

doing, and then we are going to declare it wrong and make it wrong and punish you for it.

Mr. SELF. To the gentleman's point, I want to end with China because a lot of people will say that this is all theory, you are overreacting, and that this is hyperbole. It will never happen here.

But China has something that they call the social credit score. They take your social credit score, and they measure you based on everything—what you buy, what you post on the internet, what you say to your fellow worker, what they see you do, how you drive, everything. Everything, the government takes into account for a social credit score, and then they will tell you how you can live your life based on your social credit score.

It is all on collected data. It is based on collected data.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to my fellow Americans that is what we are facing. We are facing a social credit score if all of this happens: the kill switch, CBDC, and warrantless surveillance on your electronic communications. That is what we are looking at if all of this happens and these cameras proliferate across America.

□ 2030

Mr. PERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SELF. Absolutely.

Mr. PERRY. It has already happened. It is happening. It has already happened.

We already talked about the millions of Americans who were spied on under the guise of foreign intelligence surveillance. We have already talked about that. We have already talked about the government lying to us about the effects of the pandemic and forcing us to inject things into our bodies that were experimental.

These things aren't theory. These things aren't something that might happen in the future. These are things that did happen, are happening, and are happening at a more and more alarming rate, and are ubiquitous and becoming more ubiquitous in our society.

Mr. SELF. Let me make this point: It can get worse. What you are saying is true, but it can get worse. That is what we are trying to stop. That is why we are sounding the alarm that the surveillance state must be stopped.

The red line in the sand right now is FISA reform. Any FISA reform that does not include a permanent ban on CBDC and securing our elections, I believe, does not cut the mustard.

Does the gentleman have any closing comments?

Mr. PERRY. Well, it is interesting. Every single Republican Member here already voted in favor of limiting the government's ability to install a central bank digital currency. We have had assurances from leadership, from the top to the bottom. We are told that people in the other Chamber are all for it, as well.

It is fascinating and interesting to me that, as much as that may be true, and it is proclaimed, we simply can't seem to get an up-or-down vote on it, which leads me to believe they have every intention of instituting it.

The fact that they put a go-live date in the last bill that we passed should sound the alarm bell to every single American who doesn't want their bank accounts to be monitored and controlled by the Federal Government. Do not allow this to happen.

Mr. SELF. I will say that I consider the CBDC, the central bank digital currency, the final leg in the surveillance state stool.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.
