

and elsewhere will have the resources they need to secure appropriate accommodations.

I am also working to ensure that the Douglas School District is able to integrate and support Air Force members' children and provide sufficient classroom space. This NDAA would provide $15 million in impact aid for schools experiencing force structure changes like the anticipated growth at Ellsworth with the arrival of the B-21 mission.

I am grateful to Senator ROUNDS for his assistance getting this through the committee's markup and to our State's at-large Representative, Congressman JOHNSON, for his work to get it included in the House-passed bill. This expanded program should be a good first step to help ensure that Douglas School District is able to expand to meet the needs of new Ellsworth families.

The House of Representatives, to its credit, voted on its version of the National Defense Authorization Act the other day. But, unfortunately, the House legislation's total funding authorization is lower than the Senate bill's number. That is a concern, not only because we have a lot of priorities to fund but because inflation is currently cutting into the military's spending power.

Inflation affects American families and businesses, but it also has a serious effect on our Nation's security. As prices soar across the economy, the military is able to do less with the dollars that it has and that can affect troop readiness and the military's ability to keep up with needed programs and purchases, from weapons to vehicles to aircraft and ships.

It is essential that the final House and Senate bill include the Senate's top-line funding number.

In his 1793 annual message to Congress, George Washington said:

There is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld, if not absolutely lost, by the reputation of weakness. If we desire to avoid insult, we must be able to repel it; if we desire to secure peace, one of the most powerful instruments of our rising prosperity, it must be known that we are at all times ready for war.

In other words, "Peace through strength."

These words hold true in every age. The surest method of securing peace is ensuring we are prepared for war. As Russia's unprovoked attack on Ukraine reminds us, there will always be nations who threaten peace and freedom. And the surest way to prevent these powers from destroying freedom is to ensure that we present a powerful threat of our own, a credible deterrent that stops these nations and other bad actors from wanting to tangle with us. There is no more a certain way to invite war than to be unprepared to meet the bullies and the dictators of the world.

The National Defense Authorization Act is one of the most essential pieces of legislation we take up each year because it helps ensure that our Nation is equipped to defend itself and to deter aggression.

I hope that the Democratic leadership will consider deferring its tax-and-spending plans to take up this important national security legislation in the near future.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in addition to myself, both Senators GRASSLEY and CARPER be permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each before the scheduled vote.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO JEAN TOAL EISEN

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I come to the floor today as the current chair of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies because I want to pay tribute to the clerk who has worked with me for the last 6 years but who has been in public service here for the Federal Government for 27 years, including 26 years of service in the U.S. Senate, and that is Jean Toal Eisen, who is going to be retiring from the Federal Government.

And Jean is here along with two other members of the staff of the CJS Subcommittee, Blaise Sheridan and Michael Bednarczyk, as well as three members of my staff, Ariel Marshall, Janelle DiLuccia, and Chad Kreikemeier, my chief of staff.

We are here because we think it is important, and I especially think it is important to recognize the people who make this body run. And it is people like Jean, who have dedicated their whole careers to this institution, who allow us to—who mean that we can, on occasion, get things done that make a huge difference for the people of this country.

And I know I speak for all the members of the Appropriations Committee and its staff when I say that Jean will be sorely missed.

Just last week, as I looked at the breathtaking images captured from NASA's James Webb telescope, I thought about Jean. It is no exaggeration to say that those images exist, in no small part, because of her work on this subcommittee. And they serve as a fitting capstone for her distinguished career.

And, of course, then I thought about other ways that Jean's influence will endure, ensuring millions of people will get access to broadband because of her work on the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act—and there were many late nights that she and other members of my staff and Senator COLLINS' staff worked with the Commerce Department to try and ensure we could get those broadband sections done—and then also helping survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, and child abuse receive access to critical services because of Jean's successful efforts to release more resources from the Crime Victims Fund. In fact, every year that I have been chair of Commerce, Justice, and Science, because of Jean's efforts, we have maximized funding in the Office of Violence Against Women so that each year over year we have done better.

She has also been there to ensure that the next generation of STEM innovators and leaders get record investments in the National Science Foundation and NASA. And it is really appropriate that we are considering bipartisan chips innovation legislation on the floor this week, Jean's last in the Senate, because she played a central role drafting and negotiating this critical legislation that will bolster American manufacturing and protect our national security interests.

And though Jean will no longer be in the Senate, her legacy is already felt everywhere, and the American people are better for it. Jean's journey in the Senate began as a staff assistant for Senator Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, her home State Senator.

Later, she served on the staff of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation as senior adviser and deputy policy director for Chairman Dan Inouye, before serving as deputy policy director at the U.S. Department of Commerce.

And since 2010, she has served on the CJS Subcommittee, and from 2014 to 2017, she was the deputy staff director of the Senate Committee on Appropriations for Chair Barbara Mikulski, who I know if she were here would also be on the floor to sing Jean's praises.

I have had the pleasure of having Jean as my clerk since 2017, when I took over the CJS Subcommittee as Vice Chair. And I think that words really can't capture Jean's personality, but I would be doing a disservice to this body if I didn't try to give a sense of why Jean is one of the most effective staffers on Capitol Hill.

And I think the first thing to know is that Jean always gives you the truth—whether you want to hear it or not. The second thing to know about her is that she always has a sense of humor, even when the going gets tough, and all of us who have been here through tough challenges know that maintaining a sense of humor is absolutely critical.

Her colleagues will remember her as incredibly knowledgeable, kind, and pragmatic because, at heart, Jean is a problem-solver. She understands that the U.S. Government is one of the most impressive institutions the world has ever seen, and she has dedicated her career to improving it.

Jean is also the proud mom of her daughter Pat, who is a rising sophomore at Longwood University and is, among other things, a saxophonist in the school's "Stampede" Athletic Pep Band.

