is not a junk bond nation. It puts us at risk as a nation, as a people, and as an economy when we are mentioned in the same sentences as Ireland, as Greece, as Italy—countries currently wrestling with fundamental failures to meet their obligations as a country. We are better than that.

All of us in this Chamber—all of us—are challenged to come together to put our economy and our country back on solid footing, to restore certainty to the markets, and to give confidence to retirees, to families, to parents raising children, and to small businesses by getting serious about putting a plan on this floor next week and passing it because, frankly, if we allow this country to default on its sovereign debts, to fail to meet its moral commitments, both financial and to the people of the United States, the consequences will be desperate and lasting.

I suggested a few weeks ago that we should consider seriously the Bipartisan Policy Center's proposal—the so-called SAVEGO—which would pick up where the pay-as-you-go discipline of the 1990s started and modernize it for our current situation. If we cannot get a comprehensive $4 trillion balanced deal together on this floor and passed, let's at least get a downpayment and enforce a budget mechanism that would ensure that a comprehensive deal is accomplished over the next decade. SAVEGO, which I recommend to everyone in this body, would lock in savings over the next decade, force both parties to stay at the table, and urge us to meet the targets we all know we need to meet: to reduce our deficits, to stabilize our debts, to strengthen our country, and to move past this tragic narrow debate over August 2 and our Nation's mortgage.

We need to focus not on the next election cycle, not on the partisan back-and-forth that might win an advantage for one party over another or one person over another in this Chamber for 2012, but we need instead to focus on the next generation, on the future.

The only way forward, in my view, is to honor our moral commitments as a nation to the men and women who rely on Medicare and Medicaid and Social Security, on the safety of our troops, and on the investments we make in the future, and to continue to honor our obligations as a nation. To do anything less is to dishonor the sacrifice of those who have served us in the past and to ignore the very real needs of the working families all over this country who look to us for leadership and sacrifice to put us on a sustainable path forward.

Mr. President, with that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COONS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, we are at a pivotal moment in American history, and I think many Americans are confused and perplexed and angry and frustrated as to where we are today and how we got to where we are and what the consequences of decisions made in the past and that are being made right now will mean to their families. Let me just take a minute and try to give my view as to how we got to where we are and what our options are.

As you have just stated, Mr. President, and Senator HARKIN before you, anyone who talks blithely about defaults and saying it is not a big deal for this country clearly does not understand what he or she is talking about.

This is the greatest Nation in the history of the world. This is a nation whose faith and credit has been the gold standard of countries throughout the world. This is a nation, since George Washington, which has paid out every nickel it has borrowed, which is, in fact, why it is the great Nation it is and why we have the strongest economy in the world today, troubled though it may be.

The idea for some people to simply say: Oh, not a big deal; we are not going to pay our debt, nothing to worry about, those are people who are wishing our economy harm for political reasons, and those are people whose attitudes will have terrible consequences for virtually every working family in this country in terms of higher interest rates, in terms of significant job loss, in terms of making a very unstable global economy even more unstable.

This country, which has paid its debts from day one, must pay its debts. I can't say it any more clearly than that.

Our Republican friends, especially our rightwing friends who now control the House of Representatives, have given us an option and here is their option. What they have said is: We want to do deficit reduction, and this is how we are going to do it. We are going to end Medicare as we know it and force elderly people, many of whom don't have the money, to pay substantially more for their health care. So under their plan, when a person is 70 and they get sick and they don't have a whole lot of income, they don't know what happens to them. They forgot to tell us. But what they did tell us is Medicare is not going to be there for them. They told us that tomorrow, if their plan was passed, they are going to have to pay a heck of a lot more for the prescription drugs than they are paying today. Oh, you don't have the money? Hey, that is not our problem.

They told us we are going to make savage cuts in Medicaid, throw millions of kids off health insurance, when 50 million Americans have no health insurance today. They want millions more without any health insurance.

If your mom or dad is in a nursing home and that nursing home bill is paid significantly by Medicaid and Medicaid isn't paying anymore, they forgot to tell us what happens to your mom or dad in that nursing home. What happens? What happens today if one is unemployed and not able to get an unemployment extension? What happens to the middle-class family, desperately trying to send their kids to college and we make savage cuts in Pell grants and they can't go to college? What does it mean for the Nation if we are not bringing forth young people who have the education they need? They forgot to tell us that. If you are one of the growing numbers of senior citizens in this country who are going hungry, they want to cut nutrition programs.

On and on it goes. Every program that has any significance to working families, the sick, the elderly, children, the poor, they are going to cut, and they are going to cut in a savage way. They are going to do that in the midst of a recession, where real unemployment is already at 15 percent and the middle class is disappearing and poverty is increasing. That is their idea.

When we say to them: Well, hey, the very rich are doing phenomenally well; the top 1 percent now earns more income than the bottom 50 percent; the top 400 wealthiest families in this country have more wealth than the 150 million Americans—don't you think maybe it is appropriate that when the rich are getting richer and their tax rates have gone down, their effective tax rates are the lowest in modern history, when major corporations are making billions of profits and in some cases not paying a nickel in taxes, don't you think maybe it is fair that they contribute to deficit reduction rather than just the elderly and the sick and working families, they say: No. We have a line in the sand, and if it means this country will default on its debt for the first time in history, that is OK. But we are absolutely going to defend the richest people in this country, millionaires and billionaires, and make sure they don't pay a nickel more in taxes. We are going to make sure there is no tax reform so we can continue to lose $100 billion every single year because wealthy people and corporations stash their money in tax havens in the Cayman Islands or Bermuda, and that is just fine. We will protect those tax breaks while we savage programs for working families.

Those are the choices our rightwinged Republican friends are giving us: defaults with horrendous economic consequences for working families in this country and, in fact, for the entire global economy or massive cuts to programs working families desperately need.

Neither of those options is acceptable to me, and neither are those options acceptable to the vast majority of the people in this country. Every single poll I have seen says that the American people want shared sacrifice. They don't want or believe that deficit reduction can simply come down on the backs of the weak and the vulnerable, the elderly, the children, and the poor; that the wealthy and large corporations also have to participate.

I must, also, in all honesty, tell you I have been disappointed by the President's role in these discussions and some of his ideas. He has brought forth an idea which I categorically reject, that we should make significant cuts in Social Security; that when someone reaches the age of 85, they would lose $1,000 as opposed to what they would otherwise have gotten. This Senator is not going to balance our budget on the backs of an 85-year-old person who is earning $14,000 a year—not with my vote.

This Senator does not agree with the President that we raise the eligibility age for Medicare from 65 to 67 because I don't know what happens to millions of people who work their whole lives, finally reach 65 anticipating Medicare, but it is not going to be there for them. So I very strongly disagree with the President on those initiatives.

