

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. President, we currently have the highest Federal corporate tax rate in the developed world. Businesses are moving from here overseas to seek a friendlier tax environment.

If we are going to compete globally—and we are in a global economy—we have to have a conducive tax and regulatory environment to do so. We don't have a conducive tax environment now. We cannot compete globally with the second highest or the highest corporate tax rate in the developed world.

We also have a tax code that is far too complicated. Taxpayers and companies alike spend about 9 billion hours a year—9 billion hours a year—combined with IRS requirements, and this costs the U.S. economy more than $400 billion a year. This is just compliance costs.

The Tax Code is also full of costly loopholes which allow businesses and millions of individuals to get away with paying no income tax or no corporate tax.

After over 30 years, I am pleased to see Congress finally getting down to the work of doing a tax overhaul. A few weeks ago, we passed a budget that allows some cuts—about $1.5 trillion. I believe that when we do cut certain taxes, it does generate a greater economic activity, which does in turn mean additional revenue to government. However, there are limits to that model. We cannot simply assume we can cut all taxes and realize additional revenue. It is important that tax reform comes as well.

We have been hearing a lot about cuts, cuts, cuts. If we are going to do cuts, cuts, cuts, we have to do a wholesale reform. With the national debt exceeding $20 trillion, we have to take this seriously. Rate reductions have to be accompanied by repeal or reform. We cannot simply rely on rosy economic assumptions, rosy growth rates to fill in the gap. We have to make tough decisions. We cannot have cuts today that assume we will grow a backbone in the out-years in terms of the real reforms we are going to need. We have seen this before. We make the cuts now; we rely on rosy economic assumptions; and then, in the out-years, if those don't come about, we forget what we were supposed to do in terms of reform. We can't do that today, not with a debt of $20 trillion, not with a deficit of over $600 billion a year adding to that total debt.

I welcome this opportunity to do tax reform. It is needed. As I mentioned, we have to have a conducive tax and regulatory environment in order to compete, but we have to be realistic as well about what we can achieve, and we can't push off the reforms for cuts today.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SULLIVAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

SAVE ACT

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. President, today I rise with my colleague from New Mexico, Senator HEINRICH, to discuss the Securing America's Voting Equipment Act of 2017, or the SAVE Act, which we introduced earlier this week.

I know that you are well aware that the Senate Intelligence Committee has been conducting an in-depth investigation into attempts by the Russians to interfere with our elections last fall. What we have found is that the Russians' active measures preceded last fall, and they continue to this very day.

We have an election coming up in November of this year and a major election next year, and both Senator HEINRICH and I believe that it is so important that we act to assist States in protecting the integrity of their voting systems.

Our bill seeks to facilitate information sharing on the threats posed to State election systems by foreign adversaries, to provide guidance to States on how to protect their systems against nefarious activity, and, for States that choose to do so, to allow them to access some Federal grant money to implement best practices to protect their systems.

Let me be clear that I know of no evidence to date that actual vote tabulations were manipulated in any State in the elections last fall. Nevertheless, as early as the summer of 2016, the FBI discovered that foreign-based hackers had gained access to voter registration databases in two States. The Department of Homeland Security confirmed that Russia-linked actors attempted to access voter rolls and registration data in those two States.

More alarming is that further investigation revealed that many more States than just two were ultimately found to have had their voting systems probed by the Russians. The Department of Homeland Security notified election officials in a total of 21 States that their election systems had been targeted by Russian Government-linked hackers.

If voter rolls were altered or voting equipment tampered with, a compromise of these systems could open the door to voter disenfranchisement and would undermine public confidence and the integrity of our free and fair elections—a bedrock principle of our democracy.

In response to these alarming threats, the SAVE Act would assist States in hardening their systems. It does not aim to tell States how to conduct their elections. The responsibility for conducting elections would remain with each State, as has been our country's tradition since its founding. State and local election officials alone, however, cannot be expected to defend against cyber attacks from foreign adversaries. That is why our bill seeks to bring to bear the unique authorities, capabilities, and resources that the Federal Government can offer to State and local election officials.

Let me briefly describe the Heinrich-Collins bill.

First, our bill would codify a decision made by both Secretaries of Homeland Security, Jeh Johnson and John Kelly, to designate election systems as "critical infrastructure." This designation allows DHS to prioritize providing assistance to election jurisdictions and to establish formal mechanisms to enhance information sharing and collaboration within the electoral sector. More than 30 States took advantage of DHS's offer of assistance last year.

