

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John Rakolta, Jr., of Michigan, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the United Arab Emirates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNITED AUTO WORKERS STRIKE

Mr. BROWN. Today I hope my colleagues will join me in standing in solidarity with thousands of UAW workers in Ohio and around the country. Workers are going without their paychecks today because they are demanding General Motors respect the work they do which has made this company so successful.

All workers have the right to stand up for fair pay and benefits, for better working conditions, and for a voice in their company. Let's be clear. The autoworkers, shall we say, are the engine behind GM's success. GM wouldn't be making a dime of profit without the workers who actually make their cars and trucks. Autoworkers stood up and made sacrifices to help GM when times were tough.

The Presiding Officer was a Member of the House then, and I was a Member of the Senate. We saw what happened during the rescue of the auto industry and how much those workers gave up to save this industry. We remember the depths of the recession. We remember when President Obama took office as 800,000 were losing their jobs the first month and 700,000 the second month until, with the auto rescue, House Democrats, with President Obama, turned this economy around. We have seen, literally, economic growth each quarter over the last 10 years. This was, in large part, because so many workers, like the UAW workers, were willing to give up something at the bargaining table.

In some cases, clearly, some people in this town wanted to abandon that company. Now that times are better, all the workers are asking for is their fair share. So far, GM has not treated these workers as the critical partners they are in our auto industry.

Look at what GM has done in my State. Look at what they did in Lordstown, OH. The company shut down its most productive plant in North America, by GM's own measurements. The Lordstown plant near Youngstown, OH, as recently as 2½ years ago—back during the Obama administration—had 4,500 workers working there. Even though President Trump said: Don't sell your homes; these jobs are coming back, they have been laid off—hundreds of workers, 4,500 over the last couple years. At the same time, GM announced they were going to build the Chevy Blazer in Mexico.

GM could retool that Lordstown plant, and they could build the Blazer in Ohio. They could put some of their electric vehicles in the Lordstown plant in Ohio. We know they have plenty of money to work with. They earned higher than expected profits in the first quarter of this year. President Trump's tax cuts for the rich gave huge amounts of tax breaks to General Motors. Much of the money went to General Motors' executives. All these workers are asking for is to share in those profits, have a voice in their company.

GM made the decision to close Lordstown and other plants around the country with no input from the workers who earned those profits for that company. Now workers are standing up and fighting for increased investments in their local communities.

I spoke this week with Gary Jones, the international president of the United Auto Workers, about Lordstown and bringing these jobs back. That is what they are trying to win at the bargaining table.

We know strikes are always a last resort for workers. My wife grew up in Ashtabula, OH. Her dad carried a union card, Utility Workers of America. He did maintenance for that plant for more than 30 years. Twice when she was growing up they went on strike. She knows, as workers know, they never get back what they lose in a strike. So when they strike, it is when their backs are against the wall. The wife of one GM worker posted online this week: "I can only pray this strike is short."

These workers want to do their jobs. They want to work. They don't want to be on the picket line. They want to reach a solution that honors their work.

GM needs to agree to a contract that honors the dignity of work and recognizes autoworkers, the communities, and the families who are affected by this and who helped drive the success of the auto industry in Ohio and across the country.

HEALTHCARE

Mr. President, once again, the Trump administration is trying to take healthcare away from people.

I will never forget. I was sitting at this desk on the Senate floor the night when Senators MURKOWSKI, COLLINS, and McCAIN voted against repealing the Affordable Care Act. I watched my colleagues—all of whom have good health insurance—all of us have good health insurance because of taxpayers. I watched my colleagues, one after another after another, vote to take health insurance away from millions of people. There are 900,000 people in my State alone who have insurance now because of the Affordable Care Act.

This time, the Trump administration is trying to pull funding from health facilities that tell the truth to their patients—facilities like Planned Parenthood—that nearly 100,000 Ohioans rely on. They are blocking title X funding for any healthcare organization that actually gives patients medically relevant information and the full range of healthcare options. We know who makes these decisions. I hate to say it this way, but it is mostly White men in Washington, and they have very serious consequences for Ohio women.