Let me tell you that elections have consequences, and I think many people now are beginning to catch on to that. It is no secret our rightwinged Republican colleagues did very well in November 2010. They captured the House of Representatives, and now, 1 year-plus later, for the first time in the history of this country, we are on the verge of a default.

I would close by saying to people all over this country, if you believe we have to start investing in America and creating the millions of jobs this country desperately needs, elections have consequences.

If you believe we have to address the deficit crisis in a way that is responsible, in a way that asks the wealthy and large corporations also to play a role, in a way, as Senator HARKIN mentioned a moment ago, that calls for cuts in defense spending and bringing our troops home as soon as possible from Afghanistan and Iraq, you have to be involved in the political process, in my view.

A group of people in the House whose views represent a small minority of the American people are holding this Congress hostage, and it is time for the American people to stand and say enough is enough. The function of the Congress is to represent all our people and not just the wealthiest and most powerful.

With that, I yield the floor and note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRASSO. Mr. President, I ask that the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANDERS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARRASSO. Mr. President, I come to the floor as someone who is back in my home State every weekend. As I talk to people and say: What is on your mind, they say what is on their mind are jobs, the economy, the Nation's debt, and the Nation's spending. I say: What do you think about things going on in Washington? They say the problem with Washington is it taxes too much, borrows too much, and the government grows bigger every day, and they say: What are we going to do about it? When we talk about the debt, the people of Wyoming have a clear understanding that the number is very large.

They say: What about the budget? As we get into the discussion, it comes down to: What budget? Where is the budget? It has been 800 days since a budget has gone through this body—over 800 days. You are talking more than 2 years. Why is that?

There was a vote on the budget earlier this year. There was the President's so-called budget, lost 97 to 0. Not even one Democrat voted for what the President had proposed. The news magazine The Economist called it a dishonest budget. In Wyoming, we balance our budget every year. We do not have a debt like the country has, the country with its $14 trillion debt. In Wyoming, the debt is zero because year after year we balance our budget, live within our means, spend only what comes in, and actually have money left over that we can invest in the people of our State. That is because from the beginning, when the constitution of our State was written, included right there in the constitution was a component saying: You shall balance the budget every year. Do not spend more than you have coming in.

To do that, one of the most useful things is that there actually be a budget, something to live within, something to look to as a guidepost, as a roadmap. I am still looking for one in this body. Where is it? Why have we not seen one? That is why I am coming to the floor today with a number of my colleagues to say: What is going on that it has been over 800 days with no budget, no opportunity to have the American people look to a roadmap to see where the country is headed?

We hear all the discussion about, are we headed to a default? What about the debt limit? What about the ceiling—is that going to be raised? The people say: What is the plan? What is the spending plan? What is the savings plan? I do not hear one coming for the majority party. I do not see one from the majority leader. I do not see one from the Budget Committee. I do not see one from the President. They are having discussions at the White House about how to try to get spending under control. Where is the President's plan?

What I hear from the President is that he wants to raise taxes. The people of Wyoming would say the best way for more revenue to come in is not to raise taxes on the people who are working, it is to put some of those 9.2 percent of Americans who are looking for work, put them to work, and then that money will come in as they pay taxes.

I come today to the floor with a number of my colleagues—Senator SESSIONS, the Senator from Alabama has arrived—and we are going to be engaged in a colloquy to discuss some of these issues.

We ought to be focusing on these 9.2 percent of Americans who cannot find work, millions of Americans who cannot find jobs. When I talk to the job creators, they are saying it is the President's position and his policies that have made matters worse—made matters worse with increasing health care costs as a result of the health care law, made matters worse as a result of the regulations that came out of Washington that add costs onto businesses, and making it worse in increased energy costs as the President continues to send energy jobs overseas, as he makes it harder and harder to explore for American energy.

I ask my colleague, Senator SESSIONS, to give us his thoughts, if I could, on the concerns we face as a nation without a budget, without a plan, without a roadmap, at a time of astronomical deficits, huge numbers, numbers that are too high for people even to understand and comprehend.

(Mrs. MCCASKILL assumed the chair.)

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I appreciate Senator BARRASSO and his leadership on so many issues in this Senate.

It is a sad event that we are now filing an objection to the movement of an appropriations bill because it violates the Budget Act contained in the United States Code. The Budget Act says you shall not move forward with an appropriations bill if you have not first passed the budget.

I ask my friend from Wyoming, as an accomplished orthopedic surgeon and physician and from his personal experience in the legislature in his State, does it strike him that when you are in the most serious debt crisis that perhaps the Nation has ever had from a structural, systemic point of view, that we ought to follow the law, we ought to first decide how much money we can afford to spend next year and then allocate that money to the various spending appropriations committees so they can produce a plan that would live within that budget? Is that the commonsense way we should proceed?

Mr. BARRASSO. Madam President, I would say absolutely yes. If you are a family in Wyoming, I don't care if you are living in Casper or living in Kemmerer, either way you know you need to live within some construct of how much is coming in, how much you can spend—live within a budget. Families have budgets. They live within their budgets. The State of Wyoming has a budget. We have a balanced budget component of our constitution. It not only says we have to have a budget, it says we have to balance it. If you do not have a budget to begin with, I cannot understand how you can balance it.

Is it any surprise that we are $14 trillion in debt and we are borrowing $4 billion a day, $2 million a minute in this country, and we are borrowing a lot of it from China? It would seem we ought to be following the law—have a budget and then live within the budget, and it needs to be a responsible budget consistent with what is coming in.

Mr. SESSIONS. We appreciate our colleagues who worked on this bill, but there are more appropriations that should be done this year. How can they be continued without a budget? You say we spent within the President's numbers or the House numbers, but those have not been approved in the Senate. We have no votes in the Senate. It is not a binding number.

The truth is, what we need to do is what the House did, I believe. I ask Senator BARRASSO, isn't it true that the Republican House, with a new leadership, came in, they faced up to the 10-year budget window we have, they laid out a plan for 10 years, and it cut spending by $6 trillion? It actually simplified our Tax Code substantially and reduced certain taxes, focusing on tax reductions that create growth so we could have more income generated. And, whether you agree with it or not, by April 15 they did all this, which is what this code says. Doesn't the Senator think they have done their duty? What would he say about the failure of the Senate to even attempt to present a budget?

Mr. BARRASSO. The House has approved a budget. They presented a budget, debated a budget, discussed a budget, and passed a budget. There has been nothing in the Senate for over 800 days.

On the weekends, people at home tell me: We have to stop spending money we do not have. We expect better. We expect better of those who are elected to go to Washington and represent us. We expect better.

They also believe that the money they are sending to Washington—it is their money, not Washington's money—the money they are sending to Washington, people do not believe they are getting value for their dollar. If you asked "Of every dollar you are sending in, how much value are you getting back," it is an alltime low—50 cents on the dollar. People don't think they are getting value.