Our bill also addresses a shortcoming that I raised during a hearing before the Senate Intelligence Committee in June regarding foreign efforts to compromise American voting systems. During this hearing, we learned that not a single secretary of state had been cleared to receive classified information before the 2016 election or in the 6 months since voting systems had been declared as critical infrastructure. This delay is truly inexplicable. We have to be able to share this critical information in order for State election officials to take the necessary steps to safeguard their systems.

Our bill addresses this limitation on information sharing by authorizing the Director of National Intelligence to provide security clearances to designated chief election officials in each State. That way, the intelligence community can share appropriate classified information with States regarding foreign threats targeting election systems.

Our bill also mandates that DHS conduct a threat assessment on physical and electronic risks to voting systems. Then, in collaboration with stakeholders, the Department will develop best practices to address those risks.

A few simple measures can make a big difference. Best practices like relying upon paper ballots, as the State of Maine currently does, and conducting postelection audits to ensure that the tabulation by vote-counting machines matches the results of the paper ballots can bolster both resilience and public confidence in the integrity of the voting process.

Finally, our bill creates a Federal grant program available for States to upgrade and safeguard the integrity of their systems by implementing the best practices that have been identified.

Last year, the Russian Government sought to disrupt our democracy by threatening the integrity of our elections. It is incumbent upon Congress to assist the States and those charged with conducting elections at the local, State, and Federal level to protect them from foreign interference. Our bill would do just that.

I am very pleased to work with the leader on this effort, Senator HEINRICH, and I would urge all of our colleagues to join Senator HEINRICH and me in sponsoring this bill.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HEINRICH. Mr. President, I want to start by thanking my Republican colleague from Maine, Senator SUSAN COLLINS, for her work on this legislation. In addition to her excellent work on the Intelligence Committee, her experience in homeland security and critical infrastructure was absolutely critical to the drafting of this legislation.

As current members of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, we are continuing to work on the investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 Presidential election. Yesterday, our committee held an important open hearing where we had representatives from companies such as Facebook, Google, and Twitter. We know that Russian Government-linked actors purchased online advertisements last year in order to influence voters and, frankly, in order to divide Americans. Additionally, Russia used bots and trolls to spread misinformation and division organically through social media networks.

While the President has labeled reports of these ads as a "hoax," now that Facebook has actually released many of those ads and acknowledged their extensive reach last year, I hope we can all agree that this is a problem which we must solve before future election cycles.

I have called on the Federal Election Commission to consider new guidance on how online advertisement platforms can better prevent foreign nationals from illicitly spending in future U.S. elections. I certainly support legislation to require the same transparency for online political ads that we currently enjoy for television or print or radio ads. These are simple, straightforward steps we can and must take to protect the sanctity of our democracy.

We also know, based on intelligence assessments, that as part of Russia's larger hostile effort to interfere in last year's election, Russian actors targeted State election voting centers and State-level voting registration databases—the very heart of the infrastructure we all rely on for free and fair elections. In my view, these intrusions demonstrate a troubling vulnerability to potential future cyber attacks and manipulations by foreign hackers of our elections and our democratic process.

Our democracy fundamentally hinges on protecting the rights of Americans to be able to fairly choose their own leaders. That is why I am proud to be partnering with Senator COLLINS in introducing the bipartisan Securing America's Voting Equipment Act, or the SAVE Act, to provide increased security for American election systems. I am proud to join Senator COLLINS on the floor today to demonstrate our commitment to being able to move forward in a bipartisan and pragmatic way to find solutions to protect the integrity of that voting process.

Our bipartisan legislation would permanently designate State-run election systems as "critical infrastructure," and it would require the Department of Homeland Security to create a Federal grant program to help States upgrade the physical, electronic, and even the administrative components of their voting systems and develop those best practices that Senator COLLINS mentioned in her speech earlier.

The SAVE Act would also require the Director of National Intelligence to sponsor security clearances to the officials responsible for the administration and certification of Federal elections in each State—usually our secretaries of state. The Director of National Intelligence would then share all appropriate classified information with those State officials to help them protect their election systems from these kinds of security threats.

Finally, the SAVE Act would create a Federal competition that would award computer programmers who discover vulnerabilities in nonactive voting systems so that the equipment and the software vendors can work to fix those vulnerabilities.

