

Federal housing programs serve nearly 300,000 fewer households today than they did 20 years ago, while only approximately 25 percent of eligible households can get housing aid.

The Affordable Housing and Homeownership Protection Act would address the outside role institutional investors have in the housing market while also addressing the need for more housing units. It would raise $51 billion over a decade by taxing investors that purchase large numbers of single-family homes, with revenue split between the Housing Trust Fund, HTF, and Capital Magnet Fund, CMF, to help build and rehab 285,000 rental units for extremely low-income Americans through HTF grants and help finance 2.7 million rental and home ownership units for low-income families via CMF, which leverages other public and private investments.

In other words, our bill would help build and rehabilitate millions of homes for American families and boost households competing for single-family homes with deep-pocketed investors, all without raising the deficit. This is a commonsense, fair proposal that tackles perhaps our Nation's largest challenge.

I am encouraged that President Trump has caught on to the fact that institutional investors are, in his words, "crowding out families seeking to buy homes." He added in a recent Executive order "that large institutional investors should not buy single-family homes that could otherwise be purchased by families." This is the very issue that the Affordable Housing and Homeownership Protection Act seeks to address, so I hope that we can build bipartisan support for its passage.

I thank the bill's endorsers—the National Low Income Housing Coalition, National Housing Law Project, National Consumer Law Center on behalf of its low-income clients, Americans for Financial Reform, and Consumer Action—and urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.