This month, two Planned Parenthood clinics in Cincinnati announced they will have to close their doors. This will be devastating for so many Southwest Ohio women. It will mean they have fewer options for healthcare services they need, including preventive care like cancer screenings and STI testing and birth control. It will mean many women won't be able to see the doctors they rely on and trust.

A student in Cincinnati named Caroline—who said we can use her first name—talked to a local reporter about what this decision means for her. She said:

I have a very close relationship with my provider. There's a lot of trust there that's been built over the years.

But now, because of this President, she is not going to be able to see that doctor anymore—to what purpose other than playing politics?

I got a letter from another woman in Cincinnati, who wrote:

As someone who lost her grandmother to uterine cancer in March, I know how important it is for women to have access to the healthcare services that Planned Parenthood provides. Women have the right to make informed decisions about their own bodies and to have access to examinations that can help save their lives.

That came from a woman in Cincinnati.

We know Planned Parenthood provides these exams and tests. These clinics are often the only places that many women and some men have to turn. They either can't afford somewhere else, or they live too far away from other healthcare providers to have any other real option. Last year, the West Side clinic that is closing in Cincinnati performed more than 6,900 STI tests. The Springdale clinic that is closing performed more than 6,300 tests.

Another woman from Cincinnati wrote to say that her 30-year-old daughter has an advanced degree, but her income is "below poverty level," and she relies on Planned Parenthood for her care. Does this mean she won't get care? It probably does. It means she can't afford to go anywhere else. She will just go without care, and we know what can then happen to someone. The mother of the 30-year-old daughter said: "Now she will be hard-pressed to find a provider that will take her for checkups, to receive birth control and more."

The assault on women's healthcare isn't just coming from the Trump administration; they are encouraging rightwing State legislatures all over the country. Over the past few years, we have seen State legislatures notably—including my State, unfortunately, Ohio—making it harder and harder for clinics to operate and provide those preventive services. They cut funding, they increase redtape, they rail against bureaucrats and bureaucracy, but they make it harder with more redtape. They come up with rule after unnecessary rule to dissuade young women from coming to these clinics.

These rules aren't really about patient health; they are about closing health clinics. Again, who made these laws? It is always the same. It is men who don't listen, men who don't understand how women's bodies' work. It is men who don't understand how preventive care, like birth control, works. It is time for old White men in Washington and in courtrooms to stop trying to take away women's healthcare.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

TRIBUTE TO JAMES MIDDLETON

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, Dr. James Middleton has spent nearly every day of his adult life caring for others. As a family physician in Hart County, KY, he has dedicated himself to promoting the health and well-being of his community. When he inherited the family farm and its 150-year-old history, James also made a pledge to conserve that land for all those who might enjoy it.

Recently, my friend was recognized for the exceptional care he has provided to his community with the Kentucky Leopold Conservation Award. I would like to take a moment to congratulate him on this prestigious recognition and to thank him for his years of conservation to protect our environment and benefit Kentucky communities.

Our Commonwealth is blessed with a rich ecosystem and picturesque landscapes. James' home, including the years-old tobacco farm, is near two of our most remarkable natural treasures: the Mammoth Cave system and the Green River. In an effort to help protect these magnificent features, James chose to participate in the Tobacco Buyout, which was created by legislation I introduced to free Kentucky farmers from a Depression-era tobacco quota system. He set out on a new agricultural path and focused on crops that would protect his region and one of the most bio-diverse rivers in the world.

James designed a new style of land management specifically to benefit the natural environment of his community and our country. He began growing hay, raising pasture-fed cattle, and harvesting hardwoods. By his estimation, he has planted more than a million trees, and the majority of his farm is now forestland. As a result, his 600 acres of vegetation have formed a natural barrier to protect the Green River from runoff and other threats.

I would like to congratulate my friend for his remarkable leadership in Hart County and his important conservation work that has benefited Kentucky and our environment. He is certainly deserving of this distinguished award, and I ask my Senate colleagues to join me in honoring Dr. James Middleton for his passionate protection of our heritage.

TRIBUTE TO PATSY SMULLIN

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, today I want to recognize and honor a quintessential Oregonian and legendary figure in our State's media circles, Patsy Smullin.