The SAVE Act does not aim to tell States how to conduct their elections or what policies or procedures or equipment is best where they are; rather, this bill is designed to facilitate information sharing with States, to provide guidelines on how best to secure those systems, and to allow States to access funds to develop solutions and implement best practices in response to these threats.

I consulted closely with my own Secretary of State from New Mexico, Secretary of State Maggie Toulouse Oliver, in drafting this legislation to ensure that it provides the security measures State election officials need to keep our voting systems secure. I commend Secretary Toulouse Oliver for her tremendous leadership in the effort to safeguard election infrastructure at the State level.

We are at a critical juncture in the Russia investigation in which the public is beginning to see the tactical evidence of how the Kremlin sought to influence our elections and divide our populous. Until we set up stronger protections of our election systems and take the necessary steps to prevent future foreign influence campaigns, our Nation's democratic institutions will remain vulnerable. But we have the tools to fix those vulnerabilities. I look forward to working with Senator COLLINS and all of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle to ensure that we do that.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to complete my remarks prior to the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. President, I will be brief in my remarks. We are about to vote on the confirmation of Allison Eid to become a judge on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, which is housed in Denver, CO.

I have had the privilege and honor of knowing Justice Eid for over a decade. Justice Eid now serves on the Colorado Supreme Court. I have known Justice Eid since the time I was a young law student, 6 foot 4 and with black hair. That is how long I have known Justice Eid. I am very honored to have worked with her.

I know that a lot of my classmates who had her as a professor are people who shared political perspectives that were far different from Justice Eid's, but they never criticized her teaching. They always found her to be open-minded and open to debate of other's views.

Most importantly, what Justice Eid will do, once confirmed to the Tenth Circuit Court, is to make sure that she rules based on the law, not on personal opinion or preferences but how the law dictates. That is the kind of judge she will be and continues to be, from the supreme court to the circuit court. She will be somebody who is a guardian of the Constitution, as our Founders were hoping we would see on our Federal courts when they wrote the Constitution.

I have a letter that I ask unanimous consent be printed in the RECORD. It is from the National Native American Bar Association in support of Ms. Eid's nomination.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL NATIVE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION,
July 12, 2017.

Re National Native American Bar Association Support for Confirmation of Colorado Supreme Court Justice Allison Eid to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC.

Hon. MITCH MCCONNELL,
Majority Leader,
Washington, DC.

Hon. CHARLES SCHUMER,
Minority Leader,
Washington, DC.

Hon. MICHAEL BENNET,
Washington, DC.

Hon. CORY GARDNER,
Washington, DC.

Hon. STEVEN DAINES,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS: As President of the National Native American Bar Association, it is my privilege to endorse Colorado Supreme Court Justice Allison Eid to be a Judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. Since she began her tenure on the Colorado Supreme Court in 2006, and indeed throughout her legal career before her appointment to the bench, Justice Eid has demonstrated deep understanding of federal Indian law and policy matters, as well as significant respect for tribes as governments. Such qualities and experiences are rare among nominees to the federal bench and consequently, many in Indian Country strongly support Justice Eid's confirmation.

The National Native American Bar Association's mission is to advance justice for Native Americans. As our name implies, NNABA represents the interests of all populations indigenous to the lands which are now collectively the United States: American Indians, Alaska Natives, and Native Hawaiians. Our members include Native American attorneys, Indian law practitioners and professors, as well as numerous tribal court advocates and tribal court judges. As you know, all branches of the Federal government play an integral role in justice for Native Americans and their government-to-government relationship with the United States. The unique legal posture of Indian tribes to the federal government is deeply rooted in American history and has always been heavily intertwined with often-shifting federal Indian policy, but often a central role in justice for Native Americans rests with the federal courts. Yet nearly all federal courts have suffered without any Native voice on the bench and often without judges with knowledge of federal Indian law or familiarity with Indian Country. NNABA strongly encourages the confirmation of judges with experience or interest in federal Indian law and who respect the role of tribal sovereigns under the Constitution and treaties with the United States. It is NNABA's honor and privilege to commend for your consideration for the confirmation of Justice Allison Eid, who exemplifies those qualities and who is also an exceptionally well-qualified candidate in every other regard, as well as the first Colorado woman to be nominated to the Tenth Circuit.