People want an efficient government. That is not what they are finding today. They are finding amazing amounts of waste, fraud, and abuse. Fundamentally, they are not finding a budget, a roadmap, a plan, and then life within that. That is why I come to the Senate floor with my colleague from Alabama today to say the law is specific—not just in the State of Wyoming but also in the United States—that we need to have a budget.

Mr. SESSIONS. The law is specific, and the need is there whether we had a law or not. The law doesn't require families to have budgets, but families who are smartly managing their money have budgets. Businesses have budgets. No law requires them to have budgets, but it is because it is the only way to manage your money. It is an unacceptable situation in which we find ourselves.

Let me ask the Senator, I want to try to boil it down to the nub, why we have not done it, why the majority in the Senate has not proceeded with a budget.

Let me just say that a budget is considered so important that, unlike other legislation, it can be passed with a simple majority. It cannot be filibustered. It has priority process to be moved rapidly on the floor. It cannot be blocked. The goal is that you could pass a budget. Even a party, if they wanted to do it on a straight party-line basis, with over 50 votes could pass a budget.

I am trying to focus on whether there is something broken about the Senate. Is there something broken that causes us not to be effective? Is there something broken in the way we operate that would have kept the Budget Committee from bringing a budget forward and voting on it in committee and passing it out of committee? They did that last year. Is there any reason the Senator can think of, of a substantive nature, that would have blocked that?

Mr. BARRASSO. I would say the only reason I know is someone intentionally does not want to bring a budget to the floor of the Senate. If a budget were on the floor of the Senate, then we could look through it, read it, people at home could look through it, have some input, call, write, talk to us at townhall meetings, and say we ought to try to amend this proposal to spend less money over here, more money over there, and try to decide the best way to work together as a nation to improve opportunities for people in this country.

That is what a family budget does. They don't have to by law, but smart families do that. They make plans, they think ahead, and not just 3 months or 6 months, families look ahead and put money aside for college opportunities. They think about whether they will need a new car, a roof sometime down the line—what will they need? That is what a budget is all about.

I see no reason fundamentally why there is no budget proposed by the majority party here on the floor for all of the country to take a look at, all of the country to say: Yes, change this, more here, less there, prioritize, and let the country work.

Mr. SESSIONS. If the Senator will yield, unless you are unwilling to tell the American people where you stand, unwilling to put real numbers on paper—you prefer to say: American people, don't worry about it; we are meeting in secret over here. Don't worry about it; we have the Vice President, and he called some Senators together, and he is going to fix it. You guys who serve on committees and the Finance Committee where taxes have to be voted on, should be voted on are no longer relevant. The system is broken.

They are saying: We are not going to go along with this, and it is not because it will not work, it is because the budget presented by the President, the only budget we have seen here increased taxes substantially, it increased spending even more than that, and it increased the debt more than if we had done nothing over the 10 years.

I see our colleague, Senator TOOMEY, a new Senator but not new to the budget process because he was a member of the Budget Committee in the House.

What I am frustrated about, and I believe people should be frustrated about, is this policy decision by the leadership in the Senate that it was foolish to produce a budget. That is not a sign that the Senate is broken; it is a sign that the leadership is broken. It is a sign the leadership does not have the courage to actually stand before the American people and produce a plan, because it either would raise taxes too much, not cut spending enough, or raise the debt too much. I think that is irresponsible, but I have to say, Senator TOOMEY, a new member of our Senate, has produced a budget. He laid it out right at our committee, and he was prepared, as a member of our committee, to produce his budget and advocate for it. You know what happened? We did not meet. I cannot call the committee into session. I am the ranking Republican. Senator TOOMEY cannot call the committee into session and have a vote. They decided not to meet, not to do their duty. They are going to meet in secret somewhere and have their little discussions about what they want to do, and the people who are elected to be accountable to the American people for what we do with their money are standing around wondering what is happening. Forgive me if I am not happy. I do not think it is right. I think it is weakening the Senate. I believe our constitutional responsibility is not being fulfilled if we end up with some big deal bill on August 1, and we are told it has to be passed by August 2, and you can find out what is in it after we pass it. I am not there. Count me out.

We had more people wanting to get on the Budget Committee this year. They were so excited. It was the most wanted committee to be on in the entire Senate, and we have not done anything. The Senator was selected to be on the committee, which is a tribute to his experience, and I guess I would ask, how does the Senator feel about where we are?

Mr. TOOMEY. I thank the Senator for raising this issue because I do think this is a very important issue. Many of us wanted to be on the Budget Committee because we see what a critical moment our country is in. We see the very dire straits we have put ourselves in because of the fiscal irresponsibility of Washington, and some of us believe we do not have a lot of time to get this in order. So I was looking forward to the opportunity to serve on the committee that would design the blueprint for our entire fiscal policy for this year and hopefully beyond.

I think this is a fundamental responsibility, frankly, of any responsible organization, to have a budget. I ran a small business for years, my own little business. We always had a budget. The corner pizza shop has a budget. We are the biggest enterprise in the world, the U.S. Government. We spend $3.6 trillion, and for the majority party to choose—I have to say cynically—not to even write a budget, to abdicate that fundamental responsibility to lay out for the American people how much money they want to spend, on what they want to spend it, where the money is going to come from, to abdicate that responsibility is shocking.

To make matters worse, they have a statutory obligation to do this, so it is actually also illegal, and here we are without a budget. We are about to run out of this year's funding. When we come back from the August break, we are going to be passing some huge omnibus. Who knows what is in that. We have a broken-down process. I believe it has contributed to where we are today with this debt limit.

By the way, a brief aside, if I could, about this debt limit issue. We had a discussion today in the Banking Committee—Federal Reserve Board Chairman Bernanke was there to testify—and it was a useful discussion. Unfortunately, after I left the committee, I learned later Senator SCHUMER began to discuss some of my remarks with Chairman Bernanke, and in the process he grossly mischaracterized what I said. I am quite sure Senator SCHUMER would never intentionally mischaracterize the remarks of one of his colleagues. So what I wish to do is clarify what was actually said so that in the future it won't be mischaracterized. I had observed that the Treasury will have more than enough cash coming in in the form of tax receipts to pay the interest on our debt in the event that we didn't raise the debt ceiling on August 2. I immediately went on to say, and I will now quote myself, if you will allow. I said:

Now, I don't know of anybody that suggests that we can or should go indefinitely without raising the debt ceiling, and I have argued that we would certainly be much better off reaching an agreement and raising the debt ceiling prior to August 2.

That was characterized by Senator SCHUMER as follows and I will quote him. He said:

For a smart guy—

He was referring to me, believe it or not.

