TRIBUTE TO WILMA JINKS

●Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, it is with the greatest pleasure that I rise today to honor Wilma Jinks, of Piggott, AR, who is celebrating her 100th birthday.

Wilma grew up on a farm north of Piggott, AR. Her rural location required her to walk 2 miles for school daily, an incomprehensible feat in the modern age of transportation, but to Wilma, it was something you just had to do. As you will see, this approach to life would serve Wilma well in later years. Following her graduation from Piggott High School in 1930, Wilma went on to serve as deputy county clerk. In this capacity, Wilma and her colleague, Ruth Ballard, would make town history when they issued 101 marriage licenses in one day, leaving some to joke that Piggott should change its name to "Marrying Town". It was not long after that Wilma would join those 101 newlyweds. In 1935, she would meet her future husband, Harold, while working as a secretary in his brother's office. They would remain devoted to each other until his death in 1995.

In 1962, President Kennedy appointed Harold as director of the Postmasters and Rural Appointments Division of the United States Post Office, and in April of the same year, Harold and Wilma moved to Washington, D.C. While in the District, the Jinks enjoyed the same social circles as the Nation's leaders, and routinely attended the same events as President Kennedy and President Johnson. Yet, Wilma and Harold still missed Arkansas. After four years of rubbing elbows on the national stage, they moved back to Piggott in April of 1966 and partnered with former Arkansas Governor Orvil Faubus in purchasing Piggott's newspaper, The Piggott Banner in 1967.

Even after Harold's retirement, there was no slowing down "Team Jinks". Wilma and Harold's can do attitude was infectious throughout the State, earning the friendship of every major officeholder in Arkansas, as well as two of our Nation's great leaders, President Carter and President Clinton. Senator Dale Bumpers said of Harold "if the term yellow-dog' were in the dictionary, Harold Jinks would be listed as the definition." Harold went on to form several grassroots organizations in Arkansas and served as chairman of the Arkansas Joint Legislative Committee of the National Retired Teachers Association and AARP. Wilma was proudly by his side for every step.

Mr. President, Wilma Jinks truly is one of Arkansas's gems and we are blessed to have her. I ask my colleagues to join me today in congratulating Wilma Jinks as she and her family celebrates her 100th birthday.●

RECOGNIZING THE BANKERY

●Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, our Nation's entrepreneurs understand the rigors and fears of starting a new business from scratch. The creativity, adaptability, and courage it takes to open a business are immense. However, because of that risk and uncertainty, the rewards seem all the greater. The drive and determination required of a new business can be seen prevalently in the entrepreneurs of my home State of Maine. Many of today's businesses create a meeting ground where classic and traditional meets the new and innovative; refurbishing nostalgia and re-vamping tradition. I rise to recognize a business steeped in history which embraces the challenges of today with youthful vigor.

The Bankery located in downtown Skowhegan, ME seamlessly blends antique charm and history with an innovative repurposing of space. Opened in 2008 by owners Michael Hunt, graduate from the University of Maine, and Matthew DuBois, alumnus of the Connecticut Culinary Institute, The Bankery is more than a classic bakery. The sweets and confections of this bakery are kept under lock and key, literally. The Bankery is housed in a renovated bank that was built in 1864. The owners preserved the history of the architecture by carefully restoring the original vaults and displaying many nostalgic mementos from the building's original purpose.

After expanding from a simple menu of classic baked goods to include meal items such as soups, sandwiches, and meat pies, The Bankery continues on an upward and outward trajectory. In 2010, Michael and Matthew acquired their next door neighbor, Skowhegan Fleuriste, a florist and formal wear shop. Now they offer a one-stop-shop for many events. It is their ambition and continued desire to pursue the next challenge and grow in new ways that gives them a competitive edge and is so characteristic of Maine's small business owners.

With an eye to the future and a nod to the past, The Bankery has met the challenges of growing a new business with excellence. I know that, through their hard work and delicious products, this Skowhegan staple will continue to flourish. I offer Matthew and Michael and everyone at The Bankery congratulations on their success and best wishes for a sweet future.●