Her academic credentials are excellent. Raised by a single mother in Spokane, Washington, Justice Eid began college at the University of Idaho and then transferred to Stanford University where she graduated with distinction and was a member of the Phi Beta Kappa honor society. After Stanford, Justice Eid served as a speechwriter to President Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Education, William Bennett. She went on to attend the University of Chicago Law School where she served as Articles Editor on the Law Review, graduated with High Honors, and was elected Order of the Coif. Justice Eid began her legal career as a law clerk for Judge Jerry Smith on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. She then served as a law clerk to Justice Clarence Thomas on the United States Supreme Court.

In private practice at Arnold and Porter following her clerkships, Justice Eid practiced both commercial and appellate litigation for a variety of clients, including significantly for the Hopi Tribe. She was a key part of litigation teams asserting the Hopi Tribe's sovereign rights in litigation against the United States Department of the Interior, for example in the so-called "Bennett Freeze" litigation, wherein the Hopi Tribe sought the right to develop its lands and resources despite a federal moratorium on such development.

Justice Eid later became a tenured professor at the University of Colorado Law School where she taught Legislation, Constitutional Law, and Torts, and served as the faculty clerkship advisor. During her time at the University of Colorado, Justice Eid continued her service in the legal community, being active in a number of bar organizations and serving as a frequent speaker and author. In 2005 she was appointed by Colorado Attorney General John Suthers to serve as the Solicitor General of Colorado. One year later, Governor Bill Owens appointed Justice Eid to the Colorado Supreme Court where she has served for 11 years, and was successfully retained by the voters of Colorado on a statewide ballot. While serving as a Justice on the Colorado Supreme Court, Justice Eid has continued to teach at the University of Colorado. She also serves as the Chair of the Supreme Court Water Court Committee which works to identify rule and statutory changes to achieve efficiencies in water court cases, while maintaining quality outcomes for all. Justice Eid was also appointed by Chief Justice John Roberts to serve on the Federal Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules—a prestigious appointment where she has served alongside federal judges, law professors, and lawyers to craft revisions to the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure—including her support for efforts to allow tribes to file amicus briefs as of right at the Supreme Court just as state governments can. Justice Eid is also active in her community and church. As the mother of two children, Justice Eid has volunteered numerous hours at her children's schools and for their extracurricular activities.

NNABA is very concerned that federal appointees, whether judicial, executive branch or independent agency representatives, be well versed in and respectful of tribal sovereignty. Justice Eid has significantly more experience with Indian law cases than any other recent Circuit Court nominee. Her Indian law cases generally reflect her respect for tribes as sovereign governments and understanding of tribes' roles in our federalism. Justice Eid has been involved in five Indian law cases, each addressing only a subset of myriad issues of importance to Indian tribes. We have examined Justice Eid's record and are heartened by the respect and fairness she has always shown tribes appearing before the Colorado Supreme Court. We have canvassed NNABA members who have appeared before or clerked for Justice Eid (yes, Justice Eid has hired a Native American law clerk!) and received unanimous positive feedback.

Justice Eid has knowledge gained from living in and working in a State which has Indian Country and strong tribal governments, and also from being the spouse of a noted American Indian Law practitioner, Mr. Troy Eid, who served as Chair of the Indian Law and Order Commission, as the United States Attorney for Colorado from 2006-2009, and who now co-chairs the national Indian law practice group at Greenberg Traurig LLP, is admitted to practice before numerous tribal courts and serves as a Tribal appointee on the Navajo Nation Commission on Judicial Conduct. Her husband is widely regarded as an expert in Indian law, and in particular on tribal law enforcement and access to justice issues. In her personal life, Justice Eid regularly interacts with tribal leaders and Native American lawyers and often brings that knowledge to bear on the bench. We believe her to be a conscientious, diligent, careful and scholarly jurist. Each NNABA member we heard from concluded that Justice Eid is a woman of integrity and extremely well-qualified for the Tenth Circuit.

NNABA has long sought the nomination of federal judges with knowledge of federal Indian law, and more generally with experience on western issues directly impacting Indian tribes such as water law and public lands. With Justice Neil Gorsuch's elevation to the U.S. Supreme Court, that knowledge base and experience is lacking in the current makeup of the Tenth Circuit, and is a vitally important perspective. In short, Justice Eid has shown herself to be interested and engaged and willing to make the federal judiciary more accessible to tribes, who regrettably often find themselves in the position of federal court litigants.