I mean, to say we can pay the obligations and not pay the rest and that that is just fine. Wow, I'm sort of surprised at it.

Well, obviously I never said it was fine. What I have said is we have a dire crisis on our hands and we need to do something about it, and I don't know we are going to get another opportunity than the opportunity over this question of whether and when and by how much we will raise the debt limit, but I am not going to sit by idly, and I am not going to go along with some deal that raises the debt limit without making the real cuts in spending we need and the real process reform.

As Senator SESSIONS knows, some of us have advocated that there be a simple deal, if you will, preferably one that we would discuss in public, one we would have a debate over, one we would have a vote on. The deal is simply this: We will agree to raise the debt limit by the full amount the President has requested, provided only that the President agree to put us on a path to a balanced budget. That is it. We call it cut, cap, and balance. It has some immediate cuts. It has spending caps that put us on the path to a balanced budget, and it calls for the adoption of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

We had a Democratic President named William Clinton who, together with the Republican Congress in the 1990s, acknowledged the importance of reaching a balanced budget. None of us think we can do it overnight. None of us are calling for that. But back then in the 1990s they decided they would strive for it and, in fact, they achieved it. We reached a balanced budget and ran a modest surplus.

All I am asking today as we confront this issue and as we contemplate saddling ourselves and our kids and grandkids with a debt more than we have now, what I am suggesting is at the same time we take the measures necessary to get us out of this mess, to prevent us from going further down this unsustainable path and to get to the point where we don't continue running deficits, a path to a balanced budget. Cut spending now, statutory spending caps, and a balanced budget amendment. We now have a big majority of Republican Senators who cosponsored this bill that would raise the debt ceiling by $2.4 trillion, provided we get these changes. I am increasingly optimistic the House might very well pass a bill that would raise the debt limit contingent only on this path to a balanced budget.

While we are down here today, I think this is what we ought to be talking about. We should not go on to an appropriations bill that has no context because there has been no budget. We ought to be focused on getting this problem solved and then get back to the regular order of having a budget that defines the level of spending and where that money is going to come from and allows us to pursue the ordinary appropriation process so we can exercise our constitutional responsibility to control the purse strings of this Federal Government.

I thank Senator SESSIONS for raising this issue. This is a very important issue, and I agree with the Senator wholeheartedly that it is a travesty that we don't have a budget in this body. I certainly hope we don't go further down this path.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania. He has been such a fabulous addition to the committee, talented and experienced and worked so hard that he has actually laid out a budget himself. The President has 500 people. The Congress here has a lot of staffers. Senator TOOMEY has produced a budget. The House has produced a budget, but we have not seen one here.

I am pleased my colleague, another member of the Budget Committee, Senator RON JOHNSON, is here. He is a business person who traveled his state and talked with his constituents about his concerns about the debt this country faces.

I am pleased to hear Senator JOHNSON's thoughts at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. I thank the Senator. First of all, I thank the Senator for his leadership on this issue. I share your concern about the dysfunction of not only this body, our Budget Committee, but Washington in general. I mean, Washington is broken.

We are currently conducting business as usual here in Washington, and it is bankrupting our Nation.

Certainly having spent 34 years as a manufacturer, I recognize you have to have a good process if you are going to have a good product. And because our process here is so broken, that is one of the reasons we are bankrupting this Nation—because we don't have a good process. It is, to me, unbelievable that in the Senate we haven't passed a budget now in—what is it—805 or 806 days? Over 2 years we have not passed a budget yet in this body. As an accountant—that is my background—I had to produce a budget on time for a wide variety of sizes of businesses, and it is simply unbelievable to me when I know how hard individuals and businesses work to produce a budget. And, by the way, they generally present those budgets on time. They don't miss the budget dates. But they actually produce a budget, and there is an awful lot of work that goes into those budgets.

I come here after 34 years in business, and I come here to the Senate understanding, again, not because I want to be a Senator but because I realize we are bankrupting this Nation, that America is in peril. I get here, and I hope to get on the Budget Committee so I can actually start solving this problem. I get on the Budget Committee, and I am ready to roll up my shirt sleeves and start working on the problem. What did we hold? I think we had six hearings on the President's budget, a budget that was so unserious that it lost in this body 0 to 97. Not one Member of the President's own party thought it was serious enough or maybe it didn't spend quite enough for them. Maybe it didn't tax enough for them. But, for whatever reason, not one member of the President's own party decided to vote for that budget. I think that is a stunning repudiation.

It is very disappointing, quite honestly, because right now, as our country faces bankruptcy, we are hungry for leadership and we are not getting any. The fact is if the President were serious about addressing this issue, if he were serious about attacking this problem, he would have been coming to us months ago to negotiate in good faith to prevent the bankrupting of America, but that hasn't happened.

So what is happening now? For the last few weeks we have been holding some secret meetings, far from the view of the American public. I am not sure, is that how we are going to solve the financial future of America? I came here to work. I came here to be engaged in debate. I was hoping we would have a very open process under general order, but that is not what is happening. What I am afraid is we are going to end up with a deal that is going to be dropped in our laps with a couple of days to go, like with the health care law, like Dodd-Frank. All of a sudden we get these thousand-page bills dumped in our laps with no time to review, and then you start to see the unintended consequences. That is a real shame.

I just came from a press conference where every Member of the freshman class—we had a meeting this morning—and we were talking about, what can we do? I mean, we all came here in a very sincere desire to actually solve the problem. One of the things we talked about is how President Obama, rather than being serious about this, rather than tackling the problem, is willing to scare seniors and members of our military. We thought that was over the line. So we sent a letter to the President today asking: Please, step to the plate. Seriously address the problem. Stop scaring our seniors. Work with us. We want to help you solve the problem.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator. I thank him for his great group of freshmen Senators who have added so much common sense to our problem. We were not elected to preside over the financial decline of America. We were not elected to skirt the law. We were not elected to shut down committees, to shut down debate, to cede our constitutional responsibility to secret meetings and closed-door proceedings. We were elected to do our duty, and there is no higher duty than to protect the American people from a clear and present danger. For that reason, I will oppose cloture on today's motion to waive section 303(c) of the Budget Act. I will vote to sustain the budgetary point of order, and I will encourage my colleagues to support my amendment raising that budget point of order to a threshold of 60 votes.

This is only the beginning of our fight. There will be more votes, more objections, more points of order working with my colleagues. I will give all that I have to help put this country on a sound, honest, financial path. Washington must recognize that America's strength does not lie in the size of our government, but in the scope of our freedoms and in the hearts of our people. The debt we have today is already pulling down our economic growth. Experts tell us we have lost 1 percent of economic growth because our debt exceeds 90 percent of our total economy—90 percent of GDP. It is 95 percent of GDP right now. We will reach 100 percent of GDP by the end of this year. That alone reduces growth, according to the experts. Secretary of the Treasury Geithner said he thought that was an excellent study that found that fact.

