

amazement about all of the greatness that is America, including the abundance of resources and the benefits of a high-trust society. It is sad when some of our own neighbors fail to see it, but our visitors can.

□ 2120

This summer, Washington, D.C., will host the INDYCAR series to race the Freedom 250 Grand Prix through our Nation's Capital. This high-octane expression of American patriotism joins the endless parade of cross-country events as an encore for our Independence Day celebrations.

While Americans commemorate our historic anniversary with the unapologetic and bombastic celebrations characteristic of our shared identity, there are countless ways that we can celebrate with our neighbors every single day—most importantly, celebrating America and being an American and continuing to break bread with our families and neighbors.

Our history has not been perfect, Mr. Speaker, but there is so much to be proud of as a nation and as Americans.

Our achievements are like the scope and size of the universe barely scratched by the Artemis program: They are simply too great for us to fully appreciate unless we are willing to actually study who we are, what makes us different, why America has succeeded as a beacon of hope and renewal, and why we must fight every day to make sure that the next 250 years are even more spectacular than the last.

America is almost too big and too beautiful to understand the reach of our exceptionalism, but we can do it when we put our mind to it by reminding ourselves of the glorious things that have been wrought over the last 250 years because America exists.

America has exceeded the limits of the imagination and expanded beyond the wildest dreams of our forefathers and Founders when they began to put together a country that would ultimately become the American Dream.

We are one big, beautiful Nation, united under one God, invisible, with liberty and justice for all.

In less than 2 weeks from today, the Sun will rise on the first day of America's next 250 years.

God bless America.

Yes, thank You, God, for blessing America.

Mr. Speaker, in gratitude for being able to serve in this august body of men and women dedicated to protecting and defending our Republic, I yield back the balance of my time.