On the Colorado Supreme Court, Justice Eid has always "gotten it right" on Indian law matters, as reflected in her majority opinion in Pawnee Well Users v. Wolfe, 320 P.3d 320 (Colo. 2013) (tribal water rights), in her joining of the dissent in Southern Ute v. King Consolidated Ditch Co., 250 P.3d 1226 (Colo. 2011), and in her votes to grant certiorari in TMR v. TER, 2013 WL 3809175 (Indian Child Welfare Act case) and Begaye v. People, 2011 WL 6162622 (Batson challenge involving Native American jury pool). We also note her important concurring opinion in Cash Advance & Preferred Cash Loans v. State, 242 P.3d 1099 (Colo. 2010), principally a case about tribal enterprises' sovereign immunity from suit and service of process. This opinion illustrates Justice Eid's respect for tribal sovereignty and we think is emblematic of the practicality, fairness, the careful attention to what the law requires, and the accessibility of writing style that she would bring to the Tenth Circuit.

In sum, while we do not expect that Justice Eid will agree with tribal interests on every issue, we also believe that she is immensely well qualified and we are confident that Justice Eid is a mainstream, common-sense Westerner who will rule fairly on Indian Country matters. We endorse her confirmation to serve.

Thank you for considering our views.

And special thanks to Senators Daines and Gardner, who have consistently solicited feedback from tribes and tribal organizations regarding federal judicial nominations. NNABA appreciates your continued commitment to Indian country, to fortifying the government-to-government relationship between the United States and tribes, and to ensuring that Native American voices are heard at the highest levels of the federal government.

If you have any further questions, do not hesitate to contact our NNABA Nominations and Endorsements Committee Chair, and Immediate Past NNABA President Jennifer Weddle.

Respectfully and humbly,

DIANDRA BENALLY,
President, National Native
American Bar Association, 2017-2018.

TAX REFORM

Mr. TOOMEY. Madam President, I rise to speak about the nomination of Professor Stephanos Bibas, on whom we have just invoked cloture, but before I do that, I want to take a quick moment to observe that we had a big development today—a big development in that the House of Representatives, the majority Ways and Means Committee members, led by KEVIN BRADY and Speaker of the House PAUL RYAN, have unveiled a tax reform plan that is a very exciting step forward in our ambition to bring tax relief and is a direct pay raise to hard-working Americans whom we represent, creating an environment where we could have much stronger economic growth and much more opportunity and rising wages for the American people.

So I congratulate Chairman BRADY and all the members of the Ways and Means Committee. I know this process has a long way to go, but they are off to a great start with a very solid bill. I look forward to continuing to work with my colleagues on the Finance Committee as we finalize our version of the pro-middle-class, pro-growth tax reform, and I am excited to see that step forward.

Madam President, let me get back to the issue of the candidacy of Professor Stephanos Bibas and say how enthusiastically I support his candidacy to serve as a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

I thank the President for nominating Professor Bibas. I thank Chairman GRASSLEY for moving Professor Bibas through the nomination process of his committee, and I thank Leader MCCONNELL for bringing Professor Bibas's nomination to the floor. I also thank my colleagues who just voted to invoke cloture so that later today we can vote to confirm this terrifically well-qualified man to a really important court.

Let me touch on some of his qualities. Professor Bibas has a tremendous wealth of experience in the law as a legal scholar and a practicing attorney, so much so that the American Bar Association voted to give him a unanimous rating of "well-qualified," and let me tell you why. No. 1, he starts with outstanding academic credentials. Professor Bibas graduated summa cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Columbia University, and he did so at the age of 19. After Columbia, he studied at Oxford University in England and earned his law degree from Yale University.

He has clerked at the highest levels of our Federal court system. He clerked for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy and Judge Patrick Higginbotham on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

The fact is, Professor Bibas is an accomplished legal scholar. For 16 years, he has served as law professor at two outstanding universities—the University of Iowa College of Law and the University of Pennsylvania School of Law. Professor Bibas has been a prolific author whose academic writings are frequently cited by the U.S. Supreme Court, courts of appeals, and other law professors. He has written two books and more than 60 articles, many of which have focused on criminal law and procedures. In fact, in his writings, he has expressed views regarding criminal justice reform that I suspect many of my Democratic colleagues would share. For instance, Professor Bibas has criticized what he sees as the overuse of plea bargains in our courts as being unfair to criminal defendants who then never get their day in court.

So there is no question that Professor Bibas has very extensive academic credentials, but he is also an experienced attorney. He has served on both sides of our criminal justice system. He has been a prosecutor, and he