What does 1 percent growth mean? Well, instead of the first quarter having 1.8 or 2 percent growth, we would have had 3 percent growth. If we had 3 percent growth instead of 2 percent growth, 1 million more jobs would be added per year, based on just the alteration of the difference between 2 percent growth and 3 percent growth.

We have to face these problems. I hope our colleagues are reaching a decision about how to proceed that can be successful. We have to make progress this year. We are going to have to sustain progress for a decade. If we do so, we will put this country on the right path. If we get that debt down—it is not too hard to do it—we will start seeing our growth come back, more jobs being created, more wealth being created, more taxes being paid, less help to people who are in need because they are now working when they weren't.

So I thank the Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to share these remarks.

Madam President, I yield the floor, and I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for me to offer and receive a vote on an amendment to this bill which relates to a 303(c) point of order that requires adoption of a budget resolution prior to the consideration of any appropriations bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam President, the amendment is not germane to the bill. I am trying to keep this bill bipartisan and free of extraneous matters. Therefore, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. INOUE. Madam President, I rise today in support of the motion to waive section 303 of the Budget Act and to allow the Senate to move forward with its consideration of the MilconVA appropriations bill. I would like to say for the record that I agree with the Senator from Alabama that it would be preferable for the Senate to have passed a budget resolution prior to its consideration of individual appropriations bills.

In fact, on March 10 of this year, I stated my strong desire to move all of the fiscal year 2012 bills through regular order, which of course begins with the passage of a budget resolution and adoption of our 302(a) allocation. Unfortunately, such is not the case this year. As we are all painfully aware, the current impasse over the budget is a direct result of the unwillingness of some in Congress to negotiate a comprehensive solution to our long-term deficit problem.

We are all well aware of these realities. It is my strong belief, however, that we must not allow the needs of our military or our veterans to be held hostage by the current budget stalemate. And while it is true that we do not have an overall allocation for discretionary appropriations, for the MilconVA bill we were able to agree with our House colleagues on an acceptable allocation. Therefore, there is no reason to delay consideration of this bill.

It is important that all of our colleagues understand that what we are recommending is not unprecedented. In fact, the Senate has acted on appropriations legislation absent a budget resolution four times in the past decade, including twice under Republican control. It is my strong desire, as I believe it is the desire of every member of the Appropriations Committee, that we move our bills under regular order. However, with less than 90 days left in the fiscal year and no budget resolution in sight, efforts need to be made to ensure the livelihood of our veterans and their families are not disrupted.

This is not a controversial bill. It passed out of the full committee unanimously, by a vote of 30-0. Yesterday, 89 Senators voted in favor of the motion to proceed to the bill. Finally, my colleagues should know that many of the provisions of this bill were voted on in the Armed Services Committee which was also passed unanimously, by a vote of 22-0. That is a great deal of support for moving forward with this measure. And, I am aware of no serious opposition to the substance of the bill.

For all these reasons, I urge my colleagues to join me in support of waiving the budget point of order and allowing the Senate to move forward with its consideration of the fiscal year 2012 Military Construction and Veterans Affairs appropriations bill.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam President, there is a cloture motion at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order and pursuant to rule

The assistant bill clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to waive the points of order under section 303 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for H.R. 2055, any amendments thereto and motions thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call is waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the motion to waive the points of order under section 303 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for H.R. 2055, and any amendments or motions thereto, shall be brought to a close?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 71, the nays are 26. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I am giving fair warning to everyone. We have gotten nonchalant about coming to vote. We have an extra 5 minutes. We are not going to extend that in the future. It is not fair to everyone else who gets here on time. So everyone is on notice. We are going to cut the votes off in 20 minutes. People come straggling in 8, 10 minutes late. That is not going to work anymore. It is going to affect Democrats and Republicans.

Madam President, this will be the last vote of the week. We will more than likely be in session tomorrow. There will be no votes tomorrow. If there are people who want to offer amendments, the two managers of this bill, Senator JOHNSON and Senator KIRK are here. They are here tonight. This vote coming up will be the last vote of the week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

NOT VOTING—4

Burr	Moran
Hatch	Roberts

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. INOUE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii is recognized.

Mr. INOUE. Madam President, I am pleased that we are beginning consideration of the fiscal year 2012 Military Construction and Veterans Affairs appropriations bill.

This bill passed out of the Committee on Appropriations by a unanimous vote of 30 to 0. It is the hope of the committee that such strong, bipartisan support will continue as the full Senate debates this measure and that we will be able to consider germane amendments in a reasonable period of time, pass the bill, and move on to a conference with the House.

As we continue to debate the larger fiscal challenges our Nation faces, I note that the level of funding in the Senate mark of this MILCON-VA bill is consistent with the level of funding in the House-passed measure.

I thank Chairman JOHNSON and Vice Chairman KIRK for their brilliant work in producing a bill that provides essential support to our veterans, our Active-Duty military, and their families. The resources provided in this bill will fund vital construction projects and will ensure that our wounded veterans and warriors receive the excellent care they deserve.

It is good we are moving the first of our fiscal year 2012 appropriations bills under regular order. As I have said on numerous occasions, the best way to ensure that every taxpayer dollar is spent wisely is to move our 12 bills through the committee, the full Senate, to a conference with the House, and through final passage in both Chambers.

Our ability to work together on this important bill serves as a reminder that bipartisan compromise can be achieved by the Congress, even in the most difficult of budget environments. It is my hope that the spirit of bipartisanship embodied in this bill will serve as a model for the remaining fiscal year 2012 appropriations process.

I congratulate Chairman JOHNSON and Vice Chairman KIRK for their efforts. I look forward to returning to the floor at the earliest possible date with the next appropriations measure.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. COCHRAN. Madam President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Hawaii for his kind word about the management of this bill. I join him in his congratulations to the two managers. We appreciate their hard work.

The committee had extensive hearings and review of all the appropriations bills we are going to be taking up—a public hearing process, open for comments, with opportunities for people to express their views. They have done that in a diligent, careful, and responsible manner. I think it is a credit to the Senate that we have considered this bill today. We look forward to continuing to work our way through all the appropriations bills that come under the jurisdiction of the committee. I especially thank my friend from Hawaii for his leadership.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KIRK. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KIRK. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REMEMBERING BETTY LOU REED

Mr. KIRK. Madam President, while we are waiting for authors of their amendments to come to the floor to speak on a point of personal business, I wanted to rise to eulogize one of my mentors in politics.

State Representative Betty Lou Reed died this week. She was somebody many of us in northern Illinois looked up to. Betty Lou Reed served from her home community of Deerfield, IL. She knew Senator Everett Dirksen well and helped in his campaigns for reelection. She was someone who practiced the art of politics from the fiscally conservative side but the ideological center. She was someone who was a role model for many of us at the township, the State, and especially at the Federal level.

