HONORING POWELL'S BOOKSTORE

HON. EARL BLUMENAUER

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, September 10, 2012

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Powell's Bookstore, a Portland landmark, on the occasion of its 41st anniversary.

One of the benefits of my job is an opportunity to become a part of a lot of exciting events: Groundbreakings, anniversaries, ribbon-cuttings, commencement speeches. On August 25th, in Portland, I shared a truly unique moment. It's one of the reasons why people come from all over the world to share in the Portland experience. No tour of Portland is complete without a visit to Powell's City of Books. This is not just because this bookstore is the one attraction in Portland that's open 365 days a year, and bad weather doesn't stop you. In fact bad weather makes the trip to Powell's even more fun. It's iconic but I think few people really understand why and how it got to be that way.

Portland is the livability capital of the United States. And livability is about things like bikes and beer, about restaurants that are locally owned, gluten-free organic and free-range with everything sourced from less than four blocks from the restaurant. It's a powerful concept, to be local, human-scale and high guality.

Think about Powell's. It's local in the extreme, but it's been on the web for almost 20 years now. The staff is amazing! It's full of Reed college double majors in physics and philosophy who are members of the longshoreman's union and speak Swahili and Gaelic.

It's probably the best place in Portland for a first date. You really get to know someone wandering through the stacks at Powell's with them. It's a great place to ditch a kid for a long period of time, although that sometimes makes Michael and the staff a little nervous. It is the ultimate Christmas experience as all of the last-minute shoppers flock here. It's not just what you get, it's what you do, sharing in the frenzy of the wild-eyed, strange people who are wandering the aisles at the last moment. Powell's is uniquely Portland because it is a family enterprise. On August 25th, I was joined by Alice Powell who is Michael's partner in life and a professional in terms of counseling that I think often has helped move the institution along. There may have been a few moments in the history of taking risks in this enterprise where maybe another income made a difference.

Michael Powell is a shy semi-curmudgeon, so it's hard to tell about all the contributions that Michael has made to the community. It's not just about his business. He's one of the people who understand that what's good for the community is good for his business, and what's good for his business is good for his community. For the better part of these 40 years, I've had a chance to work with him on a wide variety of projects, from parks and planning, to transportation and downtown development. Michael has helped lead the charge for business people to tax themselves to improve the quality of the downtown experience. For 20 years he's been not just active, but a leader, in bringing the streetcar to Portland and then expanding it. Because of Michael's efforts, the streetcar is one of those experiences that make Portland unique.

Now with their daughter Emily, it's been three generations of Powell's involved with this institution going head-to-head against the big chain establishments. With all the changes in publishing, all the changes in the economy, they've been a constant. Powell's has been a leader in ways that have made a big difference to us all.

I was asked to share a memory of Powell's, which was kind of hard because I've got so many of them over the years.

There is one experience that stands out. I love books. I'm a library junkie. I have my own study carrel in the Library of Congress, perhaps the most magnificent building in Washington, DC. I was having a tour for some Oregonians that were in town, going through the Library of Congress. We went up the staircase to look over that magnificent reading room, just a spectacular sight. It is hard to believe that it was built by the Corps of Engineers over 100 years ago.

While we're standing there, looking down at the reading room, there were people from another tour crowding behind the Plexiglas, quietly oohing and ahhing. I turn to my right and there's someone wearing a Powell's City of Books t-shirt. I interrupt to say, "That's cool, I'm from Portland, I represent the Powell's." Before you know it, the whole tour is disrupted because people are noticing the Powell's shirt and they're talking about how much they love Powell's. I thought it was a perfect expression of what Powell's means to Portland and to people around the country. Congratulations on 41 years. Thank you for enriching our city and our experience. We look forward to many more years of your success.

RECOGNIZING THE POTENTIAL OF COMMUNITY LENDING

HON. ROBERT E. ANDREWS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Monday, September 10, 2012

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize some recent innovations in private lending to graduate and undergraduate students in U.S. colleges and universities. I also want to encourage our nation's wealthy individuals to think about participating in these programs as one way to give back to our communities. Since its inception in 2011, the Social Financial company, or SoFi, has offered compelling community-based lending and consolidation programs, and this academic year will assist students from 45 colleges and universities across the country.

At its core, SoFi demonstrates the powerful idea of community lending. It brings alumni, students, and schools together to ensure students' debt burdens are manageable. For the upcoming 2012-13 academic year, SoFi used its equity base and additional capital from alumni to secure $80 million to finance, fund, and support new student loans. This innovative student loan solution benefits students. alumni, higher education institutions, and our nation. The funds from school-specific lending pools allow students to enjoy comparatively low-interest loan rates and opportunities to refinance previous loans. In addition, the alumni that contribute to the pool earn a significant and low-risk return, while schools gain access to low-cost funding. Mr. Speaker, although I do not expect private lending schemes to supplant available federal loan structures, I believe Social Financial's commitment to the betterment and transformation of the financial services landscape for students sets an example for how to innovate in this field. I commend SoFi for its hard work, community partnerships and innovation. and congratulate SoFi on its continuous expansion to schools across the U.S. In order to tackle student debt, we will need to be creative, in exactly the ways SoFi has been. I encourage those who have the means and desire to give back to follow Social Financial's example and invest in the education of the next generation.

TRIBUTE TO TIM CONLEY AND THE PEOPLE OF MORGAN COUNTY

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 10, 2012

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Morgan County Judge Executive Tim Conley and the first responders of West Liberty, Kentucky in honor of their steadfast resolve and perseverance to rebuild and recover the town of West Liberty in the midst of disaster.

On Friday March 2, 2012, thousands of lives changed across southern and eastern Kentucky, when multiple deadly tornadoes ravaged our region, including an EF-3 tornado that destroyed downtown West Liberty with winds reaching 165 mph. Homes were leveled, businesses and community centers annihilated, families were displaced all over the countryside, and loved ones were lost. County Judge Tim Conley, West Liberty Mayor Jim Rupe, and first responders took charge immediately, serving as heroes both during and after the storm. Along with many others, Judge Conley risked his own life to rush a family into shelter at City Hall, barely hanging on as the violent eye of the storm nearly swept them away. Within days of the disaster. Conley made tough decisions to get the county back into operation after the tornado shut down every bank, grocery store, gas station, and government building in town. Through his dedication and hard work, Conley kept up morale, supplied vital information to residents, and rallied the community as they began to envision a new future for West Liberty.

Thousands of volunteers and tireless emergency crews helped Kentucky families get back on their feet after the deadly tornado outbreak. Our brave first responders searched every home for survivors, staying awake until everyone was accounted for and had received medical attention. The volunteer efforts ranged from people of all ages, including Boy Scouts and Disabled American Veterans, who fed and clothed dozens of families in addition to cleaning and rebuilding homes and businesses. Volunteer efforts were so abundant that FEMA did not have to set up any temporary shelters, due to the numerous families in West Liberty that selflessly took in their neighbors and family members.

As West Liberty continues to rebuild and look forward, we must remember and honor the hundreds of first responders, local officials such as Tim Conley, and volunteers who worked hard to lend a hand in the darkest hour. It was through their selfless service, resilience, and valiant leadership that helped put Morgan County on the path to recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Tim Conley, our first responders, and the numerous volunteers throughout Kentucky for their heroic acts of bravery, compassion for those in need, and determination to recover and succeed.