Now that she is no longer drafting annual appropriations bills, we hope that Jean will have more quality time to spend with Pat, with her husband Pete, and with her many family members and friends and maybe even a little more time for hockey and gardening. Although if she is going to support hockey, she really needs to support the Bruins, so we are not sure how much time we want to give her for that.

But it gives me great joy to publicly thank Jean for her extraordinary work for this committee. Congratulations, Jean. Thank you for your decades of service to our country and your commitment to the U.S. Senate. Neither your expertise nor your good humor will soon be replaced, but your work will not be forgotten anytime soon.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HAGERTY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF GREGORY BRIAN WILLIAMS

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, today I have the honor to rise in support of Greg Williams to serve as a judge on the U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware, one of the busiest and, we believe, most important district courts in our Nation.

Before delving into what makes Delaware's district court such an essential part of the American economy and what makes Greg Williams an exceptional nominee to serve, in the words of the American Bar Association, they deem him "well qualified" to be a Federal judge.

I want to share some background and the process that we use in Delaware for making recommendations to the Federal bench to the President.

A few years ago my friend—and I call him my wingman—Senator CHRIS COONS and I had the opportunity to make recommendations to the White House for two vacancies on this same court. There was, at the time, a President of a different party, and the majority here was on the other side, not on this side at that time.

Our process was simple then and was straightforward and borrowed heavily from the process that I used while serving as Governor of Delaware for 8 years. Throughout those 8 years when I was privileged to serve as Governor, we relied on a judicial nominating commission and charged them with a simple task. Basically, this was it: find the most qualified individuals, regardless of political party, make recommendations to the Governor for appointments to Delaware's many important State courts, including our State supreme court and the court of chancery.

We used a similar process for Federal district court vacancies. The process served Delaware well during those 8 years, and I believe that the process Senator COONS and I have used now serves our Nation well, too, regardless of which political party controls the White House or the Senate. It has yielded yet another extraordinary nominee. That nominee is Greg Williams, a partner at Fox Rothschild. Former president of the Delaware State Bar Association and President Biden's nominee to serve as the next judge on the U.S. District Court for Delaware.

But Greg is more than a lawyer, much more. He is a father, a husband, a son, and a brother. In fact, he is the youngest brother in his family of five, with four older sisters, and I know they help to keep him on the straight and narrow much like my older sister did with me.

Greg has been married to his high school sweetheart, Terina, for 27 years. Together, they have raised two children in Delaware that any one of us would be proud to call our own.

A Villanova Law School graduate, Greg has worked at one of top law firms in the Nation, Fox Rothschild, for the past 28 years.

Through hard work and commitment to excellence, in 2003, Greg became the first African-American attorney to have been hired as an associate and then be named as a partner at Fox Rothschild. Greg learned those values—hard work and commitment to excellence—in part as a member of the U.S. Army Reserves, where he served from 1986 to 1994—part of those years when I was his commander in chief as Governor of the State of Delaware.

After law school, Greg embarked on a successful legal career that has earned him the respect and admiration of Delaware's highly regarded legal community.

Greg has particular expertise in intellectual property and business litigation, which make him particularly well-suited for the Delaware District Court.

More than his professional qualifications, though, Greg is the personification of the Golden Rule, which calls on us to treat one another the way we want to be treated. And, as a result, he is also the personification of judicial temperament in that courtroom—and any courtroom, for that matter.

Like Senator COONS and me and many of our colleagues, Greg is a person of deep faith. He understands personally the words "Golden Rule" and what they mean. And if confirmed, I believe he will use that rule to guide him on the bench.

Let me close by saying this: We have all probably heard a saying that is oftentimes used in relationship to an undersized boxer—someone who punches above their weight.

The Delaware District Court is one of the busiest courts in our country. It handles an array of cases related to intellectual property law, patent law, bankruptcy law, and other specialized business cases that are critical to the functioning of our national economy.

Like our small State, this court punches above its weight, and our nominee Greg Williams not only has the credentials and the temperament, but the strong work ethic that are necessary for this court to continue to function as one of the most important district courts in our land.

I consider it a privilege to give him my strongest possible endorsement, and I encourage my colleagues to join Senator COONS and me today in supporting his nomination on the Senate floor.

And with that, I don't see if—I don't know that our colleague—here comes Senator COONS, here to speak on behalf of this nominee as well.

I will just say this: You know, we have judicial nominees come before us, not every day but often in this body. In some cases, the folks who are from the State where that nominee hails, they know them, have at least a passing knowledge of them, and have maybe met them.

We have known Greg Williams for almost a quarter of a century. He is not just one of the finest lawyers in our State; he is one of the finest human beings in our State.

It is an honor for me to join Senator COONS in suggesting his name to the President of this country. We are grateful the President actually submitted that name now to the U.S. Senate for our consideration.

And with that, I am going to yield the floor. I see we have Senator CASSIDY here. I don't know if he has the opportunity to—no, he is going to wait for a while.

I am going to just stop right here. Senator COONS stopped just briefly. I think he is going to be right back on the floor; and, hopefully, he will be able to pick up right where I—I will do the handoff to my colleague from Delaware.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 1 minute of floor time to speak to the impending nomination.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I would like to thank my colleague and senior Senator, my friend, Mr. TOM CARPER, who allows me to be his wingman here on the floor of the Senate and in our home State of Delaware.

I just wanted to speak briefly to the outstanding qualifications of the nominee that will be before us in a moment, Greg Williams of Delaware.

As a member of the Delaware Bar, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, I have joined my senior Senator, friend, and colleague in advancing this nomination, both suggesting to the White House strongly that he would be an excellent next member of the important Federal bench in Delaware and