I first met Betty Lou after she had retired from our State legislature in Springfield, IL, when she served as the district director for Congressman John Porter. I remember a long visit with her, as she was showing me the congressional district where I grew up, from a political point of view.

As we passed by the Zion nuclear reactor, she said: Whatever your feelings from college, buddy boy, here we are pro nuclear power. And she began to introduce me to the politics, especially of Lake County, IL.

Betty Lou Reed was someone who liked to drink her bourbon and branch water, as she called it, regularly in the evening, telling old war stories about how things were done in Springfield,

IL. She was always kind and considerate, and I never heard a swear word from her, ever—despite the rough language that is used both in Springfield and in Chicago.

Her husband was a staunch supporter of hers and always available for the continuous set of parades and public meetings she went to. She guided us, especially in the consideration of the first Base Realignment and Closure Committee in which Ft. Sheridan—in Illinois, next to her home district—was the poster child for disposal, given its high value and golf course next to Lake Michigan. We went through a number of proposals, such as bringing in a prison or homeless shelters, et cetera, but finally came to a mutually agreed-upon solution of a set of public buildings, parks, and additions to Lake Forest, Highwood, and Highland Park.

Probably her greatest legacy was in supporting and teaching a young Congressman from our area, Congressman John Porter, the ropes and guiding him through difficult elections and tough partisan times. I served as Congressman Porter's chief of staff while she, as she put it, garnered the real votes back home and took care of business.

Betty Lou lost her husband a while ago, and she passed away this week. Many of us in northern Illinois remember her not just as a trusted public official and congressional staff member but as someone who taught us the ropes—even those of us from Chicagoland—and how to exercise the art of politics, maybe more gently and with better language than our predecessors.

I very much will miss Betty Lou Reed. I know Congressman Porter shares this sentiment, as do many of the staff and the political families of northern Illinois, and I wanted to take this moment today in the Senate to mark her passing and say how very much we will miss her.

Madam President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANKEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUDGET NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I know we are on the MILCON appropriations bill, but I did not want to lose the opportunity to talk about a pressing issue before the country today; that is, how we will work to resolve the Nation's obligations to its creditors and what the failure of doing that means to the Nation and to each and every American. I rise to ask a simple question of my Republican colleagues: When is an entitlement not an entitlement? Apparently, given the rhetoric and actions of some of our friends on the other side of the aisle, the answer would be that an entitlement is not an entitlement when it benefits an entitled class of wealthy Americans. In the Republicans' ideological haze that is swirling around Washington these days, it is only an entitlement when it goes to the middle-class families, to students, to seniors, to the disabled, to the downtrodden, and the dispossessed.

Those entitlements, according to the Republicans, should be on the chopping block. But entitlements to the wealthy can never be on the table, despite the fact that our current Tax Code allows the wealthiest 400 taxpayers in America to pay a smaller percentage of their income in taxes than the average New Jersey family—less than the average New Jersey family.

What Republicans will ultimately do, their goal in this debt negotiation, is outlined in the House-passed budget that ends Medicare as we know it, the baseline of retirement security for our seniors, what was the retirement security of my mother in the twilight of her life as she struggled against Alzheimer's, after having worked a lifetime to help build a family and be part of contributing to a community. She would not have lived in the dignity she deserved in the twilight of her life but for Medicare as we know it—and it makes a middle-class life in America more expensive and less accessible.

It seems to me the policies of our Republican friends would make sure the rich get even more rich at the expense of the middle class. They think the rich are entitled to all the tax loopholes they get but seniors and the disabled, they do not need the health benefits they are getting. We call this leadership? Do they call it leadership, to stand on ideology and send this Nation into default?

Default basically means being a deadbeat. I think average Americans understand what being a deadbeat is all about. We teach our children to meet their responsibilities. We say do not incur a debt, but if you incur that debt, meet your responsibility—pay it. But now we have leaders in this Nation who say let's have this Nation be a deadbeat, and we would leave a senior citizen who lives—I know some of our friends here who may not have an appreciation of this—who lives month to month only on Social Security, standing hopelessly on the front porch waiting for a check that may not come. You call that leadership?

We call it leadership to risk increasing interest rates on mortgages when families are struggling to pay at the current rates on student loans, on car payments, on credit cards that middle-class families can ill-afford now? They call it leadership to risk leaving a wounded veteran without a benefit check or active military men and women, their families, without a paycheck?

They call it leadership to risk a spike in prices that increases the cost of groceries and gas and potentially costs a middle-class family in New Jersey an additional $1,500? They call it leadership to risk an end to unemployment benefits to States, leaving those already struggling in this economy at risk of losing what little they have?

They call it leadership to risk Medicaid payments to States for disabled seniors in nursing homes who have no other options but amazingly allow a millionaire who owns a stable of racehorses a depreciation allowance on the Tax Code on those racehorses? That is an entitlement we should not touch? That is leadership? Bottom line, it is estimated that about $125 billion worth of bills, on average, may have to be put off if we don't deal with meeting the Nation's obligations.

It is not leadership if the dollar plummets and America loses. It is not leadership if no one follows but the far rightwing of the Republican Party. If we are going to balance the budget by limiting entitlements and subsidies and earmarks, perhaps we should begin with those entitlements in the Tax Code that benefit those who are the wealthiest in the country. Perhaps we should look at ending entitlements for rich oil companies that receive $2 billion a year. They receive in just two tax breaks that the code gives them $21 billion over the next 10 years. Yet, oh, no, we can't touch that, but we can tell some senior that, in fact, they have to be on the chopping block; that Medicare has to end as we know it.

How about $6 billion for ethanol producers or how about the racehorse depreciation allowance or the billions year after year that defense contractors think they are entitled to? How about investing in new bridges and tunnels and a new state-of-the-art transportation system in New Jersey instead of Kandahar?

Our friends on the other side who believe we should balance the budget by spending cuts alone are more than willing to bargain away student loans, bargain away prescription drug coverage, even bargain away nursing home care for the elderly parents to protect entitlements for big oil companies, billionaire corporate executives who travel the world in private jets, and millionaires who believe they are entitled to all of the tax loopholes they are getting now after the biggest tax cut in history—entitled to tax cuts but not obligated to create American jobs, contrary to the false rhetoric we hear from the other side about a correlation between entitlements for the wealthy and job creation.

The hard rightwing of the Republican Party has come to the table willing to give up nothing—unwilling to accept an offer by the President and Democrats of trillions of dollars in spending cuts, potential savings in entitlement programs, and tax reform options, all of which they have been demanding, unless we agree to protect the entitlements that exist for the wealthy. Not even a single penny on the revenue side of the option. Don't touch those entitlements for the big five oil companies. Don't touch the entitlements for the corporate jets. Don't touch the entitlements for the racehorses. Don't touch any of those entitlements giving the tax breaks and having a code where an incredible universe of corporations in America don't even pay at the end of the day by using all of the provisions of the code, anything toward the common good.

They come to the table with nothing. They look America in the eye and tell us we cannot cut subsidies to big oil companies. We cannot put entitlements to the wealthy on the table because in their ideological haze, they conveniently, through this political sleight of hand, label any attempt to end those tax breaks, those entitlements, as a tax increase on what they like to call the job creators. Their excuse for such an irresponsible bargaining position: trickle-down economics. I have heard this so many times over the time I have been in Congress. But the problem is nothing has ever trickled down. Yet those same entitlements for the entitled, the $5 trillion entitlement the Bush tax cuts would cost going forward over the next decade that we are told at the outset would create jobs, would turn out to be the greatest failed jobs program in American history.

I look at how those tax breaks are skewed to the wealthiest. I understand the opportunity to help middle-class families, and I promote that because they are the ones who spend in this economy and create demands. But the way those tax cuts are skewed to the wealthiest, $5 trillion, I ask my friends: Where are all the jobs that were supposedly going to be created as a result of that? Where are all the jobs these Republican entitlements to the wealthy are supposed to produce? Where are they? When middle-class Americans are struggling to make ends meet, pay the bills, keep their jobs, their health care, their homes, entitlements to the entitled are the most reckless kind of spending.

This is the irresponsible Republican entitlement spending that should be on the table, the very entitlement spending that contributed to our current debt, and yet our friends on the other side continue to protect these entitlements.

They will not vote to raise the debt limit unless we cut entitlements for the working middle-class families of this country, but they protect entitlements for the wealthiest Americans. They are holding a gun to our heads at a critical time in our economic history, but we need only to look back at how often Republicans, themselves, have raised the debt limit.

As we can see from this chart, to pay for tax cuts for the wealthy, George W. Bush had seven increases of the debt ceiling, increasing it by 90 percent for the largest increase in history, a total of over $5 trillion that includes the entitlements for the wealthy that they will not put on the table in the name of shared sacrifice even if it means America defaults on its debt and becomes a deadbeat and sends a ripple-effect throughout the world and its economies that come back crashing on our shores in the United States. So it is amazing me.

Ronald Reagan raised the debt ceiling 18 times. Mr. President, 18 times in 8 years, a total percentage increase of 199 percent, amounting to $1.8 trillion, which in today's dollars would be $4 trillion. Mr. President, 18 times, Ronald Reagan, George Bush, 7 times, for $5.3 trillion.

That amount, by the way, under the Bush years, ends up being, what. What is it equal to? The Bush tax cuts, $5 trillion.

They will not raise the debt limit to protect the good faith of the American financial system, to protect middle-class families who have already lost so much under Republican economic policies that led us to the brink of economic disaster. The whole confluence of what happened in September of 2008 where we had these Bush tax cuts totally unpaid for, denying the Federal Treasury those moneys, at a time in which we had two wars raging abroad in Iraq and Afghanistan, a new entitlement program unpaid for, and a marketplace that instead of being a free market—which I support—became a free-for-all market in which investor decisions ended up becoming a collective risk to the entire country, and that is what we have been facing.

Instead of meeting this responsibility, they favor cuts in entitlements to the seniors, to the disabled, to families struggling to make ends meet, to students seeking to get the college education that could help fuel America's prosperity. That is what we saw in the House Republican budget that passed but are willing to decimate our Nation's economy to protect entitlements for the rich. They have dug in their heels and walled off irresponsible, unnecessary tax breaks for big oil companies. They have walled off entitlements to multibillion-dollar corporations and millionaires who need no entitlements because they believe—blinded by their ideological haze—the rich are entitled to their outrageous giveaways even if it means ballooning the deficit and sending the Nation into default on its debt. Entitlements for these special interests, cuts for everyone else.

Republicans prefer to talk about cutting entitlements rather than what it really means—rather than cutting Social Security, rather than cutting Medicare, rather than cutting Medicaid—because cutting entitlements seems so esoteric. It is not very personal. But we all know our families, our mothers and fathers who may be getting their health care on Medicare or one of them who may be sitting in a nursing home on Medicaid or a poor child who is getting their health care being taken care of on Medicaid, we know our friends and neighbors with disabilities, and we understand what those challenges are.

Let's be clear. The only entitled people Republicans are talking about in this debate are those who already enjoy enormous benefits under the Tax Code, both individually and corporations that feel entitled to these pretty outrageous tax breaks.

Oil companies, as I heard from the executives who appeared before the Senate Finance Committee, clearly feel entitled to $21 billion in subsidies. Millionaires and billionaires think they are entitled to the Bush tax cuts. Corporate titans think they are entitled to tax breaks for their private corporate jets, and Republicans think these are the only entitlements worth protecting.

It is time to stop trying to balance the budget on the backs of seniors and middle-class working families. It is time to stop protecting government handouts to the entitled class at the expense of the middle class and telling America in good economic times that it stimulates the economy and in bad times that it is a job creation policy.

The truth is, it is neither. It is simply an entitlement program for an entitled small class of Americans who are not struggling to make ends meet or pay the mortgage or afford health care or find another minimum wage job to put food on the table. This stark contrast of wealth in the Nation is in the numbers.

The 400 wealthiest taxpayers—those who get the most out of Republican entitlements—had an average income in 2008 of $270 million, almost $300 million. That amounts to an hourly wage of about $31,000 an hour. Their average tax rate was about 18 percent. In contrast, the median New Jersey household earned about $64,777 the entire year as opposed to just 2 hours. That equated to 2 hours for the richest 400 people, and yet they paid an average of 21.2 percent. They paid a higher percentage of less of their wages than those 400 top earners in the country.

A first lieutenant at Fort Dix, NJ, earned about $52,000. He paid an average tax rate of 18.9 percent. So I ask, looking at these numbers, what should be on the table and what should not? The fact is, we are offering solutions. We are simply asking for fairness and for our friends on the other side to bring something to the table other than a political ideology and an unrealistic ultimatum, all in order to protect an entitled class that needs no protections. I don't usually agree with the conservative columnist David Brooks, but as I have said on this floor before, I agree with him when he says, "The members of this movement talk blandly of default and are willing to stain their Nation's honor . . .

They are willing to stain their Nation's honor.

I agree when he wrote that "if the debt talks fail independent voters will see Democrats as willing to compromise but Republicans were not."

Although this is not even about that. At the end of the day, this is about the Nation. This is about our economy. This is about trying to get people back to work. This is about trying to ensure families can realize their hopes and dreams and aspirations. This is about the United States of America, a beacon of light to the rest of the world, the gold standard in terms of credit and meeting its obligations, continuing to be that gold standard and that beacon of light or becoming a deadbeat in the world.

I would go even further and say the American public will see right through these efforts to protect entitlements for a privileged class while those Americans who struggle every day to build the foundation of America, the cuts go on their backs. They come to the table with nothing other than an ideological fixation that prevents them from negotiating in good faith, prevents them from putting the interests of the country ahead of their narrow political interests.

I have read some of the comments about this issue as it relates to: Well, you know, do we end up giving President Obama the ability to get re-elected? This is not about President Obama. This is about the United States of America. This is about our country. This is about being responsible at one of its most critical times. This is about getting the country back on track. It is about giving the private sector faith and confidence that we are not going to default on our debt, that we are going to meet our obligations. It is about telling investors in the world the United States is still a good place to invest. And when those investments are made, jobs are created, people go to work, once again they have the dignity of work taking place; they are able to spend in the economy, the economy grows, that creates other jobs, other opportunities, and we move toward fulfillment once again of the great American opportunity.

That is what this debate is all about. It is a debate about each and every one of us. The sooner our friends realize it is not about a political equation, it is not about who wins and loses in a political context, it is about the Nation, the better. If we can fix our attention to the needs of the Nation, then I have to believe we can meet this challenge in a balanced way. Clearly, if Ronald Reagan raised the debt ceiling 18 times and if George Bush raised it 7 times, then this time, the first time under President Obama it needs to be raised, which is merely to pay the obligations we already have, I have to believe responsible people will come forward and say yes and do it in a way that isn't on the backs of middle-class working families.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 553

Mr. COBURN. I call up amendment No. 553.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. COBURN], for Mr. McCAIN, proposes an amendment numbered 553.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To eliminate the additional amount of $10,000,000, not included in the President's budget request for fiscal year 2012, appropriated for the Department of Defense for planning and design for the Energy Conservation Investment Program)

On Page 64, line 24, strike "$3,380,917,000" and insert "$3,370,917,000".

Mr. COBURN. I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

AMENDMENT NO. 556

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside, and I call up my amendment No. 556, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], for himself and Mr. KIRK, proposes an amendment numbered 556.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 114 between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

SEC. 301. Not later than 90 days after enactment of this Act, the Executive Director of Arlington National Cemetery shall provide a report to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives detailing the strategic plan and timetable to modernize the Cemetery's Information Technology system, including electronic burial records.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. President, this is a joint amendment. I support it. It concerns a report on the operations of Arlington National Cemetery. It is very necessary. My understanding is that this then sets up the vote that the leaders have scheduled for Monday afternoon. And that is what we are doing right now to continue the consideration of this bill.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERNET GAMBLING

Mr. REID. Mr. President, per the request of Senator KYL's office, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from myself and Senator KYL to the Attorney General be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, July 14, 2011.

Hon. ERIC HOLDER,
Department of Justice,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ATTORNEY GENERAL HOLDER: As you know, several weeks ago, the U.S. Attorney in the Southern District of New York indicted various individuals associated with online poker sites for violations of various laws. Additional indictments were unveiled in Baltimore at the end of May.

These indictments came after many years in which the entities operated Internet poker websites to Americans in an open and notorious way with apparently no repercussions from law enforcement. Leading up to the indictments, this lack of activity by law enforcement led to a significant and growing perception that operating Internet poker and other Internet gambling did not violate U.S. laws, or at least that the Department of Justice thought that the case was uncertain enough that it chose not to pursue enforcement actions. In turn, this perception allowed this activity to spread substantially, so that at least 1,700 foreign sites continue to offer Internet gambling to U.S. players. We think it is important that the Department of Justice pursue aggressively and consistently those offering illegal Internet gambling in the United States.

In addition, we have two further concerns: the spread of efforts to legalize intra-state Internet gambling and the spread of efforts to offer such intra-state Internet gambling through state-sponsored lotteries.

We believe that the Department of Justice's longstanding position has been that all forms of Internet gambling are illegal—including intra-state Internet gambling, because activity over the Internet inherently crosses state lines, implicating federal anti-gambling laws such as the Wire Act. Yet efforts are underway in about a dozen states to legalize some form of intra-state Internet gambling. In many cases, Internet gambling advocates in those states cite the silence of the Department of Justice in the face of these efforts as acquiescence. In fact, we have heard that at a major conference in May, several officials from various state lotteries boasted that they have obtained the Department of Justice's effective consent by writing letters of their plans that stated that if no objection was received they would proceed with their Internet gambling plans—and no objection has been received despite many months or years.

This is troubling. We respectfully request that you reiterate the Department's longstanding position that federal law prohibits gambling over the Internet, including intrastate gambling (e.g., lotteries). Conversely, if for some reason the Department is reconsidering its longstanding position, then we respectfully request that you consult with Congress before finalizing a new position that would open the floodgates to Internet gambling.

Finally, we would like to work with you to strengthen the penalties for those who violate the law and to see what modifications would be helpful to the Department to enhance its ability to fight Internet gambling.

Sincerely,

HARRY REID,
U.S. Senator.
JON KYL
U.S. Senator.

TRIBUTE TO GERALD M. CHASE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, it is with great pride that I pay tribute to a dedicated public servant from my home state of Michigan. Gerry Chase has devoted his professional life to helping others and improving the quality of public health in northern lower Michigan for nearly four decades, and I am pleased to recognize his life's work as he retires from public service this month. Through his many initiatives as the Public Health Officer for Northwest Michigan, Gerry has impacted many by working tirelessly to better the lives of the residents of Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet, and Otsego Counties.

Gerry accepted the position of public health officer in 1974 at the urging of his mentor Roy R. Manty. Shortly after earning his bachelor of arts and a master's in public health from the University of Michigan, Gerry embarked on what he initially thought would be a short-term assignment, but would become his life's work. Thirty-seven years later, Gerry can look back with pride on a fulfilling and impressive record of accomplishment.

Charged with the responsibility of promoting wellness, preventing disease, and providing quality healthcare, Gerry has been at the forefront of some of the more complex and daunting public health issues, leading an agency that has grown from 17 in the mid-1970s to more than 200 employees today. Among Gerry's countless accomplishments as public health officer is an initiative to provide dental care to over 20,000 low-income residents, an effort to increase the number of poor women eligible for cost-free breast and cervical cancer screenings, and the establishment of a multicounty workplace smoking ban.

Through these accomplishments and many more like them, residents of these counties are living healthier and better. In 2007, Gerry was awarded the Roy R. Manty Distinguished Service Award, Michigan's top public health award. This honor, which bears the name of his mentor, is given to a person that embodies the "values, dedication and spirit Manty brought to public
